PERMISSION TO INTER THE REMAINS OF WILL ROGERS AND WILEY POST IN ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY

Mr. McADOO. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to permit the remains of Will Rogers and Wiley Post to be interred in the Arlington National Cemetery, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no objection. I should like to inquire of the Senator from California if he knows whether the proposal meets with the approval of the families of the two deceased?

Mr. McADOO. I do not know. The bill merely authorizes the Secretary of War to permit interment in Arlington National Cemetery if the families wish to take advantage thereof.

The bill (S. 3436) to authorize the interment in the Arlington National Cemetery of the remains of the late Will Rogers and Wiley Post was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War may authorize the interment in the Arlington National Cemetery of the remains of the late Will Rogers and Wiley Post.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I wish to make a few remarks at some appropriate time about the loss of these great men; but I shall reserve it for a later date, because I do not wish to interrupt the proceedings of the Senate at the moment.

The certified statements required to be filed with the Corporation under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection shall be in such form and set forth such supporting information as the board of directors shall prescribe. The assessment payments required from insured banks under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection shall be made in such manner and at such time or times as the board of directors shall prescribe, provided the time or times so prescribed shall not be later than sixty days after filing the certified statement setting forth the amount of the assessment. In the event that a separate Fund For Mutuals is established as provided in subsection (1), the board of directors from time to time may fix a lower assessment rate operative for such period as the board may determine which shall be applicable to insured mutual savings banks only, and the remainder of this paragraph shall not be applicable to such banks.

"'(2) On or before the 15th day of July of each year, each insured bank shall file with the Corporation a certified statement under oath showing for the six months ending on the preceding June 30 the amount of the assessment base and the amount of the semiannual assessment due to the Corporation, determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection. Each insured bank shall pay to the Corporation the amount of the semiannual assessment it is required to certify. On or before the 15th day of January of each year after 1936 each insured bank shall file with the Corporation a similar certified statement for the six months ending on the preceding December 31 and shall pay to the Corporation the amount of the semiannual assessment it is required to certify.

Each such bank shall, on or before the 15th day of January 1936, file with the Corporation a certified statement under oath showing the amount of the semiannual assessment due to the Corporation for the period ending June 30, 1936, which shall be an amount equal to the product of one-half the annual assessment rate multiplied by the assessment base determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, except that the assessment base shall be the average for the days of the months of October, November and December of 1935, and payment shall be made to the Corporation of the amount of the assessment so required to be certified.

"'(4) Each bank which becomes an insured bank after the effective date shall be relieved from complying with the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection until it has operated as an insured bank for a full semiannual period ending on June 30 or December 31 as the case may be. Each such bank, on or before the forty-fifth day after its first day of operation as an insured bank, shall file with the Corporation its first certified statement which shall be under oath and shall show the amount of the assessment base determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, except that the assessment base shall be the average for the first thirty-one calendar days it operates as an insured bank. Each such certified statement shall also show as the amount of the first assessment due to the Corporation the prorated portion (for the period between its first day of operation as an insured bank and the next succeeding last day of June or December, as the case may be) of an amount equal to the product of one-half the annual assessment rate multiplied by the base required to be set forth on its first certified statement. Each bank which becomes an insured bank after the effective date which has not operated as an insured bank for a full semiannual period ending on June 30 or December 31, as the case may be, shall, on or before the 15th day of the first month thereafter (except that banks becoming insured in June or December shall have thirty-one additional days) file with the Corporation its second certified statement under oath showing the amount of the assessment base and the amount of the semiannual assessment due to the Corporation. Such assessment base and amount shall be determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, except that if the bank became an insured bank in the month of December or June the assessment base shall be the average for the first thirty-one calendar days its operates as an insured bank, and except that if it became an insured bank in any other month than December or June the assessment base shall be the average for the days between its first day of operation as an insured bank and the next succeeding last day of June or December, as the case may be. Each bank required to file a certified statement under this paragraph shall pay to the Corporation the amount of the assessment the bank is required to certify.

"'(5) Each bank which shall be and continue without application or approval an insured bank in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e) or (f) of this section, shall, in lieu of all right to refund (except as authorized in paragraph (3) of subsection (i)), be credited with any balance to which such bank shall become entitled upon the termination of the said Temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund or the Fund For Mutuals. The credit shall be applied by the Corporation toward the payment of the assessment next becoming due from such bank and upon succeeding assessments until the credit is exhausted.

"'(6) Any insured bank which fails to file any certified statement required to be filed by it in connection with determining the amount of any assessment payable by the bank to the Corporation may be compelled to file such statement by mandatory injunction or other appropriate remedy in a suit brought for such purpose by the Corporation against the bank and any officer or officers thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district or territory in which such bank is located.

"'(7) The Corporation, in a suit brought at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be entitled to recover from any insured bank the amount of any unpaid assessment lawfully payable by such insured bank to the Corporation, whether or not such bank shall have filed any such certified statement and whether or not suit shall have been brought to compel the bank to file any such statement.

"'(8) Should any national member bank or any insured national nonmember bank fail to file any certified statement required to be filed by such bank under any provision of this subsection, or fail to pay any assessment required to be paid by such bank under any provision of this section, and should the bank not correct such failure within thirty days after written notice has been given by the Corporation to an officer of the bank, citing this paragraph, and stating that the bank has failed to file or pay as required by law, all the rights, privileges, and franchises of the bank granted to it under the National Bank Act or under the provisions of this Act, as amended, shall be thereby forfeited. Whether or not the penalty provided in this paragraph has been incurred shall be determined and adjudged in the manner provided in the sixth paragraph of section 2 of this Act, as amended. The remedies provided in this paragraph and in the two preceding paragraphs shall not be construed as limiting any other remedies against any insured bank, but shall be in addition thereto.

"'(9) Trust funds held by an insured bank in a fiduciary capacity whether held in its trust or deposited in any other department or in another bank shall be insured in an amount not to exceed $5,000 for each trust estate, and when deposited by the fiduciary bank in another insured bank such trust funds shall be similarly insured to the fiduciary bank according to the trust estates represented. Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, such insurance shall be separate from and additional to that covering other deposits of the owners of such trust funds or the beneficiaries of such trust estates: Provided, That where the fiduciary bank deposits any of such trust funds in other insured banks, the amount so held by other insured banks on deposit shall not for the purpose of any certified statement required under paragraph (2), (3), or (4) of this subsection be considered to be a deposit liability of the fiduciary bank, but shall be considered to be a deposit liability of the bank in which such funds are so deposited by such fiduciary bank. The board of directors shall have power by regulation to prescribe the manner of reporting and of depositing such trust funds.

"'(i) Any insured bank (except a national member bank or State member bank) may, upon not less than ninety days' written notice to the Corporation, and to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if it owns or holds as to pledgee any preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures of such bank, terminate its status as an insured bank. Whenever the board of directors shall find that an insured bank or its directors or trustees have continued unsafe or unsound practices in conducting the business of such bank, or have knowingly or negligently permitted any of its officers or agents to violate any provision of any law or regulation to which the insured bank is subject, the board of directors shall first give to the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of a national bank or a District bank, to the authority having supervision of the bank in the case of a State bank, or to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in the case of a State member bank, a statement with respect to such practices or violations for the purpose of securing the correction thereof. Unless such correction shall be made within one hundred and twenty days or such shorter period of time as the Comptroller of the Currency, the State authority, or Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, as the case may be, shall require, the board of directors, if it shall determine to proceed further, shall give to the bank not less than thirty days' written notice of intention to terminate the status of the bank as an insured bank, and shall fix a time and place for a hearing before the board of directors or before a person designated by it to conduct such hearing, at which evidence may be produced, and upon such evidence the board of directors shall make written findings which shall be conclusive. Unless the bank shall appear at the hearing by a duly authorized representative, it shall be deemed to have consented to the termination of its status as an insured bank. If the board of directors shall find that any violation specified in such notice has been established, the board of directors may order that the insured status of the bank be terminated on a date subsequent to such finding and to the expiration of the time specified in such notice of intention. The Corporation may publish notice of such termination and the bank shall give notice of such termination to each of its depositors at his last address of record on the books of the bank, in such manner and at such time as the board of directors may find to be necessary and may order for the protection of depositors. After the termination of the insured status of any bank under the provisions of this paragraph, the insured deposits of each depositor in the bank on the date of such termination, less all subsequent withdrawals from any deposits of such depositor, shall continue for a period of two years to be insured, and the bank shall continue to pay to the Corporation assessments as in the case of an insured bank during such period. No additions to any such deposits and no new deposits in such bank made after the date of such termination shall be insured by the Corporation, and the bank shall not advertise or hold itself out as having insured deposits unless in the same connection it shall also state with equal prominence that such additions to deposits and new deposits made after such date are not so insured. Such bank shall, in all other respects, be subject to the duties and obligations of an insured bank for the period of two years from the date of such termination, and in the event that such bank shall be closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors within such period of two years, the Corporation shall have the same powers and rights with respect to such bank as in case of an insured bank.

"'(2) Whenever the insured status of a State member bank shall be terminated by action of the board of directors, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall terminate its membership in the Federal Reserve System in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of this Act, and whenever the insured status of a national member bank shall be so terminated the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint a receiver for the bank, which shall be the Corporation whenever the bank shall be unable to meet the demands of its depositors. Whenever a member bank shall cease to be a member of the Federal Reserve System, its status as an insured bank shall, without notice or other action by the board of directors, terminate on the date the bank shall cease to be a member of the Federal Reserve System, with like effect as if its insured status had been terminated on said date by the board of directors after proceedings under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"'(3) If any nonmember bank which becomes an insured bank under the provisions of paragraph (1) of subsection (f) of this section shall elect, within thirty days after the effective date, not to continue as an insured bank, and shall within such period give written notice to the Corporation of its election, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the board of directors, and to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if it owns or holds as pledgee any preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures of such bank, it shall cease to be an insured bank and cease to be subject to the provisions of this section and the rights of the bank (including its right to any refund) shall be as provided by law existing prior to the effective date. The board of directors shall cause notice of termination of insurance to be given to the depositors of such bank by publication or otherwise as the board of directors may determine, and the deposits in such bank shall continue to be insured for twenty days beyond such thirty day period.

"'(4) Whenever the liabilities of an insured bank for deposits shall have been assumed by another insured bank or banks, the insured status of the bank whose liabilities are so assumed shall terminate on the date of receipt by the Corporation of satisfactory evidence of such assumption with like effect as if its insured status had been terminated on said date by the board of directors after proceedings under paragraph (1) of this subsection: Provided, That if the bank whose liabilities are so assumed gives to its depositors notice of such assumption within thirty days after such assumption takes effect, by publication or by any reasonable means, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the board of directors, the insurance of its deposits shall terminate at the end of six months from the date such assumption takes effect, and such bank shall thereupon be relieved of all future obligations to the Corporation, including the obligation to pay future assessments.

"'(j) Upon the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, the Corporation shall become a body corporate and as such shall have power—

"'First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"'Second. To have succession until dissolved by an Act of Congress.

"'Third. To make contracts.

"'Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, State or Federal. All suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity to which the Corporation shall be a party shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States: Provided, That any such suit to which the Corporation is a party in its capacity as receiver of a State bank and which involves only the rights or obligations of depositors, creditors, stockholders and such State bank under State law shall not be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States. No attachment or execution shall be issued against the Corporation or its property before final judgment in any suit, action, or proceeding in any State, county, municipal, or United States court. The board of directors shall designate an agent upon whom service of process may be made in any State, Territory, or jurisdiction in which any insured bank is located.

"'Fifth. To appoint by its board of directors such officers and employees as are not otherwise provided for in this section, to define their duties, fix their compensation, require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers or employees. Nothing in this or any other Act shall be construed to prevent the appointment and compensation as an officer or employee of the Corporation of any officer or employee of the United States in any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department thereof.

"'Sixth. To prescribe by its board of directors, bylaws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed.

"'Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers or agents, all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this section and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted.

"'Eighth. To make examinations of and to require information and reports from banks, as provided in this section.

"'Ninth. To act as receiver.

"'Tenth. To prescribe by its board of directors such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"'(k) (1) The board of directors shall administer the affairs of the Corporation fairly and impartially and without discrimination. The board of directors of the Corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government. The Corporation with the consent of any Federal Reserve bank or of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, and facilities thereof in carrying out the provisions of this section.

"'(2) The board of directors shall appoint examiners who shall have power, on behalf of the Corporation, to examine any insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank), any State nonmember bank making application to become an insured bank, and any closed insured bank, whenever in the judgment of the board of directors an examination of the bank is necessary. Such examiners shall have like power to examine, with the written consent of the Comptroller of the Currency, any national bank or District bank, and, with the written consent of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, any State member bank. Each such examiner shall have power to make a thorough examination of all the affairs of the bank and in doing so he shall have power to administer oaths and to examine and take and preserve the testimony of any of the officers and agents thereof, and shall make a full and detailed report of the condition of the bank to the Corporation. The board of directors in like manner shall appoint claim agents who shall have power to investigate and examine all claims for insured deposits and transferred deposits. Each claim agent shall have power to administer oaths and to examine under oath and take and preserve the testimony of any persons relating to such claims. The provisions of sections 184 to 186 (both inclusive) of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 94 to 96) are hereby extended to examinations and investigations authorized by this paragraph.

"'(3) Each insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank) shall make to the Corporation reports of condition in such form and at such times as the board of directors may require. The board of directors may require such reports to be published in such manner, not inconsistent with any applicable law, as it may direct. Every such bank which fails to make or publish any such report within such time, not less than five days, as the board of directors may require, shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100 for each day of such failure recoverable by the Corporation for its use.

"'(4) The Corporation shall have access to reports of examinations made by, and reports of condition made to, the Comptroller of the Currency or any Federal Reserve bank, may accept any report made by or to any commission, board, or authority having supervision of a State nonmember bank (except a District bank), and may furnish to the Comptroller of the Currency, to any Federal Reserve bank, and to any such commission, board, or authority, reports of examinations made on behalf of, and reports of condition made to, the Corporation.

"'(1) (1) The Temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund and the Fund for Mutuals heretofore created pursuant to the provisions of this section are hereby consolidated into a Permanent Insurance Fund for insuring deposits, and the assets therein shall be held by the Corporation for the uses and purposes of the Corporation: Provided, That the obligations to and rights of the Corporation, depositors, banks, and other persons arising out of any event or transaction prior to the effective date shall remain unimpaired. On and after the effective date, the Corporation shall insure the deposits of all insured banks as provided in this section: Provided, That the insurance shall apply only to deposits of insured banks which have been made available since March 10, 1933, for withdrawal in the usual course of the banking business: Provided further, That if any insured bank shall, without the consent of the Corporation, release or modify restrictions on or deferments of deposits which had not been made available for withdrawal in the usual course of the banking business on or before the effective date, such deposits shall not be insured. The maximum amount of the insured deposit of any depositor shall be $5,000. The Corporation, in the discretion of the board of directors, may open on its books solely for the benefit of mutual savings banks and depositors therein a separate Fund for Mutuals. If such Fund is opened, all assessments upon mutual savings banks shall be paid into such Fund and the Permanent Insurance Fund of the Corporation shall cease to be liable for insurance losses sustained in mutual savings banks: Provided, That the capital assets of the Corporation shall be so liable and all expenses of operation of the Corporation shall be allocated between such Funds on an equitable basis.

"'(2) For the purposes of this section, an insured bank shall be deemed to have been closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors in any case in which it has been closed for the purpose of liquidation without adequate provision being made for payment of its depositors.

"'(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever any insured national bank or insured District bank shall have been closed by action of its board of directors, or by the Comptroller of the Currency, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint the Corporation receiver for such closed bank, and no other person shall be appointed as receiver of such closed bank.

"'(4) It shall be the duty of the Corporation as such receiver to realize upon the assets of such closed bank, having due regard to the condition of credit in the locality; to enforce the individual liability of the stockholders and directors thereof; and to wind up the affairs of such closed bank in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the liquidation of closed national banks, except as herein otherwise provided. The Corporation shall retain for its own account such portion of the amounts realized from such liquidation as it shall be entitled to receive on account of its subrogation to the claims of depositors, and it shall pay to depositors and other creditors the net amounts available for distribution to them. With respect to any such closed bank, the Corporation as such receiver shall have all the rights, powers, and privileges now possessed by or hereafter granted by law to a receiver of an insolvent national bank.

"'(5) Whenever any insured State bank (except a District bank) shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the authority having supervision of such bank, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, the Corporation shall accept appointment as receiver thereof, if such appointment is tendered by the authority having supervision of such bank and is authorized or permitted by State law. With respect to any such insured State bank, the Corporation as such receiver shall possess all the rights, powers and privileges granted by State law to a receiver of a State bank.

"'(6) Whenever an insured bank shall have been closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, payment of the insured deposits in such bank shall be made by the Corporation as soon as possible, subject to the provisions of paragraph (7) of this subsection, either (A) by making available to each depositor a transferred deposit in a new bank in the same community or in another insured bank in an amount equal to the insured deposit of such depositor and subject to withdrawal on demand, or (B) in such other manner as the board of directors may prescribe: Provided, That the Corporation, in its discretion, may require proof of claims to be filed before paying the insured deposits, and that in any case where the Corporation is not satisfied as to the validity of a claim for an insured deposit, it may require the final determination of a court of competent jurisdiction before paying such claim.

"'(7) In the case of a closed national bank or District bank, the Corporation, upon the payment of any depositor as provided in paragraph (6) of this subsection, shall be subrogated to all rights of the depositor against the closed bank to the extent of such payment. In the case of any other closed insured bank, the Corporation shall not make any payment to any depositor until the right of the Corporation to be subrogated to the rights of such depositor on the same basis as provided in the case of a closed national bank under this section shall have been recognized either by express provision of State law, by allowance of claims by the authority having supervision of such bank, by assignment of claims by depositors, or by any other effective method. In the case of any closed insured bank, such subrogation shall include the right on the part of the Corporation to receive the same dividends from the proceeds of the assets of such closed bank and recoveries on account of stockholders' liability as would have been payable to the depositor on a claim for the insured deposit, but such depositor shall retain his claim for any uninsured portion of his deposit: Provided, That the rights of depositors and other creditors of any State bank shall be determined in accordance with the applicable provisions of State law.

"'(8) As soon as possible after the closing of an insured bank, the Corporation, if it finds that it is advisable and in the interest of the depositors of the closed bank or the public, shall organize a new national bank to assume the insured deposits of such closed bank and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions hereinafter provided for. The new bank shall have its place of business in the same community as the closed bank.

"'(9) The articles of association and the organization certificate of the new bank shall be executed by representatives designated by the Corporation. No capital stock need be paid in by the Corporation. The new bank shall not have a board of directors, but shall be managed by an executive officer appointed by the board of directors of the Corporation who shall be subject to its directions. In all other respects the new bank shall be organized in accordance with the then existing provisions of law relating to the organization of national banking associations. The new bank may, with the approval of the Corporation, accept new deposits which shall be subject to withdrawal on demand and which, except where the new bank is the only bank in the community, shall not exceed $5,000 from any depositor. The new bank, without application to or approval by the Corporation, shall be an insured bank and shall maintain on deposit with the Federal Reserve bank of its district reserves in the amount required by law for member banks, but it shall not be required to subscribe for stock of the Federal Reserve bank. Funds of the new bank shall be kept on hand in cash, invested in obligations of the United States, or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, or deposited with the Corporation, with a Federal Reserve bank, or to the extent of the insurance coverage thereon, with an insured bank. The new bank, unless otherwise authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency, shall transact no business except that authorized by this section and as may be incidental to its organization. Notwithstanding any other provision of law the new bank, its franchise, property, and income shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

"'(10) Upon the organization of a new bank, the Corporation shall promptly make available to it an amount equal to the estimated insured deposits of such closed bank plus the estimated amount of the expenses of operating the new bank, and shall determine as soon as possible the amount due each depositor for his insured deposit in the closed bank, and the total expenses of operation of the new bank. Upon such determination, the amounts so estimated and made available shall be adjusted to conform to the amounts so determined. Earnings of the new bank shall be paid over or credited to the Corporation in such adjustment. If any new bank, during the period it continues its status as such, sustains any losses with respect to which it is not effectively protected except by reason of being an insured bank, the Corporation shall furnish to it additional funds in the amount of such losses. The new bank shall assume as transferred deposits the payment of the insured deposits of such closed bank to each of its depositors. Of the amounts so made available, the Corporation shall transfer to the new bank, in cash, such sums as may be necessary to enable it to meet its expenses of operation and immediate cash demands on such transferred deposits, and the remainder of such amounts shall be subject to withdrawal by the new bank on demand.

"'(11) Whenever in the judgment of the board of directors it is desirable to do so, the Corporation shall cause capital stock of the new bank to be offered for sale on such terms and conditions as the board of directors shall deem advisable in an amount sufficient, in the opinion of the board of directors, to make possible the conduct of the business of the new bank on a sound basis, but in no event less than that required by section 5138 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 51), for the organization of a national bank in the place where such new bank is located. The stockholders of the closed insured bank shall be given the first opportunity to purchase any shares of common stock so offered. Upon proof that an adequate amount of capital stock in the new bank has been subscribed and paid for in cash, the Comptroller of the Currency shall require the articles of association and the organization certificate to be amended to conform to the requirements for the organization of a national bank, and thereafter, when the requirements of law with respect to the organization of a national bank have been complied with, he shall issue to the bank a certificate of authority to commence business, and thereupon the bank shall cease to have the status of a new bank, shall be managed by directors elected by its own shareholders and may exercise all the powers granted by law, and it shall be subject to all the provisions of law relating to national banks. Such bank shall thereafter be an insured national bank, without certification to or approval by the Corporation.

"'(12) If the capital stock of the new bank is not offered for sale, or if an adequate amount of capital for such new bank is not subscribed and paid for, the board of directors may offer to transfer its business to any insured bank in the same community which will take over its assets, assume its liabilities, and pay to the Corporation for such business such amount as the board of directors may deem adequate; or the board of directors in its discretion may change the location of the new bank to the office of the Corporation or to some other place or may at any time wind up its affairs as herein provided. Unless the capital stock of the new bank is sold or its assets are taken over and its liabilities are assumed by an insured bank as above provided within two years from the date of its organization, the Corporation shall wind up the affairs of such bank, after giving such notice, if any, as the Comptroller of the Currency may require, and shall certify to the Comptroller of the Currency the termination of the new bank. Thereafter the Corporation shall be liable for the obligations of such bank and shall be the owner of its assets. The provisions of sections 5220 and 5221 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 181 and 182) shall not apply to such new banks.

"'(m) (1) The Corporation as receiver of a closed national bank or District bank shall not be required to furnish bond and shall have the right to appoint an agent or agents to assist it in its duties as such receiver, and all fees, compensation, and expenses of liquidation and administration thereof shall be fixed by the Corporation, subject to the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, and may be paid by it out of funds coming into its possession as such receiver. The Comptroller of the Currency is authorized and empowered to waive and relieve the Corporation from complying with any regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency with respect to receiverships where in his discretion such action is deemed advisable to simplify administration.

"'(2) Payment of an insured deposit to any person by the Corporation shall discharge the Corporation, and payment of a transferred deposit to any person by the new bank or by an insured bank in which a transferred deposit has been made available shall discharge the Corporation and such new bank or other insured bank, to the same extent that payment to such person by the closed bank would have discharged it from liability for the insured deposit.

"'(3) Except as otherwise prescribed by the board of directors, neither the Corporation nor such new bank or other insured bank shall be required to recognize as the owner of any portion of a deposit appearing on the records of the closed bank under a name other than that of the claimant, any person whose name or interest as such owner is not disclosed on the records of such closed bank as part owner of said deposit, if such recognition would increase the aggregate amount of the insured deposits in such closed bank.

"'(4) The Corporation may withhold payment of such portion of the insured deposit of any depositor in a closed bank as may be required to provide for the payment of any liability of such depositor as a stockholder of the closed bank, or of any liability of such depositor to the closed bank or its receiver, which is not offset against a claim due from such bank, pending the determination and payment of such liability by such depositor or any other person liable therefor.

"'(5) If, after the Corporation shall have given at least three months' notice to the depositor by mailing a copy thereof to his last known address appearing on the records of the closed bank, any depositor in the closed bank shall fail to claim his insured deposit from the Corporation within eighteen months after the appointment of the receiver for the closed bank, or shall fail within such period to claim or arrange to continue the transferred deposit with the new bank or with the other insured bank which assumes liability therefor, all rights of the depositor against the Corporation with respect to the insured deposit, and against the new bank and such other insured bank with respect to the transferred deposit, shall be barred, and all rights of the depositor against the closed bank and its shareholders, or the receivership estate to which the Corporation may have become subrogated, shall thereupon revert to the depositor. The amount of any transferred deposits not claimed within such eighteen months' period, shall be refunded to the Corporation.

"'(n) (1) Money of the Corporation not otherwise employed shall be invested in obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, except that for temporary periods, in the discretion of the board of directors, funds of the Corporation may be deposited in any Federal Reserve bank or with the Treasurer of the United States. When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall be a depositary of public moneys, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the said Secretary, and may also be employed as a financial agent of the Government. It shall perform all such reasonable duties as depositary of public moneys and financial agent of the Government as may be required of it.

"'(2) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from making loans to national banks closed by action of the Comptroller of the Currency, or by vote of their directors, or to State member banks closed by action of the appropriate State authorities, or by vote of their directors, or from entering into negotiations to secure the reopening of such banks.

"'(3) Receivers or liquidators of insured banks closed on account of inability to meet the demands of their depositors shall be entitled to offer the assets of such banks for sale to the Corporation or as security for loans from the Corporation, upon receiving permission from the appropriate State authority in accordance with express provisions of State law in the case of insured State banks, or from the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of national banks or District banks. The proceeds of every such sale or loan shall be utilized for the same purposes and in the same manner as other funds realized from the liquidation of the assets of such banks. The Comptroller of the Currency may, in his discretion, pay dividends on proved claims at any time after the expiration of the period of advertisement made pursuant to section 5235 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 193), and no liability shall attach to the Comptroller of the Currency or to the receiver of any national bank by reason of any such payment for failure to pay dividends to a claimant whose claim is not proved at the time of any such payment. The Corporation, in its discretion, may make loans on the security of or may purchase and liquidate or sell any part of the assets of an insured bank which is now or may hereafter be closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, but in any case in which the Corporation is acting as receiver of a closed insured bank, no such loan or purchase shall be made without the approval of a court of competent jurisdiction.

"'(4) Until July 1, 1936, whenever in the judgment of the board of directors such action will reduce the risk or avert a threatened loss to the Corporation and will facilitate a merger or consolidation of an insured bank with another insured bank, or will facilitate the sale of the assets of an open or closed insured bank to and assumption of its liabilities by another insured bank, the Corporation may, upon such terms and conditions as it may determine, make loans secured in whole or in part by assets of an open or closed insured bank, which loans may be in subordination to the rights of depositors and other creditors, or the Corporation may purchase any such assets or may guarantee any other insured bank against loss by reason of its assuming the liabilities and purchasing the assets of an open or closed insured bank. Any insured national bank or District bank, or, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, any receiver thereof, is authorized to contract for such sales or loans and to pledge any assets of the bank to secure such loans.

"'(o) (1) The Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding its notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations, in a par amount aggregating not more than three times the amount received by the Corporation in payment of its capital stock and in payment of the assessments upon insured banks for the year 1936. The notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations issued under this subsection shall be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations, and shall bear such rate or rates of interest, and shall mature at such time or times, as may be determined by the Corporation: Provided, That the Corporation may sell on a discount basis short-term obligations payable at maturity without interest. The notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations of the Corporation may be secured by assets of the Corporation in such manner as shall be prescribed by its board of directors. Such obligations may be offered for sale at such price or prices as the Corporation may determine.

"'(2) The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any obligations of the Corporation to be issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds of the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include such purchases: Provided, That if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation fails for any reason to purchase any of the obligations of the Corporation as provided in subsection (b) of section 5e of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase such obligations in an amount equal to the amount of such obligations the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so fails to purchase: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, whenever in the judgment of the board of directors of the Corporation additional funds are required for insurance purposes, to purchase obligations of the Corporation in an additional amount of not to exceed $250,000,000 par value: Provided further, That the proceeds derived from the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury of any such obligations shall be used by the Corporation solely in carrying out its functions with respect to such insurance. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the obligations of the Corporation acquired by him under this subsection. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the obligations of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States.

"'(p) All notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by the Corporation shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

"'(q) In order that the Corporation may be supplied with such forms of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations as it may need for issuance under this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prepare such forms as shall be suitable and approved by the Corporation, to be held in the Treasury subject to delivery, upon order of the Corporation. The engraved plates, dies, bed pieces, and other material executed in connection therewith shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Corporation shall reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury for any expenses incurred in the preparation, custody, and delivery of such notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations.

"'(r) The Corporation shall annually make a report of its operations to the Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of January in each year.

"'(s) Whoever, for the purpose of obtaining any loan from the Corporation, or any extension or renewal thereof, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, or for the purpose of inducing the Corporation to purchase any assets, or for the purpose of obtaining the payment of any insured deposit or transferred deposit or the allowance, approval, or payment of any claim, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Corporation under this section, makes any statement, knowing it to be false, or willfully overvalues any security, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"'(t) Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any obligation or coupon, in imitation of or purporting to be an obligation or coupon issued by the Corporation, or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited obligation or coupon purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, or (3) falsely alters any obligation or coupon issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, or (4) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any falsely altered or spurious obligation or coupon, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"'(u) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to it or pledged, or otherwise entrusted to it, or (2) with intent to defraud the Corporation or any other body, politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiner of the Corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the Corporation, or without being duly authorized draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other such obligation, or draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"'(v) (1) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words "Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation", or a combination of any three of these four words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do business. No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall advertise or otherwise represent falsely by any device whatsoever that his or its deposit liabilities are insured or in anywise guaranteed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or by the United States or any instrumentality thereof; and no insured bank shall advertise or otherwise represent falsely by any device whatsoever the extent to which or the manner in which its deposit liabilities are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Every individual partnership, association, or corporation violating this subsection shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

"'(2) Every insured bank shall display at each place of business maintained by it a sign or signs, and shall include in advertisements relating to deposits a statement to the effect that its deposits are insured by the Corporation. The board of directors shall prescribe by regulation the forms of such signs and the manner of display and the substance of such statements and the manner of use. For each day an insured bank continues to violate any provision of this paragraph or any lawful provision of said regulations, it shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100, recoverable by the Corporation for its use.

"'(3) No insured bank shall pay any dividends on its capital stock or interest on its capital notes or debentures (if such interest is required to be paid only out of net profits) while it remains in default in the payment of any assessment due to the Corporation; and any director or officer of any insured bank who participates in the declaration or payment of any such dividend shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both: Provided, That if such default is due to a dispute between the insured bank and the Corporation over the amount of such assessment, this paragraph shall not apply, if such bank shall deposit security satisfactory to the Corporation for payment upon final determination of the issue.

"'(4) Unless, in addition to compliance with other provisions of law, it shall have the prior written consent of the Corporation, no insured bank shall enter into any consolidation or merger with any noninsured bank, or assume liability to pay any deposits made in any noninsured bank, or transfer assets to any noninsured bank in consideration of the assumption of liability for any portion of the deposits made in such insured bank, and no insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank) without such consent shall reduce the amount or retire any part of its common or preferred capital stock, or retire any part of its capital notes or debentures.

"'(5) No State nonmember insured bank (except a District bank) shall establish and operate any new branch after thirty days after the effective date unless it shall have the prior written consent of the Corporation, and no branch of any State nonmember insured bank shall be moved from one location to another after thirty days after the effective date without such consent. The factors to be considered in granting or withholding the consent of the Corporation under this paragraph shall be those enumerated in subsection (g) of this section.

"'(6) The Corporation may require any insured bank to provide protection and indemnity against burglary, defalcation, and other similar insurable losses. Whenever any insured bank refuses to comply with any such requirement the Corporation may contract for such protection and indemnity and add the cost thereof to the assessment otherwise payable by such bank.

"'(7) Whenever any insured bank (except a national bank or a District bank), after written notice of the recommendations of the Corporation based on a report of examination of such bank by an examiner of the Corporation, shall fail to comply with such recommendations within one hundred and twenty days after such notice, the Corporation shall have the power, and is hereby authorized, to publish only such part of such report of examination as relates to any recommendation not complied with: Provided, That notice of intention to make such publication shall be given to the bank at least ninety days before such publication is made.

"'(8) The board of directors shall by regulation prohibit the payment of interest on demand deposits in insured nonmember banks and for such purpose it may define the term "demand deposits"; but such exceptions from this prohibition shall be made as are now or may hereafter be prescribed with respect to deposits payable on demand in member banks by section 19 of this act, as amended, or by regulation of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. The board of directors shall from time to time limit by regulation the rates of interest or dividends which may be paid by insured nonmember banks on time and savings deposits, but such regulations shall be consistent with the contractual obligations of such banks to their depositors. For the purpose of fixing such rates of interest or dividends, the board of directors shall by regulation prescribe different rates for such payment on time and savings deposits having different maturities, or subject to different conditions respecting withdrawal or repayment, or subject to different conditions by reason of different locations, or according to the varying discount rates of member banks in the several Federal Reserve districts. The board of directors shall by regulation define what constitutes time and savings deposits in an insured nonmember bank. Such regulations shall prohibit any insured nonmember bank from paying any time deposit before its maturity except upon such conditions and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the board of directors, and from waiving any requirement of notice before payment of any savings deposit except as to all savings deposits having the same requirement. For each violation of any provision of this paragraph or any lawful provision of such regulations relating to the payment of interest or dividends on deposits or to withdrawal of deposits, the offending bank shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100, recoverable by the Corporation for its use.

"'(x) The Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department is authorized to detect, arrest, and deliver into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction any person committing any of the offenses punishable under this section.

"'(y) (1) No State bank which during the calendar year 1941 or any succeeding calendar year shall have average deposits of $1,000,000 or more shall be an insured bank or continue to have any part of its deposits insured after July 1 of the year following any such calendar year during which it shall have had such amount of average deposits, unless such bank shall be a member of the Federal Reserve System: Provided, That for the purposes of this paragraph the term "State bank" shall not include a savings bank, a mutual savings bank, a Morris Plan bank or other incorporated banking institution engaged only in a business similar to that transacted by Morris Plan banks, a State trust company doing no commercial banking business, or a bank located in Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands.

"'(2) It is not the purpose of this section to discriminate, in any manner, against State nonmember, and in favor of, national or member banks; but the purpose is to provide all banks with the same opportunity to obtain and enjoy the benefits of this section. No bank shall be discriminated against because its capital stock is less than the amount required for eligibility for admission into the Federal Reserve System.

"'(z) The provisions of this section limiting the insurance of the deposits of any depositor to a maximum less than the full amount shall be independent and separable from each and all of the provisions of this section.'

The first vice president of the bank shall be appointed in the same manner and for the same term as the president, and shall, in the absence or disability of the president or during a vacancy in the office of president, serve as chief executive officer of the bank. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the president or the first vice president, it shall be filled in the manner provided for original appointments; and the person so appointed shall hold office until the expiration of the term of his predecessor.'

"SEC. 202. Section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the tenth paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

"SEC. 203. (a) Hereafter the Federal Reserve Board shall be known as the 'Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System', and the governor and the vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board shall be known as the 'chairman' and the 'vice chairman', respectively, of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

"'The members of the Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed. Upon the expiration of the term of any appointive member of the Federal Reserve Board in office on the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1935, the President shall fix the term of the successor to such member at not to exceed fourteen years, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, but in such manner as to provide for the expiration of the term of not more than one member in any two-year period, and thereafter each member shall hold office for a term of fourteen years from the expiration of the term of his predecessor, unless sooner removed for cause by the President. Of the persons thus appointed, one shall be designated by the President as chairman and one as vice chairman of the Board, to serve as such for a term of four years. The chairman of the Board, subject to its supervision, shall be its active executive officer. Each member of the Board shall within fifteen days after notice of appointment make and subscribe to the oath of office. In any such case the converted State bank shall be obligated to transfer to surplus the amount so paid into such retirement fund for such period on account of the preferred stock as such stock is retired.'

In any such case the savings bank, savings company, banking institution, or trust company shall be obligated to transfer to surplus the amount so paid into such retirement fund for such period on account of the preferred stock or debentures as such stock or debentures are retired.

If any part of the capital of a national bank, State member bank, or bank applying for membership in the Federal Reserve System consists of preferred stock, the determination of whether or not the capital of such bank is impaired and the amount of such impairment shall be based upon the par value of its stock even though the amount which the holders of such preferred stock shall be entitled to receive in the event of retirement or liquidation shall be in excess of the par value of such preferred stock. If any such bank or trust company shall have outstanding any capital notes or debentures of the type which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to purchase pursuant to the provisions of section 304 of the Emergency Banking and Bank Conservation Act, approved March 9, 1933, as amended, the capital of such bank may be deemed to be unimpaired if the sound value of its assets is not less than its total liabilities, including capital stock, but excluding such capital notes or debentures and any obligations of the bank expressly subordinated thereto. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the holders of preferred stock issued by a national banking association pursuant to the provisions of the Emergency Banking and Bank Conservation Act, approved March 9, 1933, as amended, shall be entitled to receive such cumulative dividends at a rate not exceeding six per centum per annum on the purchase price received by the association for such stock and, in the event of the retirement of such stock, to receive such retirement price, not in excess of such purchase price plus all accumulated dividends, as may be provided in the articles of association with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency. If the association is placed in voluntary liquidation, or if a conservator or a receiver is appointed therefor, no payment shall be made to the holders of common stock until the holders of preferred stock shall have been paid in full such amount as may be provided in the articles of association with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, not in excess of such purchase price of such preferred stock plus all accumulated dividends.

"SEC. 346. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

OBSERVANCE OF OCTOBER 5 AND 6 AS LOYALTY DAYS

Mr. COPELAND (by request) submitted a resolution (S. Res. 193), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas our Nation, at its first beginnings and in our charter of independence, was established "with a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence", and has accordingly throughout all its history acknowledged its obligation to Almighty God; and

Whereas in its conception of religious freedom it has always encouraged allegiance to the sanctities of religious faith, and from time to time in pursuance of this policy has called upon the people through Congress and the press, especially in moments of emergency and distress, to invoke the help and the blessing of God; and

Whereas in certain parts of the world there is a growing tendency in social and political life to substitute a materialistic, mechanistic, and humanistic view of the universe and human life, displacing the spiritual conception to which as a nation we are committed; and

Whereas this Nation is now seeking a recovery that shall restore to the people their full right to abundant "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" and

Whereas important groups of representative men and women of the Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant faiths have recommended that Saturday, October 5, and Sunday, October 6, be designated as "loyalty days", on which the people shall unite their thought and prayer for the deepening of the moral and spiritual values and motives which are the foundation of any permanent and satisfactory recovery of our social life in all its aspects: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the President be requested to issue a message to the people, inviting them, in churches, synagogues, or homes, to give themselves to prayer on these days for the fulfillment of this ideal in our national and social life.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which the clerk will read.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the committee was unanimous in reporting the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

HONOLULU SPEECH OF POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, on August 10 last the Honorable James A. Farley, Postmaster General, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, at Honolulu, Hawaii, August 10, 1935, delivered a very able and interesting speech, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

You are a fortunate people who dwell in these beautiful islands. Fortunate in your situation, which makes you the guardians of the Pacific Ocean; fortunate in your wonderful climate and the resources that mean material wealth. You have the peculiar advantage of being far enough away from the mainland to maintain the romance of distance, but near enough so that you are in constant touch with the rest of our country.

You are on the eve of even closer contact, for already the pioneering has been done that means you are to have constant airship service, and the journey that now seems an adventurous voyage for the ordinary stay-at-home American will in the near future make the 2,200 miles that separates you from San Francisco, a mere hop between daybreak and dark. Of course, we are not yet used to the air, and most of us think with awe of so long a flight over the ocean, but the next generation will worry no more about it than we worry on the comfortable steamer trip, which with the regularity of a ferry boat brings us mainlanders to Hawaii.

I am particularly interested in the big airships that have made their test flights from the mainland here and back. It is my job, as you know, to direct the business of carrying the mail. I know that such a mail service as that which the airships will give you is going to be of tremendous value to your business men and of infinite convenience to your people generally, and I promise you that everything I can do to speed the day of a perfect mail service to these islands, that I will do.

You are not subject to the dread of some far-flung lands that because of your remoteness you may be neglected by the home Government. These islands are too important to the United States for anything like that to happen. You are our sentry in the western ocean, the outer guard of our national defense. Without you our country would require a greater Navy than the world has ever known. You are the equivalent of a thousand warships. In fact, you are the keystone of our safety in this part of the world. I might say that you are our first guarantee of peace, for any hostile attack on our Pacific coast is impossible while the American flag floats over Pearl Harbor. That is why we have in these islands one of the greatest naval bases in the world. It is unique in that while it is a potential war asset it threatens nobody; it implies no menace to any other country; but it is a very comforting thought that it is there. Incidently, the circumstance that this great naval station is located here is not without interest to your merchants and to the people generally.

Hawaii, like the rest of the United States, has had its depression. But I think the distress has been less acute in this island paradise than in those Commonwealths which have had to contend with bitter winter weather, with droughts, and with dust storms. Certainly in the administration of emergency measures Hawaii has not been treated like a stepchild. The improvements effected here in roads and harbor improvements, in schools and in sanitary equipment are of enduring value and will add much to the attractiveness of this land.

More and more people from the East are extending their touring to take in the delightful ocean trip and see the marvels of this storied land. I know how great is your sugar acreage. I know about your pineapples, and your other industries. And let me tell you that you have a crop in prospect which may exceed any of them. I am talking about the tourist crop. When our country gets back to normal—and I am sure that that time is not in the too distant future—and wandering America discovers Hawaii, you are going to reap a harvest that does not depend on the rainfall or the state of the market, and you need have no fear of competition, for no place that I know of can match your natural marvels. When people find that they can come here and live in the midst of comfort, and luxury, and have the biggest volcano in the world practically at their back door, they will come in shoals. You have been wise enough to preserve your traditions. I do not know anybody who has not felt the romance of the South Seas. And here you give it to them.

However, you know your own wonders far better than any casual visitor can know them. So, if you will permit me, I will talk a little while about the care you have had and are having from your Government. As I said before, your distress was relatively less than in other places. Nevertheless, it was keen enough for you to appreciate the difference between say the first few months of 1933 and today. Let's begin with sugar. Your world-famed business languished here because of the low price of sugar. Like all the rest of our agricultural communities, you were producing more than you could sell at a profit, so the A. A. A. made a deal with your planters to limit the acreage and, before they are through, the Government will have spent something like $30,000,000 in reestablishing the balance between supply and demand so that the industry may flourish. Raw sugar was selling at 2.77 cents in January 1933. The present price is 3.20 cents per pound, to which must be added 40 points because of the A. A. A. allowances. You know better than I what that means to the island's economic state.

Your home owners felt the pinch like everybody else. I think there are something like 500 loans, of approximately $3,000 each, that have been approved. There was no Government charity about this. The money was loaned and the security was good, and the process of repayment is going on quite satisfactorily. There is a prevalent idea, fostered, I may say, by those opposed to the administration at Washington, that the administration is shoveling out dollars through every available channel without limitation or discrimination. It will be interesting to you perhaps to learn that in these islands, up to the end of last June, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation had disbursed to banks and trust companies about $836,000. Already there has been repaid $786,000. So out of nearly a million there is less than $50,000 outstanding.

The Government has spent about $4,500,000 in Federal relief in this territory to carry the burden which had become too great for private agencies to take care of. After all, people have got to eat, and somebody has got to pay for the food. It makes little difference in the last analysis whether the Government—which means the whole people—shall pay this directly, or whether it is raised by public subscription or other nonofficial processes. The public pays for it in the end anyway.

Under the public-works program we have spent approximately $17,000,000 in this part of the world for new highways, harbor and channel improvements, and other projects of permanent value. In addition, the program called for about $2,000,000 worth of non-Federal projects—schools, sewers, bridges, waterworks, and so forth. All of these projects had to be accomplished some time, if your communities were to keep up with the procession, and what better time could there be to undertake these expenditures than the period when unemployment is rife and the Government has either to support the unemployed or give them jobs that enable them to support themselves.

You have approximately 1,500 people in the C. C. C. camps and related works. Is there anybody in these islands who does not think that this method of starting young men on the path of industry was not better than permitting them to hang around, walking the roads, and getting into all sorts of mischief?

And does anybody think that the work in Hawaiian National Park, and what is being done in the way of reforestation and similar things, is money thrown away?

Now, mind you, the administration does not look upon these things as a distribution of alms. It conceives it to be the duty of Government to ward off calamity and in such a breakdown as we experienced to tide our people over until they are able to make a living for themselves. As President Roosevelt put it the other day, the objective of any good Government must be "to give honest business a chance to go ahead and make a reasonable profit, and to give everyone a chance to earn a living."

I know there are some people who, for political reasons or for reasons that they think are to their individual interest, seek to convey that all the money we have spent might as well have been dumped into the sea. Let me give you a little instance of how the Government's aid projects really work out. Last year the Government undertook to insure loans made by private parties for repair and modernization of homes. The amount of each loan was limited to $2,000. During the 13 months this system has been in operation the losses to the Government by these insured loans for making homes more habitable have amounted to less than six one-hundredths of 1 percent.

In other words, the average loss on these $2,000 loans was less than $1.20. Was ever a system for putting men to work and getting money into circulation done so cheaply? In all, something like 260,000 individual home owners have taken advantage of the Government's facilities. This means not only that the Government has improved 260,000 homes, and thereby done much for public health and comfort, but this priming of the industrial pump has caused such an increase in industry that it is estimated that private capital is now financing six times the amount of the Government's guaranteed loans, dispensing entirely with the Government's 80 percent insurance of the face value of loans so undertaken.

As a matter of fact, the country has been making reasonably steady strides back to prosperity. You can see the signs of it everywhere, even in those newspapers which are specializing in assailing the administration and telling its readers editorially that the country is going to pot and that the Roosevelt administration has failed. For example, I noted the day I left New York in the Republican newspaper which specializes most in party opposition to the President some headlines on its financial pages.

The first column recited that "Steel production is now nearly double what it was in '34." Another headline stated that the trend of price index was the steadiest since the depression period." Another headline mentioned that the Westinghouse earnings were more than $6,000,000 as against a deficit last year.

The Department of Commerce reports that the automobile output for the second week of July was about 25,000 more cars than in the preceding week and that total production for 1935 so far was 31 percent greater than it was last year and 100 percent greater than it was in 1933. Now I know, and you know, that the automobile companies are not producing cars unless somebody is buying them, and we both know that people in the throes of poverty and discouragement are not buying new motor cars.

Dun & Bradstreet's National Retail Review recites, for the second week in July that: "Previous gains in retail distribution were more strongly emphasized, with the comparative showings of a year ago exceeded by unexpectedly large percentages. The increase in sales of that second week in July over the same week in 1934 ran as high as 40 to 50 percent"; and the report added, "Confidence in the future is demonstrated by retailers having placed orders beyond the fall."

Now, one of the favorite counts in the indictment against the administration is that it is destroying small business, to the advantage of big business. Yet the statistics show that sales of general merchandise in small towns and rural areas for June this year were 38 percent higher than in the same month of last year. Moreover, a recent survey disclosed not only that there are more retail establishments functioning today than there were when the boom was at high tide in 1929, but, what is perhaps more significant, pointed out that the percentage of business failures was less than at any time in the past 15 years.

The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce recently reported that farmers' cash income from sales of farm products in California was $42,000,000 greater than in 1934, and the San Francisco Board of Trade, covering the second week of July, reported that their statistics showed "substantial improvement in wholesale and retail trade and sharp declines in the number of business failures", and added that the retail sales volume was larger than for the previous week and holding generally better than usual at this season.

The prophets of disaster, when confronted with these figures, admit them but say, "But look at your relief roll." Well, let's look at the relief roll. In June there were 250,000 fewer on relief than in May; in fact, every month of this year has shown a decline in the relief figures.

You can take any index you please and it will show that this country is getting along pretty well, better perhaps than any other country in the world. Incidentally, I observe from the last Treasury figures that we collected $250,000,000 more in income taxes this fiscal year than last. That means that the general income of the people was several billion dollars more in 1934 than in 1933.

Of course, we are not out of the woods yet, but we are certainly on our way. I want you people out here, on what appears to the easterners to be the edge of the world, to take stock of the national advancement and retain your confidence in the future of our country.

Naturally, with a national political campaign coming on it suits the purposes of the opposition party to decry the accomplishments of the present administration. Naturally those people would like to see a return to the old period when privilege had full sway in order that they might again safely exploit the people. When you come to think of it, money must be fairly plentiful, if the interests concerned with the holding companies could chip in a million dollars for a slush fund in their effort to defeat one piece of legislation suggested by the President. That legislation, I may tell you, was merely meant to take off the backs of the people the illicit profits of pyramided corporations that perform no service in exchange for the fortunes they take from the operating companies directly and the consumers of public-utility products indirectly.

Perhaps you have read in the papers of the snowstorm of telegrams that rained in on Congress urging them to vote against this legislation. Anybody would have thought from this evidence of excitement that the whole United States was concerned only with saving the sort of institution typified by the Insull episode in American finance. It was not until the Senate investigating committee got to work that we learned that the holding-company agents simply took city directories and telephone books and signed the names they found therein to the telegrams that were sent to the Congressmen.

I dare say that there will be a lot of such things happen between now and election day next year. There never yet was introduced a bill in Congress to correct an abuse where those who were profiting by the abuse did not do things of this sort to discredit what the Government was trying to do.

So when any of you folks out here read about the terrible failures Government is charged with, just let your mind dwell a while on the source of the accusation. Our political and economic foes have been resorting to the meanest sort of a whispering campaign and are circulating through chain letters and by word of mouth that President Roosevelt was collapsing under the strain of his office and had reached, or was on the verge of, a mental break-down.

I don't know whether that story got out here, but it will be along in time, undoubtedly, and I want to tell you now that the President has enjoyed the best of health ever since his advent to the White House, and when I said good-bye to him a fortnight ago he was vigorous, serene, cheerful, and confident. He has the hardest job in the world, but the country has reason to be grateful for the circumstance that he is fully able to cope with it, and he is today in as fine health and in as good spirits as he was when you saw him out here a year ago.

He has done a job that has excited the admiration of the world. He is going to keep right on doing it until the United States is back to where it belongs in the economic scale.

I have enjoyed my journey out here. I am overwhelmed by the kindness of the reception you have given me, and as long as I live I will cherish a feeling of friendship for the people of Hawaii, and I hope that that feeling may not be one-sided.

LIFE INSURANCE AND THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Frank Delaney, general counsel, Investors & Policyholders, Inc., New York, on August 12, 1935, with reference to life insurance and the revenue bill.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Good evening, Mr. and Mrs. Taxpayer: I say that because everyone who is listening-in pays his share of the taxes. Like you, I am a radio listener. Many times I've sat and listened to someone else broadcasting. Now it's my turn. You may be the next, because we need the help of each and everyone of us.

What brought me into this position? The sudden, unfriendly spirit exhibited by those in charge of our Federal taxation. Congress was about to adjourn, to leave Washington sizzling under its midsummer sun. At that moment those in charge of our National Government unexpectedly proposed to commit this Nation to a program of confiscation of property. They called this effort a tax bill. It was not, however, designed to produce revenue, but to punish bigness and success. Those who proposed it thought their pet measures would go like wildfire because it was supposed to soak the rich. They tried jamming it through Congress—in just 4 days. That was last June.

It didn't go so well. They found the citizens of the United States were not ready to confiscate wealth and punish bigness. That is a foreign idea to American citizens. The whole country was really shocked that anybody should try to put it over in 4 days. You know there are 435 Members of Congress and 96 United States Senators. They have to sleep, just like you and I, and eat, and maybe see a ball game, and sweat when it is 90 degrees in the shade.

The people thought that before these representatives of theirs decided to confiscate anybody's property in their name, they really ought to have taken the time to get together and talk it over seriously with one another; and that then instead of passing a bill to change the country—in 4 days—that they ought to have gone home and found out what the bridge club or the poker club thought—what the doctor and the grocery man and their friends and neighbors had to say about it. Did all of these people really believe in trying to soak the rich. Maybe some one of his neighbors would have reminded him of the Sermon on the Mount, warned him that the Bible itself says that it rains on the just and on the unjust. It might have occurred to them then that if you call for a cloudburst of wrath to soak the rich that it will soak all of the rest of us, too, to the skin.

I know this may not be one of those great technical and statistical arguments such as the "brain trusters" and "brain busters" throw at you, and they might not think much of it, but it is the truth, and we all know it—just as much the truth now as when St. Matthew wrote his Gospel a long time ago.

There isn't a better example in this world of this truth than the real effect of this angry and envious so-called "revenue bill" to soak the rich. It is admitted to be a fundamental attack on the bigness of large corporations and large life-insurance companies. That is not supposed to bother the rest of us, the small investor, the small life-insurance policyholder, you and me. But it took all of us, 150 years of national existence, to build up these large corporations and large life-insurance companies. Who was it that decided that we want to punish and destroy them for being big? Their bigness is something peculiar to the United States of America, because it is big, too, and maybe we don't want it destroyed.

But that is not the whole story of why it concerns you and me so vitally. There are 24,000,000 owners of 60,000,000 policies of life insurance. For a great number of years all these policyholders have paid part of their earnings to these large life-insurance companies. Many of the very largest companies are mutual companies, which means they are wholly owned by their policyholders. All of them voluntarily pay their policyholders dividends out of their earnings. The other large companies reduce their rates to arrive at much the same result. It is conservatively estimated that these insurance policies affect 75,000,000 of our people very nearly two-thirds of the entire population of the United States. It is also estimated that there are 12,000,000 owners of shares of stock in our American corporations, and eleven and a half million of them own less than 101 shares. If tax officials are going to punish these large corporations and large life-insurance companies just because they are big, who will get soaked? The small life-insurance policyholder. The small investor with his 100 shares of stock, worth, say, $3,000.

His stock now has a ready market for cash, because so many people know of the good management, sound methods, and long record of dividend payments of the large corporation in which he has invested his savings. But this can't last if the Government starts out to ruin such a corporation because it is big. If confiscatory taxes designed to punish bigness, make dividends hazardous, then no one will want to own the stock. Not only will dividends be reduced, the selling price will fall in proportion.

Another thing the life-insurance policyholder will find is that his insurance company is in turn an investor in these large corporations. It is from such sources that the large insurance companies get the dividends which in turn and in part they pay to or apply for the benefit of their policyholders. Who will get soaked when these dividends are soaked all along the line? All of us will get soaked—the just and the unjust—to the skin.

You remember when they started to jam this tax bill through in 4 days last June, they thought they could tell you it would only soak the rich. The friends of this measure—although in view of the protests it is hard to identify them nowadays—only claimed it would raise $250,000,000 in revenue. Other more conservative estimates suggested that it would raise no more than $50,000,000. With the Federal Government running short $4,000,000,000 a year, the pretense of soaking the rich didn't have a chance to make a dent in this deficit. Only last Saturday the committee of the United States Senate that today finished framing one version of this soak the rich measure put a tax on the $800 incomes of single men and single women. That would even tax some people on work relief in New York City. And so the fraud about soaking the rich. The truth is that the whole measure, when carefully examined, in every part soaks each and every one of us. Your Congressman knows this. Your Senators know this. Seventy-five percent of them are in their secret hearts against it. Only last Saturday a newspaper reporter asked a prominent member of the Finance Committee of the United States Senate when the bill would be reported out by his committee to the Senate as a whole. The Senator's reply was short: "If I had my way it would never come out."

Why does that United States Senator remain anonymous? Why will he be found possibly voting for the bill in committee and in the Senate itself? The answer is—he does not know your wishes.

A lot of my friends have asked me why I am joining this movement for an association of the investors and life-insurance policyholders of this nation. These investors and policyholders are a huge number of the best and thriftiest citizens that we have. They are the ones who have labored and invested their savings. They are the owners of shares of stock in these large life-insurance companies. They have depended upon the stability and management of these corporations and companies. But that is not enough. There is a movement on foot, propelled by a small minority, to change the face of America. This change, it seems to me, will result in the destruction of values that we now have. Investors & Policyholders, Inc., a nonprofit, nonpolitical membership corporation, will afford a medium of expression for this large thrifty group of good American citizens. Its offices are at 60 East Forty-second Street, New York City.

WILL ROGERS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Star-News, of Wilmington, N. C., and a newspaper item about Will Rogers.

There being no objection, the editorial and newspaper article referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Star-News, Wilmington, N. C.]

No man in American history occupied a more unique position than Will Rogers as a humorist. He was supreme as an actor. He was one attraction that guaranteed a rush at the box office. As an American he was a patriot who was the one man in the history of the Republic who could persuade the people to laugh off their troubles, make sport of a crisis, and come through with a grin. This contribution alone entitled him to rank as one of the foremost men of the country and of his generation. Monuments have been raised to soldiers and statesmen. It is fitting that one should be raised to the American ambassador of good will whose sense of humor saved the populace on more than one occasion. The Star-News therefore would sponsor a fund to erect to Will Rogers a memorial in his home city of Claremore, Okla. It feels that it is fitting that this should originate in the city where Will Rogers first stepped into semifame as a stage performer. It would ask the cooperation of newspapers and theaters throughout the United States in receiving contributions of 1 cent each from the thousands who have laughed with Rogers, been cheered by his wit, and observed the tremendous effect of his abilities.

ROGERS-POST MEMORIAL FUND PENNIES POUR IN

Pennies from admirers of Will Rogers, peerless humorist, and Wiley Post, intrepid round-the-world flier, whose untimely deaths in the wreckage of their plane on a lonely Alaskan tundra shocked all America, flowed in by the hundreds yesterday to swell the memorial fund started by the Star-News Friday.

"I shall be more than pleased to serve as a member of your committee," wired Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS from the National Capital in response to an invitation to join six other national figures and friends of the American "ambassador of good will" in constituting a board of trustees for the proposed fund.

Senator REYNOLDS pointed out that one of the other six, Senator WILLIAM GIBBS MCADOO, is president of the Aeronautical Association of America. The others invited to become trustees by the Star-News are: Cecil B. deMille of the movie industry in which Rogers held so high a place, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, Alfred E. Smith, Jesse Jones, and Vice President John Nance Garner.

Senator REYNOLDS expressed his approval of the memorial fund proposed by the Star-News, which in a page-one editorial had declared Rogers' ability to cheer millions of Americans through times of national stress made him irreplaceable.

He promised to comment upon the newspaper's proposal on the floor of the Senate Monday.

A number of other newspapers at points throughout the Nation followed the Chicago Daily Times, which in a telegram to the Star-News Friday afternoon joined the movement and suggested that the memorial fund be broadened to include monuments for both Rogers and Post.

As proposed by Editor Lamont Smith, the fund would be raised through contributions of 1 cent from admirers of Rogers and Post, delivered to newspaper offices and theater box offices in every city in the land.

Among the first persons to make their contribution here were the Rev. A. C. Braden, Mike Dorsett, and R. J. Doss. Yesterday every member of the Star-News circulation department contributed his bit.

ACTION COMMENDED

ATLANTA, August 17.—W. E. Page, internal revenue collector for Georgia, and a brother of R. B. Page, publisher of the Wilmington (N. C.) Star-News, was "gratified" to learn today of the Star-News proposal to raise a fund for a memorial to Will Rogers.

"I intend to write a letter of congratulation to my brother and Lamont Smith, the editor", Page said. "I think the idea is a fine one and sincerely hope it bears fruit."

The proposed memorial, to be erected in the humorist's home town of Claremore, Okla., "would be financed by contributions of one cent each from the thousands who have laughed with Rogers, been cheered by his wit, and observed the tremendous effect of his abilities", the Star-News said.

FIRST CONTRIBUTION

CLAREMORE, OKLA., August 17.—First contribution to a fund to construct a memorial in Claremore honoring Will Rogers was made today by Mrs. G. O. Bayles, who turned in a check for $1.

Under tentative plans the memorial will be a Will Rogers memorial library or monument.

Four thousand dollars, which Rogers gave the city, would be used as a nucleus. Rogers objected to former plans to name a library for him and suggested that it be named Sequoyan, in honor of the Cherokee scholar.

REALLOCATION OF CONTROL IN INDUSTRY

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD a letter from Prof. Arthur R. Himbert, of the law school of the University of Wyoming, with respect to a measure introduced by me relating to reallocation of control in industry.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE UNIVERSITY OF WYOMING,
THE LAW SCHOOL,
Laramie, Wyo., August 6, 1935.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senator from Wyoming,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I congratulate you upon your wisdom and your eagerness to promote the general welfare by proposing sound legislation in order to solve the most crucial problem facing our Republic today. The policy of laissez faire or, at the other extreme, Government ownership, is not the issue or the solution. The issue and the solution is the reallocation of control in industry so that it will serve the public interest, which in addition to the business interest includes the interest of the securityholders, the employees, the farmers, and all of us as consumers. I am convinced that your proposed legislation is focused upon the locus of control and that it will bring about a greater utilization by all of our natural resources, of the efficient technological plant that exists today, and of the willing labor which is the victim of misplaced control. The full utilization of these three factors is, I suppose, the end to be achieved by any such economy as exists in the United States today.

Your proposal of making every director a trustee and especially your proposal of the creation of a system of accredited corporation representatives will protect the investors' interest. Your proposal to protect the fundamental rights of collective bargaining and of the abolition of child labor will protect the employee's interest. Your proposal to do something really effective in outlawing vicious practices by the maintenance of fair competition will protect the business interest. I trust that some conscientious effort is being made to protect that vague and inarticulate interest known as the "consumer's interest." Your effective proposal of legislation to foster the public interest, which interest is a composite of the four interests named above, is predicated upon the sound major premise that the difficulty with our economic order can only be corrected by the proper allocation of control. Here you have a real share-the-wealth program.

It may be that back of the technical jargon our crucial judges on the Supreme Court are adherents of the principle that the solution lies in the decentralization of industry, as evidenced by the opinion in the Jackson (chain-store tax) case and the dissent in the Liebmann (ice) case. The theory of the antitrust laws has proved not to be the solution, and I feel that too great an attack on bigness may cost us more in the loss of efficiency than the good it will do, though I am not unmindful of the possibility that a more abundant life may be had by our workers if industry were decentralized. However, it appears that the route of decentralization to be effective is too far-fetched. But your legislation will cause less disruption of the existing economic order—and here is the paradox—the more centralization of control you place in the Federal Government through Federal incorporation the more decentralization of industry will result by those unwilling to comply. If there is anything to the suggestion that the guiding principle of the crucial judges is decentralization, then your legislation drafted within the framework of the greatest document ever written will more readily be held constitutional.

Your legislation is not inconsistent with the doctrine of State rights. It is my hope that the advocates of State rights will not be misled by the propaganda you are going to face by those who are now in control as a result of the Hamiltonian policy of centralization and that your good work will not be deflected as a result of those who, when the shoe pinches, should shout for State rights. The issue is whether or not the control of our economic order is to reside in a few corporate individuals, not even responsible to their stockholders, or reside in a group that really represents the democracy. I do not mean that the power and control should be left wholly to a centralized bureau at Washington as you may find that your shifting of control from an irresponsible corporate group to a bureaucracy not responsible to the voters not in accord with the principle of representative government. Therefore, as much control and determination of standards as is possible should be retained by Congress and the various interests involved should be given real representation before the Federal Trade Commission. Then the locus of control is where it belongs; that is, in the hands of those who represent 125,000,000 souls. Then our vote will mean more.

Very truly yours,

ARTHUR R. HIMBERT.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE—ADDRESS BY F. P. GARVIN

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very able address delivered by Hon. Francis P. Garvan, former Assistant Attorney General of the United States, before the national meeting of the R. O. T. C. Association of the United States in New York City on April 30, 1935, on the subject The Common Defense and the General Welfare.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOR THE COMMON DEFENSE AND GENERAL WELFARE

The Constitution of the United States declares that the people of the United States are united for the common defense and for the general welfare.

The Army and Navy represent the visible expression of the words "common defense", and it is on this visible expression that the eyes and minds of the people dwell.

It is not for me, nor is this the place, to detail the glorious record of the Army and Navy of the United States, of which we can only speak with the warmest admiration. Today I wish to speak to the words "general welfare" as applied particularly to the contributions which have been made by the Army and Navy to our general welfare. I wish also to give emphasis to those forms of general welfare which are an outgrowth of our industrial advances stimulated by the Army and Navy and the necessity of national defense.

The Army and Navy have rendered and are now rendering service for the general welfare, little known, understood, or appreciated by the people of the United States.

I believe it is possible by utilization of existing agencies, without incurring additional cost, to establish closer contact and more appreciative understanding between the Army, the Navy, and the people by making available facts as to the achievements and continuing service of the trained and expert personnel of both services for the advance of the agricultural, industrial, and economic life of the Nation. I believe that all of the available information should be published to bring about a clearer knowledge by the people at large of the great service which the Army and the Navy are rendering to our country in times of peace.

From a survey of the material available, I have gathered in outline certain achievements which will indicate fields of usefulness to which I desire to draw attention.

The means of transportation, including the canals in our country and the Panama Canal; the deepening and widening of navigable streams; aircraft improvements; manufacturing, including the development of certain high-grade textiles, the demand for and the almost astounding development by the industries of the production of high-grade metals and alloys which under the stimulus of Army and Navy requirements has brought forth the magnificent metals which have made the automobile what it is today and made possible safe and dependable aircraft.

As to agriculture, the gift of the Army and Navy has been the development of new and efficient insect sprays, and flood prevention, and the safety of great territories from inundation.

Communications, including the development of the fundamentals of the radio and the development of special further uses of the radio for the protection of life and property, which are clearly in their infancy.

Commerce, including the development of the great ports and the widening and deepening of our rivers and harbor channels.

Education, including the physical and technical training of the Army itself and all those influences which make for good citizenship.

All of these are an outgrowth of the service of the Army and Navy. It is not my purpose to dwell upon these particular subjects. I do wish to point out most particularly, however, the things which have to do with health and sanitation and place the proper emphasis upon the word "chemistry." Chemistry is now acknowledged to be the great fundamental industry which lies at the base of our industrial structure. On this foundation rests all our industries, and thus the general welfare. Chemistry has now become second only to the Army and Navy itself, the strongest instrumentality for peace and the national defense which our country possesses.

It is a happy coincidence that there should have occurred in New York City last week the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the chemical industry in the United States followed by this meeting, where some important relations of chemistry and national security are being discussed. The beginning of chemical production in 1635 by the then Governor Winthrop of Connecticut was significant for two purposes which have always been recognized in this country even from colonial times. There was the necessity of the production of common-place chemicals used in the household, such as soap, potash, metals, lead and iron, salt, dyes, fertilizers, explosives, sugar, pigments, paints, drugs, pitch, leather, and meat preservatives to carry the Colonies through the long winters, for instance, saltpeter used for similar purposes and also used in the manufacture of gunpowder.

Without going into details, it will be clearly seen that even then, the peaceful use of chemicals was always predominant but also coordinated with the ideas of defense. England, who controlled the Colonies, naturally felt that the growth of home industries in America was detrimental to the commerce which was the mainstay of her existence, and so English statesmen resisted, by various devices, the growth of the chemical industry here, openly declaring that the value of the Colonies to England was as a source of raw materials and foods and as a profitable market for her export trade. She did not desire to have built up colonial competition or a source of supply and strength for the Colonies in the event of trouble and military conflict.

This struggle of the chemical industry for existence in competition with the chemical industries of other countries, and especially the home country, led to considerable discontent. At the time of the formation of our Government, Hamilton pointed out the necessity of protecting home industry and especially the chemical industry, not only as a basis for home prosperity, but also as an adequate foundation for the protection of our country in case of war. This relationship of chemistry to national defense has continued to the present time. The emphasis has always been on the peaceful use of these chemicals, but nevertheless the value of these chemical plants was clearly manifest as an invaluable resource in case of national emergency. The handicap of the chemical industry in the United States by foreign control and manipulation did not cease until after the World War brought emancipation—all we got out of the war.

The tercentenary of the chemical industry disclosed that the chemical industry in this country is practically complete and self-contained. The World War resulting in an embargo and the breaking down of the commercial and political connection with foreign countries thus enabled us to build up our synthetic organic chemistry to start toward its present magnificent stature. It can be said now that this new development of synthetic chemistry since the World War is already contributing more to our country in economic advances, taxes, and growth of national wealth yearly than the interest and amortization on all the war loans.

Again we find that the emphasis is on peaceful production. The manufacture of war materials in the chemical industry at the present moment is practically nil. Nevertheless, in this chemical industry lies a defensive power of such serious importance, that viewed and understood as it is by other nations, it is an influence which no aggressor can disregard. No foreign country, understanding as they do the industrial capacity of the United States, especially in this field, would attack us without very careful consideration. Hence, the chemical industry, during the tercentenary, demonstrated itself as one of the greatest influences against war.

It is regrettable that the public does not clearly understand this great distinction. It is also regrettable that certain pacifist organizations do not understand it and fear that the production of chemicals in this country may lead us into rather than away from war. Let us pray that the people will learn to think this through and base their judgment on facts rather than loose talk.

I desire to emphasize still further the contributions of the Army and Navy to science and the arts of peace. I take this opportunity to say that the development of this thought had its first conspicuous expression in 1931. The American Institute, of the city of New York, that splendid organization founded in 1828 and still carrying on its great purpose of developing knowledge and which is now instructing the children of our public schools in things scientific, gave a remarkable dinner in this city. To this dinner were invited, with the consent of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the approval of the President of the United States, officers of the Army and Navy, to disclose the facts regarding the peace-time contributions of the Army and Navy to the arts of peace in the conservation of life, in industrial advancement, and material wealth, more than offsetting the entire cost of the Army and Navy as a means of national defense.

Let me first discuss the conservation of lives. No one can dispute the fact that it was through the Army of the United States, that yellow fever was conquered throughout the world. The annual loss from yellow fever formerly was an international disaster costing a toll of over a million lives a year. In our own country epidemics of yellow fever cost thousands of lives a year and serious epidemics of this scourge have occurred even right here in New York City. This menace has been eliminated by the United States Army.

Let me emphasize that this work of the United States Army spread throughout the world. As one illustration, take Guayaquil, where yellow fever was always rampant, but under General Gorgas was brought under absolute control. Another illustration: The systems of sanitation and the elimination of malaria and yellow fever in the Panama Canal Zone established by the United States Army, under Gorgas. The ramifications and development of that effort to conquer tropical disease in its benefits has reached every country. Ambassador Jusserand said in a public address in Washington, "France would have constructed the Panama Canal had France had a Gorgas."

Think, if you will, of the developments of the antiseptic treatment of wounds which was brought into use during the World War by our own medical staff. Think of the aid in every hospital of the world where these systems are used. One could go on indefinitely in this field. In industry, for instance, take by contrast the fact that the pitch of the propellers of the ships of the world for various speeds was fixed by experiments of the Navy of the United States. The saving thus brought about in the cost of transportation of the commerce of the world can hardly be estimated.

The Army and the Navy of the United States are compensating for their cost each year, and each year saving through their past and present scientific achievements more lives than were ever lost in any year in any American war. An officer of the United States Army, independently inspired by the peace-time service rendered by the Army and Navy that had actuated the cognizance taken by the American Institute of the city of New York, submitted a comprehensive outline to the War Department of the contribution of the Army in the building of American civilization. This outline has been approved by the War Department with the official suggestion that it should be amplified into complete form for the information of the American people. Let us hope for the better understanding of all that this suggestion may promptly be carried out.

In all of the discoveries of our Army and Navy for sanitation, the development of immunization and the general protection of health, lie the most interesting and astounding developments of the chemical industry. Indeed, the development of the synthetic medicines which are of such grave importance to the health of our country has taken place in the United States as the result of the World War. In the biological fields the Army and Navy by giving opportunity for mass application of the serums involved in immunization has given us the fundamentals upon which scientific advance in this field can go forward with complete knowledge and safety. The results of the battle against disease may be summed up briefly, and while giving due credit to the experimentors and the medical service throughout the world, we must also give a generous share to the Army and Navy.

The results of the battle with disease were demonstrated in the World War. While smallpox claimed over 7,000 soldier victims during the Civil War and 258 during the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection, we lost only 14 soldiers from this disease in the World War, although there were 4,000,000 men in service. Malaria claimed 15,000 during the Civil War, while we lost but 25 during the World War. Research work in connection with vaccination against typhoid fever in the United States Army began shortly after the Spanish-American War and was carried to a successful completion by medical officers.

Vaccination against typhoid was made compulsory for the Military Establishment in 1911 with the result that, while in the Spanish-American War 20,000 soldiers, or 12 percent of the total, suffered from typhoid fever, during the World War there were only 2,000 cases, or about one-twentieth of 1 percent of the total. Had the death rate for typhoid in the World War been the same as in 1898, we would have lost 60,000 soldiers from this one disease alone, which would have been more than we lost from all diseases.

The chief military purpose of the Chemical Warfare Service is to protect our country against enemy chemical warfare in any future emergency. We should, therefore, maintain and develop our research work on a par with any other nation in this world.

To carry out this there is maintained a small but highly specialized research organization whose constant study of toxic and poisonous materials has made its members poison experts. Consequently any peace-time problem involving the use of or protection against poisonous materials is one which this organization is preeminently qualified to solve. It must be understood, however, that the Chemical Warfare Service is not engaged in the business of selling any of its byproducts commercially; neither is it authorized by law to do so. Its achievements are of benefit to the country, and in this respect it cooperates and assists industry wherever possible by giving it the benefit of the research work.

Tear gas is now used extensively commercially and especially by police departments everywhere. Discharging tear gas in places barricaded by criminals soon brings them out and without bloodshed. The chemical name of this gas is chloracetophenone, a perfectly harmless gas, but capable of producing copious tears sufficient to temporarily put out of business anyone coming in contact with it.

In conjunction with the United States Public Health Service a method of fumigating ships has been developed which has proven very satisfactory. Hydrocyanic acid had been used, which was quite dangerous. Hydrocyanic acid has very little odor and as a result a number of accidental deaths occurred. A method has now been developed for generating a mixture of hydrocyanic acid and cyanogen chloride which is even more effective as a fumigant and in addition produced vigorous lachrymation in concentrations far below a lethal one. Since the adoption of this mixture not one accidental death has occurred during fumigation.

Many of the chemical compounds used as war gases have been tested as insecticides, and one of them especially, chlorpicrin, has been found very effective against weevils, potato beetles, grain borers, and stored-product insects. It has a very low toxicity toward man and animals, is very easy to detect, and is noninflammable.

Some time ago, in one of our Army warehouses, a large quantity of woolen cloth and felt was found infested with moth larvae. Under the direction of the Chemical Warfare Service, the place was fumigated, and for an expenditure of less than $1,000 Government material to the value of $620,000 has been safeguarded.

During the last few years, boring ants in Hawaii were rapidly destroying the wooden foundations of buildings. The Chemical Warfare Service has discovered a method of getting rid of this pest.

Every ship must at intervals go into drydock to have barnacles and other parasitic sea growths scraped from its bottom. This adds millions of dollars annually to the cost of operation of merchant and war ships. Utilizing the immense amount of toxicological data accumulated by past work in our research laboratories, a ship-bottom paint has been developed which prevents the accumulation of these sea growths. The Navy Department has been working very closely with the Chemical Warfare Service on this development.

Several years ago the Chemical Warfare Service undertook the study of the effectiveness of poisons against the teredo and other marine woodborers that destroy docks and other waterfront structures to an estimated value of millions of dollars annually. After many tests toxic impregnating compounds have been discovered affording ample protection against these dreaded borers. The amount saved to this country on this one problem alone would maintain the entire Chemical Warfare Service for many years.

As a result of 3 years' experimental work, during which time comparative toxicity tests of more than 1,000 poisons and poisonous mixtures were run, two materials stand out as commercially possible bollweevil poisons. One of these is a special calcium arsenate, containing about 20 percent arsenic, and the other material a sodium fluosilicate, a byproduct in the manufacture of acid phosphate.

The development of airplane apparatus with which to spray fields and orchards has been an important part of the work of the Chemical Warfare Service.

The development of smoke screens is one of the outstanding accomplishments of the Chemical Warfare Service. It is considered that if smoke clouds from airplanes can be made to hang in orchards during the critical frost hours during the night, tremendous savings in fruit crops can be effected. Another great accomplishments of the Chemical Warfare Service is the work done on various types of gas masks.

In connection with the fumigation of ships, a special gas mask has been developed for the United States Public Health Service.

An ammonia mask has been developed which is generally used throughout industry today. In the operation of ice plants, in the handling of ammonia cylinders, and in miscellaneous chemical-plant work, leaks of ammonia occur which allow highly irritating and dangerous concentrations of this gas to accumulate in the air. Ammonia fumes may also be encountered in fire fighting; in that case carbon monoxide may also be present. The ammonia canister will give protection against low concentrations of ammonia for several hours.

Activated carbon of high absorptive capacity, such as is used in gas-mask canisters, is generally recognized as being a war-time development. Since the war, this material has found extensive industrial use as a vapor absorbent. It is used in industrial plants for recovering valuable vapors from air or other gases, for removing objectionable odors or impurities from air and other gases, and for many less important purposes. Activated carbon is now considered to be an almost indispensable commercial article.

Probably the most important large application of activated carbon is the recovery of valuable solvent vapors from the air. It is estimated that the activated carbon solvent recovery installations have an annual recovery capacity of over 200,000 tons of solvents worth around $30,000,000.

Other large applications of activated carbon are for removing sulphur compounds from gases used in ammonia synthesis and removing objectionable odors from carbon dioxide used in producing dry ice. The abatement of industrial stenches by means of activated carbon is readily accomplished.

Chlorine, the devilish yellow gas first used by the Germans during the World War, is used every day in hundreds of cities and towns for water purification and many other industrial purposes, and its contribution to public health and industrial advance in this country is simply beyond estimate.

This is not the time to discuss the chemical industry as other than a powerful peace-time weapon absolutely necessary for defense, well equipped to aid in successfully repelling invasion, or to meet any major military emergency.

My purpose is to point out that the very existence of the chemical industry, complete as it has become in this country, is a defensive armor of such importance that it has and will remain one of the greatest instrumentalities in the maintenance of peace.

The National Defense Act of 1920 contains provisions which make possible preparation of industry beforehand. Industry under the law has now perfected plans for a rapid economical and effective transformation of industry from its normal peace-time activities to meet the demands of any minor or major emergency. Providing as this law does for the mobilization of industry as well as man power, the law has given us for the first time in our history an effective military system and a definite military policy.

The experiences of the past, including our entrance into the World War, was one of confusion and inefficiency and economic waste. The dedication of industry under the law conserves all of the peace-time force in our industrial life and makes possible prompt mobilization obviating extravagance, waste, and the losses which have been almost disastrous in each of the wars in our past history.

Speaking today as I do as one of the representatives of the civilian groups, I know that I may give the pledge to our country of a patriotic dedication of industry to meet all the obligations of peace and the general welfare, and to be in readiness to serve our country in any eventuality.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a series of 13 editorials which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune from Sunday, August 4, 1935, to Friday, August 16, 1935, inclusive, relating to The Roosevelt Record.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

I. BROKEN PROMISES

Pledging full and unequivocal support to the Democratic platform of 1932, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, in his first fireside chat after his nomination, read large portions of that document over the air to his fellow citizens and explained in detail what it meant. At the beginning of his talk he said, speaking from Albany on the night of July 30, 1932:

"* * * I propose tonight to state the broad policies of my party—to sketch the first outline of the final picture.

"Where do we look for this? In the platform, of course. A platform is a proposal and at the same time a promise, binding on the party and its candidates.

"Now, even the partisan opposition press has found it hard to criticize the Democratic platform this year. It is brief, only one-fifth of the length of the Republican platform, and easily understood. Eighty percent of it is constructive; only 20 percent critical. Moreover, it is forthright and genuine—honest to the core."

The Democratic platform

Promise	Performance
Immediate reduction of Government expenditure by 25 percent.	Increase of Government expenditure by billions of dollars yearly.
Balanced Budget through taxes based on ability to pay.	Yearly deficit of three to four billions. Taxes proposed for social reform.
A sound currency to be preserved at all hazards.	Devaluation of the dollar, suspension of gold standard, and interjection of silver as coverage for currency.
Calling of international monetary conference.	Torpedoed by President July 3, 1933.
International economic conference to restore international trade and facilitate exchange.	Torpedoed by President July 3, 1933.
Enactment of every constitutional measure that will aid the farmer to receive for basic farm commodities prices in excess of cost of production.	Enactment of unconstitutional methods for the same end.
Strict and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws.	Suspension of the antitrust laws.
Regulation of holding companies.	Attempt to destroy holding companies.

In addition, the Democratic platform condemned "the improper and excessive use of money in political activities." The Roosevelt administration now disposes of the largest campaign fund in the history of the world in the form of the $4,880,000,000 voted to the President for relief.

The Democratic platform also condemned the failure to stem the extravagant expenditures of the Government and to revoke improvident subsidies granted to favored interests. The Roosevelt administration is pledged under the present Budget to spend, during its first 3 years in office, a sum equal to the total expenditure of the Federal Government from the administration of Washington down to and including the administration of Taft. It has paid out more than $700,000,000 to the favored farm interests.

The Democratic Party likewise condemned "the disastrous action which made the Government a speculator in farm products, and the unsound policy of restricting agricultural production to the demands of domestic markets." The Roosevelt administration lent money on crops at prices above the market and bought large stocks of farm products. At the same time it did all in its power to restrict agricultural production to the demands of domestic markets.

Sanctity of platform pledges

Three weeks before election Mr. Roosevelt announced:

"* * * Before any man enters my Cabinet he must give me a twofold pledge of—

"1. Absolute loyalty to the Democratic platform, and especially to its economy plank.

"2. Complete cooperation with me looking to economy and reorganization in his department.

"I regard reduction in Federal spending as one of the most important issues of this campaign. In my opinion, it is the most direct and effective contribution that government can make to business.

"In accordance with this fundamental policy it is equally necessary to eliminate from Federal budget making during this emergency all new items except such as relate to direct relief of unemployment." (Pittsburgh, Oct. 19, 1932.)

Attack on "rubber dollar"

"One of the most commonly repeated misrepresentations by Republican speakers, including the President, has been the claim that the Democratic position with regard to money has not been made sufficiently clear. The President is seeing visions of rubber dollars. This is only a part of his campaign of fear. I am not going to characterize these statements. I merely present the facts.

"The Democratic platform specifically declares: 'We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards.' That is plain English.

"In discussing this platform on July 30 I said: 'Sound money is an international necessity; not a domestic consideration for one nation alone.' In other words, I want to see sound money in all the world."—(Brooklyn Academy of Music, Nov. 5, 1932.)

The bitterness of candidate Roosevelt's attacks on Mr. Hoover for even so much as hinting that the country might have to abandon the gold standard made it plain that by "sound currency" Mr. Roosevelt meant currency based on gold. Six weeks after he came into office Mr. Roosevelt abandoned the gold standard. In January 1934 he revalued the dollar (temporarily) at the equivalent of 59.05 cents gold (old value). He is still experimenting with silver.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

II. BROKEN PROMISES

The need for reducing the expenditures of the Federal Government was a recurring theme in Candidate Roosevelt's campaign speeches. He attacked Mr. Hoover for establishing so many commissions and for failing to reduce the Federal bureaucracy. He pointed to the growing deficit as a threat to the credit of the American Government. He assailed Mr. Hoover as the greatest spender in our times.

Speaking at Sioux City, Iowa, on September 29, 1932, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"Later in this campaign I propose to analyze the enormous increase in the growth of bureaucracy. We are not getting an adequate return for the money we are spending in Washington, or, to put it another way round, we are spending altogether too much money for Government services which are neither practical nor necessary. In addition to this we are attempting too many functions and we need a simplification of what the Federal Government is giving to the people." (Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 29, 1932.)

* * * "The President has power under the law to recommend to Congress the abolishment of bureaus and the absolute power to consolidate certain specific bureaus. He has done nothing. In the process of consolidation I propose to apply the lessons of economy and efficiency that we learned so well in the State of New York and through the striking experience of reorganization in other States of the Union. I am convinced that through such reorganization there can be a very substantial reduction of expenditures." (Brooklyn Academy of Music, Nov. 5, 1932.)

Since the inauguration of Mr. Roosevelt the number of Federal employees has increased by 150,000. He has added 31 new bureaus to the Government.

"At the very top of the credit structure of the country, surpassing all other groups in moral and material importance, stand the obligations of the Federal Government. These are paramount, because government is essential to all ordered economic life. When they go everything goes. Happily these obligations are secure. They suffer only to the extent that government is permitted to be extravagant, wasteful, or ill-managed. They suffer if the Federal Budget is not balanced, and particularly where the deficit of one year is not cleared up in the succeeding year.

"I called attention in my address at Pittsburgh on Wednesday night to the great importance of Federal budget making as the foundation of the national credit. I pointed out that the Hoover administration had been responsible for defict after deficit; that as one disastrous year succeeded another no attempt was made to arrange the finances of the country so that at least the mounting loss of revenue might not be turned into a deficit for the next year. It is my pledge and promise that this dangerous kind of financing shall be stopped and that rigid governmental economy shall be forced by a stern and unremitting administration policy of living within our income." (St. Louis, Oct. 21, 1932.)

The deficit of the Roosevelt administration during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934, was just under $4,000,000,000, and during the year ended June 1935 (estimated), was $3,500,000,000. This compares with a deficit of $902,000,000 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, $3,153,000,000 for 1932, and $3,068,000,000 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933. A part, at least, of this last figure belongs in the Roosevelt record.

Greatest spender in history

"I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peace times, in all our history—one which has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs or reduced earning power of the people. Bureaus and bureaucrats have been retained at the expense of the taxpayer." (Sioux City, Iowa, Sept. 29, 1932).

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1934, the Roosevelt administration spent $7,105,000,000. The estimated expenditures for the year ended June 30, 1935, were $8,581,000,000. The budgeted sum for the current fiscal year, is $8,520,000,000, making a total of $24,206,000,000 for the first 3 years of the Roosevelt administration (excluding the first 4 months). Figures compiled from the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury show that the total expenditure of the Federal Government from 1789 down to and including 1913 was $24,521,845,000.

"One of these problems—and a very vital one to my family and your family and the whole community—is the financial problem of making both ends meet.

"We all know that our own family credit depends in large part on the stability and the credit of the United States. And here, at least, is one field in which all business—big business and little business and family business and the individual's business—is at the mercy of our big Government down in Washington.

"Now, it is undoubtedly true that the mind of the average individual, man and woman, has been unable to keep pace in the last 10 or 12 years with the intricacies of Federal financing. In the first place, what used to be analogous to an old-fashioned account book that all the family could understand has become in Washington a maze of intricate double-entry bookkeeping which only a few highly trained technical expert accountants could possibly understand.

"What I should like to do is to reduce, insofar as possible, the problem of our national finances to the trend of the family budget."

What the Roosevelt administration did was to import from Europe the system of an "ordinary" and an "extraordinary" budget, and point with pride to the fact that the "ordinary" budget was balanced. The "extraordinary" budget, in the meantime, showed a deficit running into billions. This is as if in a family budget household expenses were set off against current earnings but no mention was made of heavy expenditures for illness (met out of borrowing) because they were not "ordinary."

"Now, the credit of the family depends chiefly on whether that family is living within its income. And this is so of the Nation. If the Nation is living within its income its credit is good. If in some crisis it lives beyond its income for a year or two it can usually borrow temporarily on reasonable terms. But if, like a spendthrift, it throws discretion to the winds, is willing to make no sacrifice at all in spending, extends its taxing to the limit of the people's power to pay, and continues to pile up deficits, it is on the road to bankruptcy. * * *

"The most obvious effect of extravagant Government spending is then its burden on farm and industrial activity, and for that nearly every Government unit in the United States is to blame. But when we come to consider prodigality and extravagance in the Federal Government—as distinguished from State or local government—we are talking about something even more dangerous. For upon the financial stability of the United States Government depends the stability of trade and employment, and of the entire banking, saving, and insurance system of the country." (Pittsburgh, Oct. 19, 1932.)

Assails crop-reduction principles

"When the futility of maintaining prices of wheat and cotton through so-called "stabilization" became apparent the President's Farm Board, of which his Secretary of Agriculture was a member, invented the cruel joke of advising farmers to allow 20 percent of their wheat lands to lie idle, to plow up every third row of cotton, and to shoot every tenth dairy cow. Surely they knew that his advice would not—indeed, could not—be taken. It was probably offered as the foundation of an alibi. They wanted to be able to say to the farmers: 'You did not do as we told you to do. Blame yourself.'" (Topeka, Kans., Sept. 14, 1932.)

The Roosevelt administration reduced wheat acreage by more than 20 percent, plowed under every third row of cotton, and killed 6,000,000 pigs.

"Now to put forth, as the Secretary of Commerce did, the idea of limiting farm production to the domestic market was simply to threaten agriculture with a terrific penalty. Apparently either he did not see or did not care that this meant allowing wheatlands in Kansas to remain idle, forcing the foreclosure of farm mortgages, wrecking farm families, while our withdrawal from the world's markets principally benefited foreign producers." (Topeka, Kans., Sept. 14, 1932.)

The Roosevelt policy of limiting farm production has driven hundreds of thousands of farm families on to public relief rolls and has greatly stimulated foreign production of cotton and other staples formerly exported by the United States.

Assails delay in public works

"* * * The country would be horrified to know how little construction work authorized by the last Congress and approved by the President already has been undertaken. Much of it will not be under way until next summer." (Boston, Oct. 31, 1932.)

President Roosevelt promised in November 1933 to put 4,000,000 men to work by winter under the Public Works scheme of 1933. He promised, under the Public Works scheme of 1934–35, to put 3,500,000 men to work by spring. Only a fraction of this number was put to work in either year. The Public Works programs of both years are still lagging. A large part of them, to paraphrase the President, will not be under way until next summer.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

III. SENSATIONAL EXTRAVAGANCE

One of the first moves of the Roosevelt administration was a sensational assault on extravagance. Under the so-called "Economy Act" of March 1933, $125,000,000 was slashed from the Federal pay rolls and no less than $400,000,000 from the estimate of annual expenditures on the war veterans. All told, this act, together with legislation providing for Government reorganization and an Executive order withholding the expenditures of all funds not specifically allocated to public-works projects, was calculated to effect gross budgetary savings of upward of $1,000,000,000.

It speedily became apparent, however, that while this move looked on its face like a swing toward orthodoxy in Government finance, it actually was precisely the opposite. In his economy measure the President was merely laying the groundwork for the introduction of the so-called "dual budget", which has so often proved the stepping stone to inflation in other countries. In the ensuing few weeks the President sent to Congress his legislative program embodying the new deal; and when Congress had completed its work statisticians got out their pencils and figured that the liability to the taxpayer involved—including both direct and contingent items—was around $12,000,000,000. Including R. F. C. liabilities, it was estimated that the total would be $15,000,000,000, which was only a little less than the amount of the entire Federal debt 4 years earlier.

The figures on Government finances for the first 3 full years of the present administration, in millions of dollars, are as follows:

Year ended June 30—	Receipts	Expenditures	Deficit	Gross debt
1934	$3,116	$6,745	$3,989	27,053
1935	3,768	7,191	3,423	28,634
1936 (estimated)	3,992	8,520	3,529	34,239

In other words, with the completion of the first 3 years of the new deal, the country will have run a combined deficit of almost $12,000,000,000 and will have increased the direct Federal debt from $22,539,000,000 to $34,239,000,000.

Contingent debt up

In addition to the rise in the direct debt, moreover, there has been a substantial increase in the contingent debt. On April 30 last the combined debt of the new deal alphabetical agencies guaranteed by the Government amounted to $3,731,000,000; that part not guaranteed totaled another $2,648,000,000. Even should there be no addition to this indirect debt between now and June 30 next the estimated gross Federal debt, direct and indirect, therefore, would be on that date $40,618,000,000.

The Government's gross debt before the United States entered the World War, on June 30, 1916, was $1,225,000,000. The peak war-time debt, reached June 30, 1919, was $25,482,000,000.

In setting forth his budgetary estimates for 1934 and 1935 the President predicted a deficit for the first of these years of $7,412,000,000 and for the second of $2,512,000,000. He expressed the belief that by 1936 both ordinary and extraordinary expenditures could be brought into balance with receipts and that the country would begin to reduce its debt.

A "balanced Budget"

The huge 1934 deficit was not realized because the administration overestimated its capacity to spend.

The 1935 deficit proved substantially higher than expected, however, because the administration overestimated the probable recovery in business. Its prediction of a deficit of $2,512,000,000 for 1935 and a balanced Budget by 1936 were based on a probable recovery of the business index of the Federal Reserve to 98 in 1935 and to normal or better the following year. Actually the index has run during the first 9 months of 1935 at 80 percent of normal instead of 98 percent.

As for 1936, instead of bringing a balanced Budget, it is now estimated that it will show the largest deficit of any year in the country's history. In his latest fiscal message the President dropped all reference to the question of the possibility of an early balancing of the Budget.

Economies are forgotten

So far as the Economy Act and associated legislation calculated to "restore the credit of the United States" are concerned, they have been quietly but thoroughly dismantled. Of the savings on veterans' expenditures, originally announced as $400,000,000, it is estimated that over $250,000,000 have been wiped out. Another $45,000,000 will be lopped off the latter total, moreover, if the McGill-Smith Spanish War pension bill is signed.

The so-called "public works" expenditures have merely been turned over to the "emergency" budget, while the pay cuts ordained for Government employees, amounting to $125,000,000, were completely restored as of April this year. Moreover, as the number and size of the Government's alphabetical bureaus have increased the number of employees has, of course, expanded. Employees in the civil executive branch of the Government in March 1933, when the new deal had come in, totaled 566,986; in May of this year the figure had reached 712,112, an increase of 145,126.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

IV. CURRENCY TINKERING

During his campaign for election Mr. Roosevelt declared that he favored a "sound currency."

Despite the fact that the phrase "sound currency" had meant something very precise in this country for 50 years—namely, a fully convertible gold standard—Mr. Roosevelt had been in office only a little more than 6 weeks when, on April 19, he announced that he had accepted the Thomas amendment to the farm bill, which put into his hands unprecedented discretionary powers for monetary inflation. Simultaneously he announced that an embargo had been placed on gold exports—that, in other words, the United States had voluntarily abandoned the gold standard.

This was the first time in history that a nation had deserted the gold standard at a time when it had a favorable foreign trade balance and abundant gold stocks. Our gold reserves at the time we abandoned the gold standard amounted to $4,300,000,000 and were the largest possessed by any nation in the world.

The powers which Mr. Roosevelt permitted the inflationist group in Congress to force upon him in the so-called "Thomas amendment" included the following:

1. Authority to reduce the gold content of the dollar by as much as 50 percent.

2. Authority to compel the Federal Reserve System to buy up to $3,000,000,000 in Federal securities. (This is the mechanism which was employed in the French and German post-war inflations.)

3. Authority to issue $3,000,000,000 in "greenbacks" (flat money) under the Civil War Emergency Act of 1862.

4. Authority to accept up to $100,000,000 on war-debt payments in the form of silver.

5. Authority to provide for the unlimited coinage of silver.

The Warren plan

On October 22, 1933, the midsummer boom in the commodity and security markets having spent itself, the President undertook the experiment in inflation by manipulation that is generally referred to as the Warren gold-buying scheme. This experiment was named after its author, one George F. Warren, a Cornell professor of farm production (agronomy), whose belief it was that commodity prices would rise pari passu with an arbitrary increase in the price of gold.

Professor Warren had been raised out of obscurity by the financially and politically powerful Committee for the Nation, an organization which was interested in furthering the cause of currency devaluation and which saw in his theories a superficially plausible economic justification for what they wished to see done. The so-called "Warren theory", so far as is known, had the support of no outstanding monetary economist, and when the buying scheme was started in October 1933 the move was vigorously protested by the Economists' National Committee on Monetary Policy, a large group of the foremost monetary experts in the United States. The theory has been rejected in its totality recently by the Brookings Institution.

When it became apparent after a test of a few days that the Warren theory did not and could not work, the Government entered the world market for the metal, making heavy purchases in London and Paris.

While ostensibly a projection of the Warren theory, this actually was nothing more or less than the deliberate depreciation of the American dollar in terms of other currencies. The crux of these operations was not the purchase of gold, but the purchase of foreign currencies which preceded it. Before long the fall in our own exchange became so great that a flight from the dollar got under way, manifesting itself in the Government bond market and in the foreign exchange market. On November 16, when the pound sterling had soared to $5.50, and when the general bond market was under severe pressure, the experiment was unofficially but completely abandoned.

Gold Act of 1934

What may be called the "official" termination of the gold buying—or, more properly, the dollar depreciation—campaign came at the end of January 1934, when Congress adopted the "59-cent dollar" and, under the terms of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, a new monetary system.

The main results of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 were these:

1. It socialized the country's monetary gold stocks and reduced them to a wholly theoretical position in the country's monetary system. While purporting to put the country on a "modernized gold standard," it actually did no such thing, since gold, under the act, is impounded in the Treasury and is obtainable only at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and then only for settling international commercial balances.

2. It gave the Executive power to monetize gold profits acquired through revaluation of the dollar and created a $2,000,000,000 "stabilization fund" under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury to be used to operate either in the foreign exchange market or the market for Government bonds. By transferring the control over to the Treasury and giving it this huge fund with which to operate in the markets, the act nullified at a stroke the independent monetary status of the Federal Reserve System and reduced it to the position of a mere appendage of the Treasury.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

V. "SOMETHING" FOR SILVER

The second major monetary policy of the administration, the silver purchase program, differs in degree, rather than in spirit, from the gold manipulation discussed here yesterday. If anything, it may be said to be slightly more fantastic and to contain an even larger ratio of politics to monetary science. Indeed, one will look in it in vain for much except politics.

On December 21, 1933, the President made an outright gift to the silver miners by instructing the Treasury by proclamation to accept all newly mined silver during the ensuing 4 years at a price to the producer (after seigniorage charges) of 64½ cents. In 1932, silver had fallen to 25 cents an ounce, so that this represented a rise of roughly 160 percent.

This move, while it might have been regarded as a great boon a year earlier, now merely served to whet the appetite of the silver and inflation group. This powerful political bloc succeeded in June 1934, in "persuading" the President to sign a silver purchase bill. The essence of that measure was that the Secretary of the Treasury was directed to buy silver in the world market until one of two things happened—until either (1) the price of silver reached $1.29 an ounce, or (2) the stock of monetary silver in this country equaled 25 percent of all "monetary metal" (gold and silver combined).

The first step in carrying out this program was taken on August 8, last year, when all domestic silver was called in, under a "nationalization" proclamation, at 50 cents an ounce. The Treasury then began to acquire bullion in the world markets.

The American Treasury's purchases drove the world price of silver up steadily, thanks largely to the knowledge by speculators of the enormous quantities that this country would have to buy to give effect to its program, until in the latter part of April it reached 81 cents. Meanwhile, domestic producers—whose price, it will be recalled, had been advanced by Government flat to the extent of a paltry 160 percent from its 1932 level—began to protest against "discrimination"; and to placate them the Treasury twice marked up arbitrarily the price of their product—first to 71 cents an ounce, then to 77.57 cents.

The latest figures available on silver purchases, covering the 10 months between the enactment of the law and the end of May 1935, show acquisitions of 421,497,000 ounces. This is nearly three times the estimated world production for that period, namely, 156,000,000 ounces. It represents somewhere between 14 and 17 years' American output.

At the time of the passage of the Silver Purchase Act it was estimated that in order to bring about the 1-to-3 ratio of silver to gold in American monetary stocks the Treasury would have to purchase, all told, about 1,300,000,000 ounces. Since then, however, approximately $1,152,000,000 in gold has been added to our monetary stocks, which means that the purchase of 300,000,000 ounces of silver will be required, over and above the estimates of 10 months ago. Despite the addition of 421,000,000 ounces of silver during the last 10 months, therefore, the Treasury is actually only 121,000,000 ounces nearer its goal than when it started. It is still committed to the purchase of the stupendous total of 1,180,000,000 ounces—the equivalent of the output of the entire world for 7½ years and of the American output for between 40 and 50 years.

Unfortunately, the objectionableness of the silver purchase program does not begin and end with the fact that it has no monetary purpose, but merely represents a gigantic subsidy to silver producers and silver speculators. If this were all, it would be a sufficient indictment of the policy, but it has had extremely serious and unfortunate repercussions on friendly countries in other parts of the world, and particularly on China.

Its effect on China

The effect of the violent rise in the price of silver from 25 cents an ounce in 1932 to 81 cents in 1935—a rise of more than 200 percent—has been to plunge China into the worst deflation and depression in many years. In recent months the Secretary of the Treasury has sought to maintain friendly relations with China by assurance that we would try to keep that country's interests in mind in carrying out our silver purchase program. At the same time he has let it be known for domestic consumption that he was still bent on carrying out his fantastic "mandate" from the silver bloc in Congress.

A conservative and ordinarily friendly foreign critic, the London Economist, recently summed up this unhappy episode in the following words:

"The truth is that President Roosevelt has been driven by an inchoate mass of vague bimetallist sentiment, cunningly kept alive by the 'silver lobby' and the Senators of the silver-producing States, and by economic advice that surely must have originated in Bedlam, into a sad mess. * * * The American silver policy has run amuck, but the ruin is falling on the heads of others."

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

VI. N. R. A., SUPREME EFFORT OF NEW DEAL

On signing the National Industrial Recovery Act on June 16, 1933, President Roosevelt described that measure as "the most important and far-reaching legislation ever enacted by the American Congress."

"It represents", said he, "a supreme effort to stabilize for all time the many factors which make for the prosperity of the Nation and the preservation of American standards.

"Its goal is the assurance of a reasonable profit to industry and living wages for labor, with the elimination of the piratical methods and practices which have not only harassed honest business but also contributed to the ills of labor."

Today the N. R. A. is dead—killed, not so much by the Supreme Court as because it was based on mistaken economic premises, was badly administered, and attempted the impossible as well as the undesirable.

The act itself bore the title "An act to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes."

Among these purposes were listed in title I "(1) to remove obstructions to the free flow of interstate and foreign commerce which tend to diminish the amount thereof; and (2) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups; (3) to induce and maintain united action of labor and management under adequate governmental sanctions and supervision; (4) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (5) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (6) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (7) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; (8) to reduce and relieve unemployment; (9) to improve standards of labor; and otherwise (10) to rehabilitate industry and to conserve natural resources."

Under the powers delegated to the President through the act he established the N. R. A. When this organization was launched it was announced that it would put 4,000,000 men back to work by autumn. The wage-raising policy, it was explained, would increase purchasing power and thus stimulate buying, which in turn would speed up recovery. With a crusading spirit reminiscent of the Liberty Loan drives in the war the people of the country as a whole were dragooned into supporting the N. R. A. It was even proposed that those employers who refused to join should be privately boycotted. The N. R. A. shortly became the keystone of the new-deal arch—even though it was labeled an emergency measure, with a life of 2 years. By its success or failure the fate of the new deal was to be measured.

How the N. R. A. functioned

Among the powers delegated to or assumed by the N. R. A. with Presidential approval were the regulation of wages and hours of work, the fixing of prices, the restriction of child labor, the arbitration of labor disputes, the regulation of monopolistic practices, and the control of production. Taken together, these involved drastic extensions of the field of government.

The N. R. A. operated through the so-called "codes", administered by an army of politically chosen bureaucrats, most of whom knew little about the industries with which they dealt. Upward of 500 codes were drafted, covering nearly all the principal industries in the country, including pretzels, pipe organs, and blue crabs.

Although the codes were drawn up in consultation with representatives of the affected industries, they followed no fixed pattern except in that they included the provisions of the famous section 7–A concerning the settlement of labor disputes. Some of the codes were "horizontal", and some "vertical." Others were characterized by the Brookings Institute as "straight-line" and even "circular." Space does not permit the amplification of their provisions. The essential fact is that they embodied methods of conduct of the coded industries, including hours of work, minimum wages, and, in certain cases, minimum prices. They regulated competition and in some cases controlled not only production but even replacement of machinery. "Compliance"—a "new deal" term for "enforcement"—was left to the code authorities, who could appeal for support to the courts and who, in a number of notorious incidents, had violators jailed and fined. The codes, after being accepted by the President, had the force of law, although no one knew what was in all the 10,000 pages of regulations which the code authorities issued, and often a business man was unaware that he was violating the law.

What did the N. R. A. do?

In the light of the moving purpose of the N. R. A.—to relieve unemployment and promote recovery—it is pertinent to examine the record and see what was actually achieved. On September 1, 1933, when the N. R. A. began to be effective, the number of unemployed in the country was estimated by the National Industrial Conference Board to be 9,920,000. On June 1, 1935, 2 days after the N. R. A. received its death sentence, the number of unemployed, according to this authority, was estimated to be 9,804,000. The number of unemployed, instead of being reduced by 4,000,000, as promised, fell little more than 100,000 in 21 months. During this period the Federal Reserve Boards' indexes of production rose from 84 to 85. In other words, recovery failed to materialize.

After an exhaustive study of the N. R. A. and its actual workings, the Brookings Institution reached the conclusion that the N. R. A., as a matter of fact, "on the whole retarded recovery." In this conclusion such a distinguished economic authority as Col. Leonard P. Ayres concurs, as do many other experts. In detail the Brookings Institution pointed out that while the N. R. A. was expected to promote recovery by enlarging the real purchasing power of certain classes of labor, it failed to do this because, instead of boosting wages but keeping down prices, it boosted prices as well as wages.

The institution's report states: "The internal readjustments in the cost and price structure which the N. R. A. effected were for the most part planless and haphazard. They retarded the restoration of parity for agricultural prices and the adjustment of construction costs to the demand for building. On the whole they were probably adverse to the revival of the capital-goods industries. As a means of securing favorable specific readjustments in the cost-price structure the N. R. A. as it actually operated was of very doubtful benefit."

To General Johnson belongs credit not so much for his ballyhooing the N. R. A. into existence as for having made a gallant attempt when the N. R. A. was launched to put through a $3,000,000,000 project of Government stimulation of durable goods (or capital goods) industries. General Johnson appreciated the force of what Colonel Ayres and others in the opposition pointed out early in 1933—that unemployment was much greater in the capital-goods industries than in the consumers-goods industries and that the great bulk of the unemployed could be put back to work only by the direct stimulation of the durable-goods industries. The administration, however, rejected the general's plan, clinging instead to the theory, which has since been proved to be fallacious, that all that was necessary was to stimulate the purchase of so-called "consumers' goods." Had the administration paid more attention to the general's views on the importance of helping the durable-goods industries and less to his passion for publicity the N. R. A. might have turned out as its sponsors hoped.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

VII. HELPING THE FARMERS

Candidate Roosevelt promised much, and President Roosevelt has done much, for the farmers. Most of the desired objectives which he outlined have been achieved. But in the process new problems have arisen with far-reaching implications.

Speaking at Topeka, Kans., during the campaign of 1932, Mr. Roosevelt outlined his farm program. He proposed reorganizing the Department of Agriculture. Instead, he has created a vast new bureaucracy to supervise American agriculture—the A. A. A. He favored withdrawal of marginal lands, based on a thorough soil survey. Lands are being purchased by the Government, but no thorough soil survey is being made. He urged reduction of farm taxes. As the Federal Government has no jurisdiction over farm taxes, nothing is being done. He advocated refinancing of farm mortgages through extension of Federal credit and lower interest rates. This has been done effectively. He urged restoration of the foreign markets for American farm products. Instead, his policies have lost some of the most important markets for American farm products. He urged the equivalent of a tariff benefit for farmers. This he has provided through the benefit payments based on the processing tax. He opposed dumping. Apart from a sale of 10,000,000 bushels of wheat to China at less than cost, there has been no dumping. He insisted that farm relief should be self-supporting. It is, as long as the processing taxes survive.

What the A. A. A. proposed

Shortly after taking office the A. A. A. (Agricultural Adjustment Administration) Act was made into law. In its introduction it declared the policy of Congress to be:

"(1) To establish and maintain such balance between the production and consumption of agricultural commodities and such marketing conditions therefor, as will reestablish prices to farmers at a level that will give agricultural commodities a purchasing power with respect to articles that farmers buy, equivalent to the purchasing power of agricultural commodities in the base period. The base period in the case of all agricultural commodities except tobacco shall be the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914. In the case of tobacco, the base period shall be the post-war period, August 1919–July 1929.

"(2) To approach such equality of purchasing power by gradual correction of the present inequalities therein at as rapid a rate as is deemed feasible in view of the current consumptive demand in domestic and foreign markets.

"(3) To protect the consumers' interest by readjusting farm production at such level as will not increase the percentage of the consumers' retail expenditures for agricultural commodities, or products derived therefrom, which is returned to the farmer, above the percentage which was returned to the farmer in the pre-war period, August 1909–July 1914."

What the A. A. A. did

The A. A. A. proceeded to attain its objectives by a combination of means. At the beginning crop reduction was effected by paying farmers to plough under lands already planted, and by killing pigs. This system was followed by contracts with the farmers who produced the major crops in which in return for agreement to plant a lower acreage, the Government paid them a so-called "benefit." The original crops thus affected were wheat, corn, tobacco, and cotton. But the political pressure from the growers of other crops to receive checks from the Government for reducing their production was so great that during the 2 years of existence of the A. A. A., practically all crops in the country, including fruits and vegetables, have been brought within the range of operation of the A. A. A.

Price raising was not, however, achieved alone by restriction of production. In the case of cotton the Government agreed to make loans to cotton growers at a rate well in excess of the market price and the world price. The result was that farmers found it more profitable to impound their crops as security for Government loans than to sell them. This effectively raised the local price for cotton—and lost the farmers a large part of their foreign markets.

Not content with this, the President devalued the dollar and started manipulating its gold content in the confident expectation that he could thus force up the domestic prices of farm products. The resulting fear and uncertainty as to the possibilities of inflation created an unnatural demand for commodities which temporarily added to the rise in farm prices.

On top of this came the drought which accentuated the shortage of wheat, corn, and hogs induced by drastic crop curtailments. The combination of these factors materially affected prices.

But it is interesting to note that, with the exception of hogs, the main price increases from the low of the winter of 1932–33 occurred before, rather than after, the A. A. A. became effective. The following table tells the story:

	1933		1934		1935
	March	July	March	July	May	April
Corn (bushel)	0.13	0.47	0.37	0.51	0.82	----------
Hogs (hundredweight)	3.20	3.95	3.80	4.00	8.40	----------
Wheat (bushel)	.48	1.00	.88	.95	----------	1.13
Cotton (pound)	.061	.106	.117	.123	----------	.117

Even though the purchasing power of the farmers has not yet reached the equivalent of the 1909–14 base period, farm prices have already passed the pre-war levels. In March 1933 the Department of Agriculture's index of farm prices based on the 1909–14 average was 50 (for all groups). In April 1935 (the latest available figure) it was 111.

At the same time valuable work has been done to relieve the farm mortgage situation. Through the organization of the Farm Credit Administration the various land banks and lending agencies were coordinated and a total of about $2,000,000,000 advanced to the farmers. This has taken care of most of the farm mortgages that were in difficulties.

Furthermore, in applying the A. A. A. act, upward of $727,000,000 has been paid to the farmers as subsidies. These payments have helped farmers catch up on defaulted interest and tax arrears and also stimulated purchases of motor cars, radios, and all manner of retail goods. The farmers as a whole, apart from the tenant farmers in the South, are doing well. Farm prices are much above those which prevailed in the winter of 1932–33. More Government cash is in sight. Some farmers are being paid for what they do not produce, and others for promising to reduce production but receiving permission after all to increase their output. Gratitude, which has been defined as "a lively sense of benefits to come", is being freely expressed by the benefited farmers toward the Roosevelt administration. They appreciate cash and higher prices and deprecate the resentment of consumers who have to pay at least a quarter more for food now than when the new deal came into power.

VIII. THE PRICE OF FARM AID

In bringing about higher prices for the farmers the Roosevelt administration has unsettled business confidence by tampering with the dollar; has saddled business men and the consuming public with a new tax which is collected not for the general support of the Government but to be handed over by the Government to individual farmers as subsidies; it has sharply reduced the exports of American farm products; and it has built up a vast new bureaucracy with extensive powers to control agriculture.

The effects of currency instability have already been discussed elsewhere. (See article IV in this series.)

The processing tax, according to its supporters, is the equivalent of a protective tariff for the farmers. The Brookings Institution, however, has pointed out that no tariff duty assures the protected producers of returns enhanced to the full extent of the duty on most of the output consumed domestically. Speaking specifically of the wheat processing tax, the Brookings Institution report states that "in no other instance have consumers faced the necessity of paying prices enhanced by the combined influence of a tariff duty and production restructions, plus an internal-revenue tax for the benefit of producers, as under the present wheat program."

Judging by the decision handed down in the Federal circuit court in Boston, the processing taxes are likely to be held unconstitutional. They are collected at present on cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rye, and numerous other articles.

The loss of foreign markets for American farm products

Before the depression the United States sold abroad about one-half of its cotton output, a third of its tobacco, a third of its lard, and a quarter of its wheat. It is, of course, true that American exports of farm products to Europe had fallen off sharply in 1931 and 1932, due almost entirely to the various restrictive measures imposed over and above tariffs. But since the A. A. A. has begun to function effectively (June 1933) the volume of the principal export crops has undergone a further and in some cases drastic decline. While comparable figures for the 12 months beginning July 1933, and July 1934 are not yet available, the figures for 10 months (July to April) show that in the period ended April 1935 the exports of lard were only 208,400,000 pounds, compared to 439,800,000 pounds in the 10 months ended April 1934; shipments of wheat were down to 3,000,000 bushels from 16,800,000; flour remained stationary at 3,300,000 barrels; unmanufactured tobacco was down to 342,800,000 pounds from 411,600,000; cotton fell to 4,300,000 bales from 7,300,000.

These losses are almost entirely due to the artificially higher prices of farm products in America than abroad. It stands to reason that foreign buyers will get their raw materials wherever they are cheapest. Certainly they will not buy American cotton, wheat, and tobacco in such large quantities as previously, when these articles are selling well above world prices. If the present policies are continued long enough it is more than likely that the losses of America's foreign markets will be permanent. This in turn is almost certain to necessitate a permanent readjustment in the agricultural life of the country, affecting not only the growers of corn, cotton, tobacco, and wheat, but those who produce other goods which will necessarily suffer when tobacco, wheat, corn, and cotton lands are put into other crops.

The extent to which the Government has reached out to control agriculture is best summed up by Prof. Charles A. Beard. In his study of the new deal called "The Future Comes" he said of the farm-control program that "the Government has so penetrated the institutions and procedures of the industry, from the highest national groupings to the smallest local units throughout the land, as to gather into its hands absolute control over every act of production, processing, manufacturing, and marketing of practically all agricultural and associated commodities. Within the framework of the land-bank system it has established a network of banks and credit institutions adequate to meet almost every conceivable need for agricultural finance and credit. If developed and not upset, this alone may come to mean the end of the private financing of agricultural operations and the abolition of speculation purely for profit in agricultural products. The program affirms the determination of the administration to organize agriculture from the soil to the market, which is a first essential step toward gearing agricultural productivity to effective consumptive capacity within the Nation."

More specifically, under the amendments to the A. A. A. the Federal Government now has the power to limit the quantity of farm products which may be marketed at any one time; to fix the quantities of farm products which each processor or distributor may acquire; to establish minimum prices; and to dispose of any surplus in such manner as the A. A. A. bureaucrats desire. They also empower the A. A. A. to examine all books, papers, and other confidential documents of the processors and distributors. Furthermore, the processing tax may be imposed even after prices pass parity.

This means in plain English that the Federal Government, through the A. A. A., is extending its powers to control the economic activities of a whole section of the country. This is a direct experiment in planned economy, and planned economy is a form of economic dictatorship. The extension of the Federal Government's powers and the strengthening of the executive department are thus no longer a matter of theory but an accomplished fact. It remains to be seen what the Supreme Court will do about these changes in the distribution and exercise of Government powers and the extension of the Federal executive into fields from which it has heretofore always been rigidly excluded.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

IX. T. V. A., NEW-DEAL SYMBOL

The Tennessee Valley Authority was set up under an act of Congress passed on May 18, 1933. According to the preamble of that act, it had three main purposes: First, to improve the Tennessee Valley in respect to navigation and flood control; second, to develop the agriculture and industries of the valley region; and third, to operate the Government-owned power plant at Muscle Shoals which had been built during the war but never used.

T. V. A. is not an isolated Federal power project. It is but one of nine major enterprises that are either under way or in contemplation. When the entire program has been completed, it is estimated, the power-production capacity of the country will have been raised from the present figure of 33.5 million kilowatts to 44.4 million, or roughly, three times the national consumption of power in the year 1932. The particular importance of T. V. A. derives from the fact that it is the first of these projects to get under way and from the fact that it is the outstanding symbol of the new-deal philosophy concerning the relation between the Government and the power industry.

Two quotations will help to indicate what that philosophy is. One of them is from the President's speech at Portland, Oreg., on September 22, 1932; the other is taken from the official statement of policy of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Said the President, in referring to the several power projects planned by the new-deal government:

"Each of these will be a national yardstick to prevent extortion against the public." * * *

Said the statement of the T. V. A.:

"The right of a community to own and operate its own power plant is undeniable. The fact that action by the authority might have an adverse economic effect on a privately owned utility should be a matter for the serious consideration of the board, but it should not be the determining factor."

It will be seen from the President's statement that he regards the T. V. A. not only as a yardstick but as a special kind of yardstick—a yardstick which can be used both as a means of measuring the cost of power production and as a cudgel. The implication is clear—and becomes clearer on reading the T. V. A.'s own statement of policy—that if the private companies do not meet the rates of these "yardsticks" they will have to face Government, or Government-sponsored, competition. In effect, T. V. A. lays down the principle that private-property rights will be respected, but only up to the point where they collide with the new deal's concept of "the more abundant life."

The chief justification of this policy of "regulation by intimidation" is, according to its advocates, that it has in certain cases "produced results." Not the least of the "results" that have flowed from the policy thus far, however, has been the ruinous depreciation it has brought to the public-utility security holders of the country. A recent estimate places these losses at $3,500,000,000.

One example may be cited to show how this policy works out in practice. Last summer the Tennessee Valley Authority sought to acquire a private company in Knoxville—the Tennessee Public Service Co. Armed with the threat of the establishment of a municipal plant, the T. V. A. approached this company—capitalized at $17,780,000—with an offer of $6,000,000. The utility company declined to sell at first, but T. V. A. carried the day by arranging with the P. W. A. to allot the municipality $2,600,000—$600,000 of which was an outright gift—for the construction of its plant. It is interesting to note that shortly before that the State board of the P. W. A. had refused to lend any money to the city on the ground that the latter's credit did not justify a loan.

T. V. A. has openly encouraged and abetted the movement for public ownership, with the result that it has now displaced private utilities in 14 counties and 9 municipalities in Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee.

Nor does the competition of the T. V. A. with private industry begin and end with the utilities themselves. The blow at the bituminous coal industry is a serious one, while the railroads stand to suffer not only through the competition of the Tennessee Valley's Government-subsidized inland waterways, but from the loss of potential coal traffic. It is estimated that if the prospective power output of the T. V. A. plants were produced by the use of coal it would require the production of 6,000,000 tons of coal and its movement by railroad.

Not the least of the indictments against T. V. A., it may be pointed out in passing, is that it represents technocracy in its finest flowering. Experts contend that power could be produced in this region, with its rich coal deposits, not only at 60 percent of the cost required by hydro, but with the employment of 10 times as much labor.

Next in importance to the fact that T. V. A. represents outright competition with private capital and private industry is the total lack of sincerity behind the claim that it constitutes a genuine "yardstick" for the ascertainment of fair power rates.

The average wholesale rate charged by T. V. A. at Muscle Shoals is 7 mills a kilowatt-hour, and the average retail rate is 2 cents, which is a little less than half the average rate prevailing throughout the United States. The theory of the yardstick contention is that if T. V. A. can produce power to sell at these rates private utility companies can do the same thing.

The fact is that the two things are not comparable. In the first place, the T. V. A. is financed by the Government, which obviously can raise money at a lower rate than a private borrower. In the second place, T. V. A. enjoys a distinct advantage so far as taxes are concerned. The act provides that a tax of 5 percent of the gross proceeds of the sale of power shall be paid the State in which the dam is located. The president of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation has estimated, however, that against this 5 percent paid by the T. V. A. on the wholesale price of the energy produced, private companies in the same area are paying 15 to 20 percent of the retail price.

A third point has to do with the bookkeeping methods of the T. V. A. It was revealed in the records of the Comptroller General's office that the authority had been indulging in variations of two of the worst cost-accounting evils of which the private companies have been accused in the past. The utilities have been charged more than once with padding their valuation figures and charging excessive amounts to depreciation, both with the idea of justifying a high rate level. It is now shown that T. V. A. in an effort to keep its rates low, has been employing the opposite tactics—grossly undervaluing its plant and making insufficient allowance for depreciation.

Finally, the municipalities which retail the power of T. V. A.—for T. V. A. does a wholesale business only—enjoy an advantage on their own account over their competitors, the private companies. They receive 30 percent of the cost of their plants as an outright gift and are permitted to repay the rest on convenient terms while they are not required to pay either Federal, State, or municipal taxes.

In other words, T. V. A. is not actually a yardstick at all. Its directors admitted as much themselves during the deliberations recently on the proposed amendments to the act when they vigorously resisted efforts to compel them to put their bookkeeping on a basis comparable with that of private companies. Under the pretext of functioning as a yardstick, T. V. A. is, in fact, carrying out what the eminent authority on such matters—Mr. Norman Thomas—has described as "the only genuinely socialistic experiment in the 'new deal.'"

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

X. RELIEF AND REEMPLOYMENT

In his Budget message of January 1935 President Roosevelt estimated that the new deal would have spent by this June about $4,200,000,000 on F. E. R. A. and lesser forms of direct relief and about $1,900,000,000 on P. W. A. and other public-works projects, a grand total of upward of $6,000,000,000.

What have been the net results of these expenditures in reducing unemployment and cutting down the relief rolls?

The number of unemployed when the new deal came into office totaled, according to the National Industrial Conference Board, 13,300,000, and the number of cases on relief stood at 4,500,000. This, however, was partly the reflection of an abnormal and temporary situation, in which the closing of the banks had totally prostrated industry and trade. In May, 2 months later, and after the banks had reopened, this figure had fallen to 12,700,000, the approximate level at which it had been in the final months of the Hoover administration. This figure may fairly be accepted, therefore, as measuring the reemployment problem with which the new deal was confronted.

In May of this year the unemployment figure of the Conference Board (which considers P. W. A. workers not as on relief but as employed) stood at 9,700,000. The measure of progress in solving the reemployment problem, therefore, would appear to be the placing of 3,000,000 persons. However, this can scarcely be attributed to the pump-priming activities of the administration; for virtually all of the reemployment had taken place within the first few months of the new deal. Speaking broadly, the unemployment problem remains approximately where it was in the fall of 1933.

As for relief, the published figures have shown a considerable drop since the winter of 1934–35. The June total of 3,800,000 cases shows the relief burden, however, about as great as it was at this time in 1933 and well above the low of 3,500,000 to which it fell in the fall of that year.

When President Roosevelt took office, relief was being dealt with by the States and localities, variously financed by taxation and borrowing. The States and municipalities were clamoring for Federal aid, and with the act of May 12, setting up the F. E. R. A., the new deal responded on a lavish scale. By this act the Federal Government was plunged directly into relief as general overlord of the State and local systems.

As its title suggests, F. E. R. A. was an emergency device, and no attempt was made to build a permanent national relief system, with permanent policies, standards, and methods of financing. Instead, the new deal attacked the problem on the opposite flank. On June 16 the Recovery Act was passed, carrying $3,300,000,000 for public works. While Mr. Hopkins disbursed stop-gap subsidies to the States and municipalities, Mr. Ickes was to prime the pump by expenditures on public works.

When the 1933 summer boom in business, stimulated largely by inflation hopes, expired, both the unemployment and relief figures, which had declined during this hectic period, began to rise again. It was about this time that the President seems to have fallen under the spell of that persuasive advocate of public spending, the British economist, Maynard Keynes, and on November 8 he came out with his C. W. A. experiment. This was to be a great splash of pump priming; it was to effect a fundamental change in the relief system, cut the rolls, carry the country through the winter, and put enough buying power into circulation to launch the Nation on a tide of prosperity.

The new deal poured $800,000,000 into this experiment in pushing leaves, teaching tap dancing, and boondoggling, and at its peak it did employ 4,100,000 persons. But it succeeded in reducing relief rolls by only 1,000,000; no sweeping trade recovery made its appearance; and by the end of February it had become abundantly clear that the administration had simply been pouring its money into a bottomless pit. By April this device had been abandoned, and work relief was once more handed back to the States and municipalities.

Relief rolls naturally rose again as they received back the C. W. A. workers; the new total, however, was not merely the 3,500,000 of the preceding October, but nearly 4,500,000—about equal to the burden when the new deal came into office. Moreover, two other evidences of weakness began to be apparent. One of these was that States and localities were now showing a tendency to let the Government carry them; the other was that as relief, in consequence of this, gravitated into the hands of the Federal Government it was becoming more and more costly.

In 1933 the Federal Government contributed 60.6 percent of the total F. E. R. A. expenditures, but by 1934 the average had risen to 72.3 percent and was still rising at the year end. Some States by this time had virtually ceased to pay anything toward relief expense. Step by step with this tendency relief costs rose, mounting from $15.40 per capita in July 1933 to $34 per capita in December last year. The net result of C. W. A. seems to have been to disorganize the local relief systems, leaving the latter handicapped by the removal of the needs test and farther off than ever from a permanent program of their own.

Meanwhile Mr. Ickes' pump-priming experiment, after a slow start, reached its peak in August of last year, when it was reported to be employing directly 675,000 persons. Large estimates (mostly guesswork) were being hazarded as to the numbers employed by P. W. A. behind the lines, and there were further generous estimates of the number reemployed under N. R. A. But the unemployment figures of the Conference Board, which had fallen 10,000,000 in the autumn of 1933, never fell below 9,200,000 in the summer of 1934. The net gain, in other words, seems to have been just about the amount of the direct employment effected by P. W. A.

With the approach of the winter of 1934–35—despite the fact that the new deal had appropriated $3,400,000,000 for the F. E. R. A., C. W. A., C. C. C., and other forms of direct relief, and $3,000,000,000 for public works—unemployment and relief figures again began to mount. And again the new deal chose to meet the situation, not with a fundamental solution but with a dramatic gesture and more billions. When Congress convened in January, the President announced that of the 5,000,000 on relief, 1,500,000 were unemployables and that the States henceforth would be held responsible for them. Meanwhile the Government would make jobs for the other 3,500,000. He asked a blanket appropriation of $880,000,000 to carry the system through July 1 of this year, and for the fiscal year 1935–36 he asked a blanket sum of $4,000,000,000. This, he said, would provide jobs for the 3,500,000 of employables. What was to happen beyond that was left, presumably, to the hoped-for business recovery.

The program as finally worked out, however, bears little resemblance to the prospectus. In the first place, it became entangled at the outset in a controversy between the pump-priming school, as represented by Mr. Ickes, and the relief school, represented by Mr. Hopkins. In the middle of the debate figures were produced to show that the original plan rested for its success on a mathematical impossibility. Mr. Roosevelt had promised, in introducing the plan, that he would do away with leaf raking and provide jobs in useful public works. But his estimate of the cost allowed but $1,140 an employable. This left little over for wages after payment for land, materials, and overhead, which, according to British experience, account for 60 percent of the costs of this type of project. The controversy finally was settled by roughly dividing the $4,000,000,000 between the Hopkins form of relief and that of Mr. Ickes. Meanwhile the controversy has held up all plans, spreading confusion among States and localities, and has left the whole scheme in chaos.

To sum up, although approximately $6,000,000,000 have been spent by the new deal in relief and pump priming—on top, of course, what the States have spent—and although provision has been made for the outlay of another $4,000,000,000, unemployment remains around the level of the fall of 1933, while the relief rolls have not only increased numerically but have increased sensationally in cost per capita. To make matters worse, the reemployment program still represents a formless conglomeration of public works, work relief, and home relief. There is, after the passage of more than 2 years, no unified relief system. Relief remains in a state of chaos. It is not only based on a program of temporary deficit financing, but remains completely unrelated either to the industrial problem or the general strategy of economic recovery.

XI. HOT-WEATHER TAXATION

When President Roosevelt abandoned his oft-repeated campaign promise of reducing expenditures and began borrowing billions, it was obvious that not only would future generations have to pay for this borrowing but that taxes would have to be increased enormously as soon as he stopped borrowing if current expenditures were to be met out of current revenues. Certain minor increases in Federal taxes were made in the first 2 years of the administration. These included a progressive increase in the surtax on incomes over $4,000, excess-profits and capital-stock taxes for corporations, liquor taxes, and a renewal of the so-called "nuisance taxes", of which more than half affected automobiles directly or indirectly, and others included such items as cosmetics and telephones. All of these revenues taken together served, as already explained in the third article of this series, to cover only the ordinary expenses of the Government. No efforts were made to increase taxes enough to pay even for part of the extraordinary expenditures. In fact, in his Budget message of January 6, 1935, the President stated expressly that he did not consider it advisable to propose any new or additional taxes for 1936 other than the extension of the nuisance taxes.

Six months later—on June 7, 1935, to be exact—when one of the reporters at the White House press conference asked if any new taxes were being considered the President stated that he had given no thought to taxation for more than a month.

On June 19 the President abruptly submitted to Congress a special message urging increased inheritance, estate, and corporation taxes. In this message he stated categorically that "these complicated and difficult questions cannot be adequately debated in the time remaining in the present session of Congress."

Although surprised at this sudden change of front, the country noted with reassurance his clear indication that these projected measures, of such far-reaching importance, were not to be taken up during the current session of Congress.

Speculation as to what the President's vague proposals really implied was not lessened when it became known that he had not considered them in detail and that the Treasury had prepared no estimates showing the expected revenue. Political commentators were not slow in pointing out that, whatever its value as a revenue measure, the President's proposal served a threefold aim—to divert attention from the unhappy consequences of the Supreme Court's decisions, to appropriate HUEY LONG'S share-the-wealth nostrum, and to embarrass those Republicans who had been criticizing the President for not adopting a pay-as-you-go policy. The proposal had the further political merit of soaking the rich—always a popular pastime in American politics.

Senator LONG, apparently unwilling to see his thunder stolen without a fight, joined with the insurgents in demanding immediate passage of share-the-wealth tax measures. This was on June 22. Two days later, however, the Democratic Senate leader, Mr. ROBINSON, explained that the President's tax proposal would not be rushed through in the present session.

That same evening Messrs. ROBINSON, HARRISON, and other Democratic leaders were called to the White House for a long conference. On emerging, Senator ROBINSON, standing on the White House steps, made the following statement to the press:

"At the conference attended by the Vice President; the Speaker of the House; the Chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator HARRISON; the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Representative DOUGHTON; and Senator ROBINSON, it was decided to press for action on the recommendations of the President as to amendments of the tax law during the present session.

"Senator HARRISON will ask his committee to consider the subject with a view to proposing amendments to the joint resolution extending certain taxes and with a view to adding the amendments to the resolution. Good night, gentlemen."

Inasmuch as the joint resolution referred to had to be passed before the end of the week unless the taxes were to expire, this meant that the new tax measures would also have to be passed by the end of the week.

Criticism of trying thus to jam such important legislation through Congress without adequate study, discussion, or hearings was Nation-wide and vehement. In spite of this the President's spokesmen in the Senate worked to force through the measure. Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky, in working with Messrs. ROBINSON and HARRISON, was in the act of explaining to the Senate that the plan was to attach the amendments to the joint resolution when word came that the President in his conference with the press a few minutes earlier had flatly and indignantly denied that he had ever said that his tax measures must be passed within the week. Senator BARKLEY later sought unsuccessfully to have his remarks expunged.

Senator HARRISON took the blame for this misunderstanding. The country warmly applauded the Senator's sportsmanship, and did not fail to take note that the President had waited almost 48 hours before disavowing his spokesmen or halting them in carrying out his intentions. It is inconceivable that Mr. Roosevelt was as little aware of the impression made 2 days previously by the announcement from the White House steps as he later was of the Rhode Island election. Instead of dropping the red-hot poker, he handed it to one of his most loyal supporters.

The situation was further complicated by the fact that, when the Treasury officials worked all night long to prepare their first estimates showing a yield of $340,000,000, competent authorities seriously questioned them. Representative HILL of the Ways and Means Committee said on July 5 that the proposed taxes could not yield more than $110,000,000. Three days later Secretary Morgenthau published figures showing possible yields varying between $118,000,000 and $901,000,000.

The House later drew up a bill calling for revenue of $270,000,000. Of this $45,000,000 was to come from increased taxes on incomes of $50,000 a year and over; $80,000,000 was to come from inheritance taxes running up to 75 percent of $10,000,000 or over; $24,000,000 was to come from taxes on gifts; $15,000,000 from increases in the corporation-income taxes; and $100,000,000 from excess-profits taxes.

When the increased income taxes for the very rich and the inheritance taxes came in for particularly bitter criticism the President called together the press and ridiculed the 58 thriftiest Americans whose incomes were in the millions and who had paid no taxes on a third of their income because they had put it into tax-exempt securities. Instead of making drastic efforts to put an end to tax-exempt securities, the President, by thus arousing mass passions against the very wealthy, sought to intimidate them from further protests against his tax measures.

To all criticisms that his tax measures failed to provide the desired revenues and evaded the only effective means of reaching this end—namely, by increasing the taxes all down the line—the President paid no attention. Even if the House soak-the-thrifty measure passes it will be only a drop in the Budget-balancing bucket.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

XII. PROMISES PERFORMED

Few fair-minded persons will deny the Roosevelt administration credit for hastening the repeal of prohibition, inaugurating a sound naval policy, and vetoing the soldiers' bonus bill. In addition, the President's handling of the bank crisis after he came into office did much to restore confidence at a time when this was of utmost importance. This was followed by invaluable relief of the financial distress of individuals and corporations. In particular, the farm-mortgage aid program and the home-owners' loan project helped to prevent foreclosures on several billion dollars of mortgages, thus tiding over the emergency and making it possible not only for individuals to hold their property but for life-insurance companies, banks, and other similar institutions to realize on their credits.

In addition, the securities-exchange regulations, since being drastically modified from the original proposals of the "brain trusters", promise to be useful. Although the so-called "Social Security Act" bears evidence of too little study and is unsatisfactory in its present form, it represents an earnest effort to redeem a campaign pledge and to effect a social reform which in the opinion of many competent authorities has long been overdue.

Repeal of prohibition was one of the promises in the Democratic platform. So strong was the sentiment in favor of repeal that even before Mr. Roosevelt came into office Congress passed a joint resolution embodying the text of the twentieth amendment. This was submitted to the Secretary of State on February 21, 1933. Shortly after coming into office Mr. Roosevelt gave his support to the movement to speed up ratification of the amendment by the States and had the satisfaction of seeing, on December 5, 1933, the requisite number of ratifications deposited with the Secretary of State and the amendment come into effect.

Due probably to his long service as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, President Roosevelt early in his administration undertook to make up the deficiencies in naval strength resulting from the failure of the three previous administrations to build up the Navy to treaty strength. With his approval a large replacement program was inaugurated and construction begun or planned on a total of 66 vessels of different categories. The President's personal interest in the Navy materially improved the morale of the fighting forces, and his assignment of various public funds for naval construction hastened the naval-replacement program. His refusal to be stampeded by sentimentalists who sought to prevent the holding of naval maneuvers in the Pacific showed that in this field also his approach was realistic and sound.

One of the most courageous and valuable acts of the President was his veto of the bonus bill. Although he had a precedent for this in the acts of Messrs. Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, it was particularly difficult for Mr. Roosevelt to veto the bonus because of the fact that when he did so he was already embarked upon a policy of reckless extravagance, pouring out money for almost every purpose. Under the circumstances the pressure to give the boys their share was great.

Undaunted by this, Mr. Roosevelt not only vetoed the bonus bill but accompanied his veto by a message that was outstanding for its clarity, force, and conviction. He outlined his policy of doing everything possible for the war wounded but denied the special claim of those who had suffered no injury to receive an extra payment from the Government. Furthermore, he pointed out the dangers of inflation involved in carrying out the bill and made very clear, for the first time in his career, the importance of avoiding inflation at any and all costs. Even though this statement was to a certain extent offset by the inflationary measures which he had sanctioned and acts which he had performed, the country was relieved to have from him in writing such a clear-cut and unequivocal statement of the inflation peril.

The value of Mr. Roosevelt's work in restoring the Nation's morale early in March 1933, must not be underrated. At a time when fear and confusion of mind were wide-spread, he inspired confidence and revived hope. Even had he done nothing else, the Nation would remain in his debt for this service.

Less noticeable and more local in its effects has been the program of debt relief. Through the R. F. C., which had already been functioning under Mr. Hoover, President Roosevelt helped numerous railroads and corporations. Through the F. C. A. and other agencies he took up the refinancing of farm mortgages. Through the H. O. L. C. he brought relief to city, town, and suburban property owners. Although this action was open to criticism on the ground of preventing the full sweep of the forces of deflation, there can be no doubt that it allayed fear and distrust, helped many worthy people, and alleviated the distress of banks and insurance companies.

The S. E. C. promises useful service in the regulation of the securities markets. The new social-security law, even though it is obviously full of defects, is at least a beginning of much-needed social legislation. The objectionable features may be ironed out in years to come, but a start has been made in the right direction. Even in this there has been delay and needless obstruction due to the insistence on mixing ideas of social reform with much-needed practical measures. But in these instances there are no indications of broken promises. Many persons may disagree with the methods adopted, but the objectives have not been abandoned when they seemed unpopular, and the measures have been carried through without undue emphasis on political expediency.

THE ROOSEVELT RECORD

XIII. GOVERNMENT BY USURPATION

"If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way in which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed.

"GEORGE WASHINGTON."

"I, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States, so help me God."—Oath of office as President taken by Franklin Delano Roosevelt on March 4, 1933

"I hope your committee will not permit doubts as to the constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation." (From a letter which President Roosevelt wrote on Saturday, July 6, 1935, to the chairman of a subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, SAMUEL B. HILL, urging the passage of the Guffey-Snyder coal bill.)

President Roosevelt revealed an extraordinary attitude toward the Supreme Court of the United States as long ago as his 1932 campaign. He used at Baltimore, on October 25, as an interpolation in a prepared speech, the following words:

"After March 4, 1929, the Republican Party was in complete control of all branches of the Government—the legislative, with the Senate and Congress, and the executive departments, and I may add for full measure, to make it complete, the United States Supreme Court as well."

Typical of the reaction at the time was the comment by Silas H. Strawn, of Chicago, former president of the American Bar Association. Said he:

"I am amazed that any reputable member of the bar who, in order to obtain his license to practice, swears that he will uphold the Constitution and laws of the land should make that statement, which strikes at the very foundation of our Government. All lawyers and every layman who has even a superficial knowledge of the facts knows that there never has been and never can be any politics in our Supreme Court and that no political party could control the actions of the Court. I submit that such a charge will be resented by everyone who believes that the stability of our Government depends upon maintaining the respect and regard of our people for the dignity of our Supreme Court."

The utterance naturally attracted considerable attention; but it remained for later events to develop its real signifiance. These events began with the passage of the new-deal legislation, concentrating unprecedented powers at Washington and in the President, and reached a climax in the President's reaction to recent important decisions by the Supreme Court holding large elements of the Roosevelt program to be unconstitutional.

The atmosphere of emergency and haste in which the first of the new-deal laws were drafted and hurried through Congress made any serious consideration of their constitutionality impossible. Eminent lawyers may have had little question of what the Supreme Court must ultimately hold. But the Attorney General obliged with opinions sustaining the legality of the program, and the President may well have believed these views to be correct. The most that can be said in criticism of the administration during this period was that in its enthusiasm for installing a planned economy operated from Washington it gave inadequate consideration to the constitutional problems inherent in the change.

Those problems center around two fundamentals of the American system. The one is the principle of home rule embodied in the Federal scheme of the Government, whereby the Federal powers are carefully limited and the bulk of governmental control is reserved to the several States. The second is the careful separation of governmental powers at Washington and their division among three coequal branches of government—legislative, executive, and judicial. This latter principle was avowedly and directly aimed to prevent the usurpation of power by a tyrannical Executive. Its vital importance to the democracy, enabling a courageous and independent judiciary to halt a reckless Executive well on his way toward obliterating State lines and concentrating power at Washington and in his own hands, was never so well illustrated as by recent events.

The revolutionary laws hurriedly enacted to place control of industry and agriculture in the hands of a bureaucracy at Washington inevitably clashed with these two principles. The only possible authority for such centralized control lay in the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution; and this clause by a long series of clear and consistent decisions had always been construed as excluding from Federal control the processes of manufacture, etc., that took place within a State and did not directly affect interstate commerce. As for a great bureaucracy, its creation necessarily vastly extended the powers of the executive at the expense of the legislative.

There were undoubtedly legal minds in the administration who foresaw this inevitable clash. It has frequently been asserted that it was Prof. Felix Frankfurter, of the Harvard Law School, who persuaded the President to postpone as long as possible a definitive decision by the Supreme Court of the legal issues involved. Whether this report is accurate or not, such was the policy adopted. If the Government had expedited the litigation, a test might have come early in 1934. It was not, in fact, until May 27, 1935, that the Schechter poultry case gave the inevitable death sentence to N. I. R. A.—the supreme effort of the new deal.

For that decision the nine Justices of the Court voted unanimously. If any answer was needed to Mr. Roosevelt's conception of the Court as a politically controlled body, here it was. The Democratic members of the Court united with the Republicans, and the liberals with the conservatives, in the findings.

These sentences from the Schechter opinion indicate how flatly N. I. R. A. clashed with the Federal system and exceeded the powers of the interstate-commerce clause:

"If the commerce clause were construed to reach all enterprises and transactions which could be said to have an indirect effect upon interstate commerce, the Federal authority would embrace practically all the activities of the people and the authority of the State over its domestic concerns would exist only by sufferance of the Federal Government."

* * * * * * *

"It is not the province of the Court to consider the economic advantages or disadvantages of such a centralized system. It is sufficient to say that the Federal Constitution does not provide for it."

The unconstitutionality of the effort by Congress to surrender its law-making powers to the Executive was thus described:

"Section 3 of the Recovery Act is without precedent. It supplies no standards for any trade, industry, or activity. It does not undertake to prescribe rules of conduct to be applied to particular States of fact determined by appropriate administrative procedure. Instead of prescribing rules of conduct, it authorizes the making of codes to prescribe them. * * * In view of the scope of that broad declaration, and of the nature of the few restrictions that are imposed, the discretion of the President in approving or prescribing codes, and thus enacting laws for the government of trade and industry throughout the country, is virtually unfettered. We think that the code-making authority thus conferred is an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power."

As part of the picture of the powers which Congress thus sought to delegate to an executive bureaucracy a summary of Lawmaking by Executive Order, recently prepared by the American Liberty League, is pertinent. The extent of these powers was characterized as "unprecedented" and "unbelievable." Executive orders issued between March 1933 and July 1935 numbered more than 1,250. Administrative orders issued by officials pursuant to Executive orders ran into the thousands. The American Bar Association committee estimated that N. R. A. alone had produced more than 10,000 pages of administrative law in a single year. Executive orders had created 50 new agencies and departments, from the Resettlement Administration to the Electric Home and Farm Authority. The pamphlet of the Liberty League concludes as follows:

"The examples of Executive orders which have been cited show clearly a usurpation of legislative power. By no stretch of the imagination can many of these orders be regarded merely as ministerial acts in execution of laws enacted by the Congress. Policies are involved which under the principles of democracy should be passed upon by the Congress, Members of which reflect the varying viewpoints of citizens of different areas and schools of thought. So long as the judgment of the entire Membership of the Congress is applied to important questions a balance will be maintained in the public interest. It is contrary to our scheme of government to place supreme power in the hands of a single individual, as has been done in European countries, where parliamentary bodies have become nonentities. Encroachment by the Executive upon legislative prerogatives, in violation of the letter or even of the intent of the Constitution, smacks of autocracy and despotism. It is subversive of popular government."

It is possible to defend the President's attitude through this earlier period on the ground that his legal advice was faulty and that in the haste and excitement of conducting this vast extension of Executive powers, he overlooked these fundamentals. His reaction to the Schechter case is less easy to explain. At the press conference of May 31, 4 days later, the President made a direct and forcible attack upon the decision and, by implication, upon the Court. He said that the country was in the "horse-and-buggy stage" when the Constitution was written, and that this decision brought the country "squarely to a big issue," which it would take 5 to 10 years to decide. Asked if there was any way to accomplish this except through a constitutional amendment, the President hesitated but indicated that "there might possibly be such a way."

The President's supporters sought to minimize this attack upon the Court and the Constitution as a natural result of a grave disappointment. Yet more than 2 months later, on July 6, President Roosevelt, in an extraordinary letter addressed to the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, urged the passage of the Guffey bill despite "doubts as to the constitutionality, however reasonable." It seems difficult to interpret this demand as anything less than a blunt challenge to the Supreme Court and an effort to distort the Constitution by political pressure.

There has been much speculation as to what the President had in mind as an alternative to a constitutional amendment. Conceivably he hopes, by building up a political issue, to threaten the passage of a bill packing the Supreme Court with 10 additional members, and in this way to induce its present members to modify their decisions. Open advocacy of a constitutional amendment would, of course, be sound American procedure. The disturbing feature of the President's attitude is his unwillingness to take this constitutional course and his insistence that Congress enact a whole series of unconstitutional laws, beginning with the Guffey bill and including the A. A. A. amendments.

One other significant decision by the Supreme Court bears upon this whole issue of Executive usurpation, with or without the consent of Congress. That is the opinion in the Humphrey case. Here again, by unanimous vote, the Court held that the President had exceeded his powers in arbitrarily removing Commissioner Humphrey from the Federal Trade Commission without a hearing and upon no charges. Said the Court upon the general principles involved:

"The fundamental necessity of maintaining each of the three general departments of government entirely free from the control or coercive influence, direct or indirect, of either of the others, has often been stressed and is hardly open to serious question. So much is implied in the very fact of the separation of the powers of these departments by the Constitution, and in the rule which recognizes their essential coequality. The sound application of a principle that makes one master in his own house precludes him from imposing his control in the house of another who is master there. James Wilson, one of the framers of the Constitution and a former justice of this Court, said that the independence of each department required that its proceedings 'should be free from the remotest influence, direct or indirect, of either of the other two powers.'"

The temptation of every Executive wielding great powers to act arbitrarily has been illustrated in other acts of President Roosevelt. There was the air mail blunder and the attack upon Charles A. Lindbergh for opposing it. There was the attempted removal of Robert Moses for no conceivable reason other than his opposition to the new deal. The Humphrey decision is a vivid reminder of the wisdom of those checks upon the Executive power carefully written into the Constitution to prevent just such encroachments by a strong Executive upon public and private rights.

None of these checks, however, would be worth the paper they are written on save for the existence of a Supreme Court coequal in power with Congress and the President. Mr. Roosevelt's irritation at the Court and his evident desire to undermine its prestige and evade or nullify its decisions gives dramatic confirmation of this fact. As the Constitution stands, Congress is supreme in making laws, the President supreme in administering them, but the Supreme Court has the last word in deciding whether the laws passed by the former and the acts done by the latter conform to the spirit and intent of the Constitution. Above all three, of course, stand the people of the United States who can amend their Constitution at will. They have frequently done so in the past, and there could be no criticism of a frank effort by President Roosevelt to go to the people and seek to secure a constitutional amendment that would legalize his seizures of power from the States and from Congress. The danger and the threat to the American system lie in the President's unwillingness to take this constitutional course and his persistence in the policy of usurpation.

For a final word upon the fundamentals involved in the Federal system there is no better statement than that made by Mr. Roosevelt himself when Governor of New York. He said:

"The preservation of this home rule by the States is a fundamental necessity if we are to remain a truly united country. * * *

"To bring about government by oligarchy masquerading as democracy it is fundamentally essential that practically all authority and control be centralized in our National Government. The individual sovereignty of our States must first be destroyed. * * *

"We are safe from the danger of any such departure from the principles upon which this country was founded just so long as the individual home rule of the States is scrupulously preserved and fought for whenever they seem in danger."

FARM-MORTGAGE RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3002) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The first amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 15, after the word "expired", to insert "or where a deed of trust has been given as security", so as to read:

(n) The filing of a petition or answer with the clerk of court, or leaving it with the conciliation commissioner for the purpose of forwarding same to the clerk of court, praying for relief under section 75 of this act, as amended, shall immediately subject the farmer and all his property, wherever located, for all the purposes of this section, to the exclusive jurisdiction of the court, including all real or personal property, or any equity or right in any such property, including, among others, contracts for purchase, contracts for deed, or conditional sales contracts, the right or the equity of redemption where the period of redemption has not or had not expired, or where a deed of trust has been given as security, or where the sale has not or had not been confirmed, or where deed had not been delivered, at the time of filing the petition.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think an analysis or explanation should be presented of the bill and of the amendments which are incorporated in the bill before the Senate is asked to vote on these amendments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the measure is here by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court on what is known as the Frazier-Lemke bankruptcy measure which was passed at the last session.

The Supreme Court held a portion of that act, subsection (s), unconstitutional. The purpose of the bill is to avoid the objectionable features of the former act as they were denounced by the Supreme Court.

In the first place, however, it ought to be said that we undertook to make some amendments in section 75 before we got to subsection (s). These amendments are for the purpose of clarifying section 75. Some of the courts have held that the farmer debtor could not take advantage of the act after foreclosure sale and during the period of redemption. The bill undertakes to clarify it so as to permit the farmer to take advantage of section 5 after foreclosure and during the period of redemption.

Some of the courts also refused to permit the farmer who was in that position to file his petition, although under the law of the State he was in possession and full control of the property and could redeem it during the period of moratorium established by the States. One of the amendments to section 5 takes care of that objection which was raised by the court.

Amended subsection (s) construes, interprets, and clarifies both subsections (n) and (o) of section 5. By reading subsections (n) and (o) as now enacted, it becomes clear that it was the intention of Congress, when it passed section 75, that the debtor and all of his property should come under the jurisdiction of the court of bankruptcy, and that the benefits of the act should extend to the farmer prior to confirmation of sale and during the period of redemption. In other words, the amendments provide that the farmer may avail himself of the act after foreclosure and during the period of redemption, and may also avail himself of the act during the period of the moratorium provided for him within the State.

It also provides that when the action is taken under section 75 all of the property of the farmer shall be included in the schedules and appraised.

These amendments are for the purpose of the clarification of section 75. Now we come to subsection (s). That is the provision which the Court held unconstitutional. It was held unconstitutional because it was deemed to be in violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution. In other words, it was held that it was an attempt to take property without due process of law, to change the terms of a contract, to change the rate of interest, and to modify by legislation the contract of the debtor. That the Court held could not be done.

The present bill is in reality a bankruptcy bill. It does not undertake to make any modification in the terms of the debtor's contract. It does not undertake to change the rate of interest or in any respect to modify the obligation; but it is provided that when the farmer is unable to make composition with his creditors he may then file a petition in bankrupty to be declared bankrupt, and all proceedings thereafter are under the general principles of the bankruptcy law. After he has filed his petition to be declared a bankrupt, the property is taken charge of by the court and appraisal is provided for.

It also provides for the setting aside of the exemption to the debtor which is allowed by State law. The courts, after taking possession of the property, and after appraisal is had, may postpone action with reference to the ultimate disposition of the property for a period of 3 years. During this period of 3 years the debtor is permitted to remain in control of the property upon payment of a reasonable rental. This rental is to go to the payment of taxes, and if, after the payment of taxes and the running expenses, there is anything remaining, that remainder is to be credited upon the debt of the debtor.

At the end of 3 years, if the farmer has not been able to make satisfactory arrangements to pay his creditor, the court may order sale of the property. The creditors may ask for reappraisal at the time of the sale. Appeals are provided for upon the part of the creditors as are generally provided for under bankruptcy provisions of law.

That in a general way is an explanation of the measure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. A day of two ago some mention was made of an amendment on page 9. I was then given the information that an amendment to the committee amendment would be proposed. I invite the Senator's attention to the provision, as follows:

Provided, That upon request in writing of any secured creditor or creditors the court, in its discretion, if it deems it for the best interests of the secured creditors and debtor, may order the property upon which such secured creditors have a lien to be sold at public auction; but no mortgagee or lien holder shall be permitted to bid on any property at such sale in excess of the appraised value or the original principal, whichever is the higher.

Why was that provision inserted in the bill? It is noted that in the Supreme Court decision holding the first act unconstitutional there was mention made of this subject. Why is it not in the interest of both the creditor and the debtor to have the highest amount that may be bid? If the estate is being administered in bankruptcy for the benefit of the creditors and for the benefit of the debtor, why is it provided in the amendment by the committee that if a secured creditor chooses to bid on the property at the sale he must limit his bid to the amount of the appraisal or to the original amount of his debt? Why is it not to the interest of the debtor and why is it not to the interest of the creditor to let them bid all they will and get as much for the property as it might bring?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the amendment is to be proposed to strike out that provision.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand, but the committee has offered the amendment. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States proposes the amendment to which reference is now being made, and I presume had some purpose in offering the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. So far as I understood it and understand it, it was for the purpose of protecting the debtor; in other words, that when he undertook to redeem, he ought to be permitted to redeem upon the basis of the appraisal which was made and not upon the basis of a bid which might be made by some creditor who was able to run the bidding up to a very high figure. That was the purpose, and that has been approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in decisions.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to call my attention to that feature of the decision?

Mr. BORAH. I will call the attention of the Senator to it when I can locate it, but, as I was about to say, the object of it was to protect the debtor. It might not have been a wise thing to do, and the House concluded that it was not wise, so we are proposing to strike it out. I think it has some merit in it from the debtor's standpoint, but I do not wish to urge it, if it be regarded as of doubtful validity.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator with respect to the exemption feature.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is provided that after a foreclosure, or at the time of adjustment, the debtor shall be allowed an exemption. When a debtor, a borrower, or mortgagor, borrows on land, in executing the mortgage he generally waives all right to homestead and exemptions as to that property. Does the exemption provided in the bill extend beyond that?

Ordinarily, under most laws, he waives his exemption so far as the mortgaged property is concerned when he executes the mortgage. In some States, perhaps, that is not the case, but it is generally the case. Is he allowed under this bill, in addition to the exemption which he waived as to the specific property mortgaged, a further exemption as the head of a family, and so forth, as against his debt?

Mr. BORAH. We allow him such exemptions as are provided for by the law of the State under which the property is held.

Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the bill may be read for the purpose of action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Unfortunately, I was not in the committee when the bill was being considered, but my understanding from the Senator's explanation is that an effort has been made to make the bill constitutional by providing that the farmer may go into general bankruptcy and that he shall have a period of 3 years before his property may be disposed of.

Ordinarily, when a man is declared a bankrupt, and the court takes charge of his property, his estate is administered as rapidly and as quickly as it is practicable to do it. In some jurisdictions it takes longer than in others, depending upon the court, and so forth; but the whole purpose of the Bankruptcy Act is to permit a person to say to his creditors: "Take whatever I have. I surrender it all to the court. Dispose of it and divide it among my creditors"; and if he has been honest, the court, after a certain length of time will discharge him, so as to give him an opportunity to start anew.

This bill, as I understand, on the other hand, is not for the benefit of the creditors at all, but is solely for the benefit of the debtor, and the proposed action may be taken without the consent of a single creditor; and the committee has fixed a period of 3 years before the creditors may get anything. If the property is reduced in value 50 percent during those 3 years, it is just too bad for the creditors. They must all suffer alike.

I have great regard for the Senator's opinion with respect to the constitutionality of acts of the Congress, but I am wondering whether he has considered that phase of the matter. If, by legislative action, we compel all the creditors to stand by, including a mortgage creditor, and put them in a position where the property may depreciate 50 percent, I am wondering whether or not we shall have dealt entirely fairly with the creditors, or whether we shall not have spent our whole effort in trying to take care of the farmer who is in trouble.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course the question which the Senator is discussing is a question of policy. I do not understand that he raises any question as to our authority to grant a reasonable time within which to adjust the controversy between the debtor and the creditor. Many of these cases remain in court 5, 6, and 10 years. I have been unable to find any announcement of a court in which a specific time-limit was placed upon the action of the court; in other words, any time within which it must necessarily close up the business. A reasonable chance is given to adjust these matters, and we were of the opinion that 3 years was not an unreasonable time to give in order to wind up such a transaction. In the meantime, the property is held. It is bringing in a reasonable rental. It must bring in a reasonable rental, because that is one of the provisions of the bill; and that rental goes for the purpose of paying taxes; and, if it is sufficient, it is applied upon the creditor's claim.

I do not understand that any legal question is involved there; and, in view of the agricultural conditions of the country, I do not think it is unfair as a matter of policy.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I do not wish to try to change the Senator's view at all; but if there were written into the extension for a period of 3 years some provision to the effect that it might be made if the court should reach the conclusion that such extension, either of 3 years or 2 years or 1 year or what not, would not in any way affect the creditor's position, does not the Senator think it would be very much more reasonable and very much more likely to stand the test?

Mr. BORAH. The court is given power in the bill to make sale of the property whenever the court deems it in the interest of all parties to do so.

Mr. HASTINGS. During the 3 years?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. In the case of perishable property, or property which is not bringing in any income, or anything of that kind, the court has power to make sale of it.

Mr. HASTINGS. That relieves a great deal of the objection.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The bill gives the court authority to sell the property, if it deems it advisable, at any time. The court may sell any part of it or all of it at any time before or during or after the 3 years.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think that is very important.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the Senator yields the floor, I should like to ask him a question:

I have given rather close study to the bill, and I agree with the Senator from Idaho that it contravenes no provision of the Constitution; but I am not entirely clear as to the meaning or purpose of a provision on page 9, and it seems to me its validity may be a little doubtful. It begins in line 10 on page 9:

But no mortgagee or lien holder shall be permitted to bid on any property at such sale in excess of the appraised value or the original principal, whichever is the higher.

I should like to know the purpose of that provision.

Mr. BORAH. I stated just a few moments ago that we proposed to strike that provision out of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not hear that statement. I think it ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Personally, I am reconciled to having the provision go out of the bill; but out of justice to the committee, I think I ought to say that it is a general rule of law that a mortgagee is not permitted to bid anyhow unless it is specified in the mortgage, and as a matter of contract between the debtor and the creditor, that he may bid. Therefore, as a matter of fact, we are not in any sense depriving the creditor of any right, because to secure the right to bid at the sale it must be written in the mortgage and agreed to.

The courts have uniformly held as follows:

Nor is it unconstitutional to limit or prohibit the mortgagee from bidding at an auction sale. In fact, the mortgagee is generally prohibited from bidding at his own sale, unless that right is given to him by statute or by contract.

It has frequently been held that a mortgagee or trustee in a deed of trust cannot purchase without leave at the foreclosure sale, and that where he does so the sale is voidable. If the mortgagee, without leave, purchases at such sale, he will be considered merely a mortgagee in possession of a redeemable estate and the mortgagor will have the right to disaffirm (Cunningham v. Macon &c. R. Co., 156 U. S. 400, 39 L. ed. 471). (Jones on Mortgages, eighth edition, 540 sec. 2078.)

Ordinarily a mortgagee or pledgee may not purchase at his own sale, unless expressly authorized by statute or contract, or unless the sale is sanctioned by the debtor (16 R. C. L. 107, sec. 77).

The decree of a chancellor is always a matter of grace, and never an absolute right of a litigant. The propriety of affording equitable relief rests in the sound discretion of the courts, to be exercised according to the circumstances and exigencies of each particular case (21 C. J. 34, sec. 12).

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I brought this question to the attention of the Senate last Friday, and also again this morning, before the Senator from Kentucky came in.

In discussing this matter a few moments ago, the Senator from Idaho expressed the opinion that this feature of the bill had been held to be valid in the decision in the case of Louisville Joint Stock Land Bank against Radford, wherein the original Frazier-Lemke Act was held to be unconstitutional.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think that is the case, and I believe it would invalidate this measure if it were retained in it, for the following reasons:

In the Radford case it appeared that the property was appraised at about one-half the amount of the mortgage debt secured by the land, and that if the mortgagee could not bid the amount of his mortgage the effect of the statute would be to give to the mortgagor the right to reacquire his land for half the amount of the mortgage lien, while, at the same time, the lien holder was willing to pay in cash the full amount of the lien. It was a process by which the lien holder would be forced to take half the amount that was due him under his mortgage lien.

The court did hold, as I understand, that there was valid authority in the bankruptcy law, and under the act in question, for marshalling the secured debts and for selling the property free from the lien, transferring the lien, in effect, from the property itself to the proceeds, thus giving to the lien holder the full advantage of his security; but the language the court used in passing upon that question clearly implied that such an arrangement as that involved in the Radford case would be a taking of property without just compensation. I shall read the language to which I refer. It is necessary to read a paragraph or two in order to show the connection:

Bankruptcy acts had either expressly or by implication as was held in Van Huffel v. Harkelrode (284 U. S. 225) * * * authorized the court to direct, in the interest of other creditors, that all liens upon property forming a part of the bankrupt's estate be marshalled; that the property be sold free of encumbrances; and that the rights of all lien holders be transferred to the proceeds of the sale—a power which "had long been exercised by Federal courts sitting in equity when ordering sales by receivers or on foreclosure.

A number of cases are cited in support of that doctrine. But the Court continues in the Radford case:

But there had been no suggestion that such a sale could be made to the prejudice of the lienor, in the interest of either the debtor or of other creditors. By the settled practice, a sale free of liens will not be ordered by the bankruptcy court if it appears that the amount of the encumbrance exceeds the value of the property.

I call particular attention to the following:

And the sale is always made so as to obtain for the property the highest possible price. No court appears ever to have authorized a sale at a price less than that which the lien creditor offered to pay for the property in cash.

Then follows the conclusion:

Thus, a sale free of lien in no way impairs any substantive right of the mortgagor; and such a sale is not analogous to the sale to the bankrupt provided for by section 7 of the Frazier-Lemke Act.

I construe that language to mean that a provision of the law which authorizes an appraisal of the property under the mortgage and authorizes a sale for a sum limited to the amount of the appraisal, which denies to the lienor the right to bid more than the amount of the appraisal, and thus secures to the farmer, or landowner, the opportunity to buy back his land for half what someone else is willing to pay for it, is an invalid provision, and constitutes violation of the due process provision of the Constitution.

It was with that thought in mind that I brought the subject to the attention of the Senate.

The arrangement which the Supreme Court impliedly sustained is not an arrangement that would work a detriment to either the creditor or the debtor. It is an arrangement which, it is true, would be to the benefit of the debtor, but it would not be harmful to the creditor. It would not take anything from the creditor which he had a right to retain.

There is a question which I think may hereafter arise; that is, as to the power of the Congress to fix a moratorium at 3 years, place the mortgagor in possession of his property under an arrangement by which he may pay rent on his property at a reasonable rate, and then take out of the rent the taxes and insurance.

Of course, I do not know what the mortgage contract was in this particular case, but under most mortgage contracts the mortgagor obligates himself to pay the taxes and insurance while he is in possession of the property. While I was practicing law regularly I wrote many mortgages, and I cannot recall a single instance, in the jurisdiction where I live, where mortgages did not usually carry that provision. The undertaking of the mortgagor was that he would pay the taxes and insurance. The bankruptcy court takes possession of the property, as it has a perfect right to do, and I think it has the right, notwithstanding the terms of the agreement to which I have alluded, to cause the payment of the taxes and interest to be made out of the earnings of the property while it is in possession of the court, provided that retention or possession by the court is for the purpose of administering the bankrupt's estate. I doubt whether it would be sustained if it were for the purpose of giving the mortgagor an additional advantage at the expense of the lien holder.

Of course, the arrangement is a very good one for the mortgagor, and in view of the necessity of aiding in the suspension of foreclosures on farm homes, I think the provision is justified.

I am wondering whether the Committee on the Judiciary gave study to the legal question whether in a case where a mortgage binds the mortgagor, while retaining possession of his property, to pay the taxes and insurance, it is valid to require that the taxes and insurance shall be paid out of the earnings of the property. It is an important feature of the proposed act, and unquestionably for the benefit of the debtor. Most of the mortgagors would find little benefit from a moratorium if they were required, from other resources than their property, to pay the taxes and insurance on the property. It is a necessary provision if the moratorium of 3 years is to be granted, but I think it is well worthy of consideration by the Senate, in view of the fact that the first act was held to be unconstitutional, and this measure is being passed to cure the defects in that statute.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask a question about the difference, if there be any, between granting 3 years in which to redeem the property and in doing what is done under the present law. We clearly have power to grant time within which the debtor may redeem his property. If we can do it that way, it seems to me we can do the same thing in effect the other way, and it is a little harder on the debtor that way than to give him 3 years in which to redeem the property, because he does have to pay some rentals and interest during that time.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is a legal difference and a practical difference.

Mr. LOGAN. There is a legal difference, I grant, but whether there is a practical difference or not, I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON. I rather think there is a practical difference. We also grant a period of redemption even in the case where a sale of property is finally made.

There is a provision in one of the amendments to the effect that the debtor shall have 90 days in which to redeem any property sold at such sale by paying the amount for which any such property was sold, together with 5 percent per annum interest into court.

I have not any doubt that a reasonable period of redemption would be sustained; and I do not think there is any doubt, in view of decisions which I shall not now attempt to cite, which have heretofore been rendered by the Supreme Court, that it is competent to grant a moratorium, particularly during a period of emergency, for a period of 2 years. I think perhaps a 3-year period would be sustained. A 2-year period has been sustained. However, there is a difference between granting a moratorium of 3 years during which the mortgagor has possession of the property and providing that although he may have contracted to pay the taxes and insurance he shall not be required to do so, but that the property itself shall be held for it. There is quite a difference between that arrangement, both in practice and in law, as I see it, and an arrangement which merely gives a period in which to redeem from the sale.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I think I now see the difference. Here is another thing about this bill which somewhat troubles me, and concerning which I should like to ask the Senator.

If a trustee, or a guardian, or anyone in a fiduciary capacity has funds belonging, we will say, to a ward, and that money is invested in a mortgage on a farm, under the State law he must make settlement at a certain time. If the time comes when he has to make a settlement under the State law, and the farmer has obtained a moratorium, what is the trustee or guardian going to do about securing the money? In what position would it leave him if the farmer could get a moratorium when the trustee is compelled to pay under the State law?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that suggestion does not create any great difficulty, according to my construction of the bill. If this is a valid measure; if Congress has the power—and I think it has—to grant a moratorium in connection with bankruptcy proceedings the trustee or guardian or other agent of the State court could not be required actually to pay a fund which he had not been able to collect.

Mr. LOGAN. But he has given bond that he will pay this fund. What he has invested the money in has nothing to do with the question. He is personally responsible on his bond to pay over that fund whenever it is due.

Mr. ROBINSON. Whether or not he collects the money?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is he a guarantor of the obligation? He would be in very hard luck then if he were the guarantor on the obligation.

Mr. LOGAN. He certainly is.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think his answer would be sufficient if he replied to the court that it had been impossible for him to collect the obligation within the time the State statute contemplated it should be done, for the reason that a Federal statute had provided a moratorium.

In the case which the Senator cites, where the State law requires the guardian to guarantee the investment which he makes for the trust fund, it would be a very great hardship to deny him the right to collect the fund and, at the same time, require him to pay it. I do not know of the existence of such a statute as the Senator suggests.

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes; there is such a statute; but the trustee is no worse off in such a case than if he invests the fund and loses it completely. In that case also he would have to pay the fund.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the statute to which the Senator refers I take it that when one assumes the guardianship under the law of that State he becomes a guarantor of the investment which he makes.

Mr. LOGAN. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. And if he makes an improvident investment, or if misfortune befalls him or the enterprise in which he invests, he is personally responsible, even though he may have exercised the best judgment of which he was capable, and have been entirely honest.

Mr. LOGAN. That is true.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to ask for information from the senior Senator from Arkansas, who has been discussing the proposed legislation. I wish to know what its effect will be upon farmers who do not owe any money. It is my judgment, arrived at from consideration since a year ago, when we passed the first legislation on the subject, that the effect of the pending bill will be to destroy, or certainly to impair, the credit of that half of the American farmers who do not have mortgages on their lands.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am wondering if the bill is not going to make it very much more difficult, if not impossible, for anyone hereafter to borrow money on a farm mortgage.

Mr. BAILEY. That is just the point. I wish to act constructively upon this question. I take it all of us would very greatly resent any suggestion that we were not in sympathy with any class of our people, but I have observed that if the word "farmer" is written on a bill, it goes through. The word "farmer" is written on this bill, and it purports to be of very great value to those who have mortgages on their farms; but, as I read it, the creditor is deprived of something at once, and he is notified forever that if he ever lends money on a farmers' land he will never collect the face of his mortgage except at the end of an appraisal at the hands of other people.

In North Carolina I think not exceeding 35 percent of the farmers are in debt. That leaves 65 percent who are not in debt on their land, and are doing well. Do we not, by this proposed legislation, deprive that 65 percent of the credit which other men in similar positions enjoy, and have a right to?

I should like to have that made clear. I do not wish to strike down the credit of the farmers of our country.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield. I asked the question of the Senator from Arkansas for my information.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall take the floor in my own right if the Senator from North Carolina has concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, I will ask the Senator to discuss another feature of the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to answer the Senator's question to the best of my ability.

Probably the reason for the incorporation in the first statute—the statute which was held to be unconstitutional—of the provision making the act applicable entirely to existing mortgages, and not permitting it to apply to mortgages made thereafter, was to escape the danger of impairing future credits, or the likelihood of advances on farm-mortgage securities.

My interpretation of the decision is that that feature of the act was looked upon as invalid by the Court. The implication of the decision is certainly that to make it retroactive would be impossible under the Constitution. Whether I am right about that or not, I believe that the passage of the pending bill may tend to have some effect in impairing the credit of farm mortgagors.

At the same time, Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and of other Senators to the fact that there has long existed a bankruptcy law in the United States applicable to various forms of business and enterprises, and it has been said that the existence of the right of the debtor having contracted obligations which he cannot pay to go into court and have himself relieved of every debt that he owes simply by turning over his property to the court, to be administered by the court on behalf of the creditors, reserving to himself only such exemptions as the law secures to him, would also have the effect of impairing in some cases the credit of business men who may become beneficiaries of bankruptcy laws. Certainly, considering the purposes and provisions of this measure, there is no more danger of impairing the credit of a farmer to whom it is proposed to extend the privilege of bankruptcy than there exists in impairing the credit of business men through bankruptcy.

In a time of emergency, when an unlimited number of farm mortgages may be foreclosed because of the temporary decline in the value of farmers' property and because of the temporary decline of the earnings of their property, I do not believe that that is a sound argument against giving the farmer the benefit of a moratorium during the period of the emergency, as this bill proposes to do.

The bill proposes to limit the application of the proposed act to the time of the emergency, and gives the court the power to declare that the emergency has terminated in a given community. It does afford to the debtor the opportunity to retain his property or to redeem it, and at the same time takes nothing from the creditor, except the right to the possession of the property under the mortgage upon default in payment. The Court clearly in the Radford case held that the reasonable exercise of that power was not a violation of any constitutional right of the creditor. The Court upheld the competence of Congress to do that in connection with the bankruptcy law.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if I may interrupt, the Senator from Arkansas, of course, recognizes the fact that the farmers have access to the benefits of the existing bankruptcy laws. A farmer may not be thrown into bankruptcy, but a farmer may voluntarily go into bankruptcy under the existing law, and if he does so under the existing law he goes on the same plane as do others. Under those circumstances there is a realization of the value of his assets at the time. That law has not tended to impair the credit of people doing business in the United States. On the other hand, it has aided their credit; and the facts of our history, with which we are all familiar, bear me out in that statement. Now, however, it is proposed to enact a law under which if a man mortgages his farm for a thousand dollars and the appraiser appraises the farm at $300, the mortgagee gets the $300.

That destroys the whole theory of bankruptcy. The theory of bankruptcy is that when a man, being pressed and insolvent, comes into court and desires relief from his adverse situation and honestly puts his assets in the hands of the court for the benefit of his creditors for what the assets will bring in the open market, and, without any restraints of law, that then he may be relieved, in order to begin over again.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. When I finish the sentence, I will certainly yield.

Here we have quite a different situation. Let me apply it to my State, North Carolina. The farmers of North Carolina are doing very well, much better than they had hoped to do. They have been paying off their debts, and, by paying off their debts, they have been reestablishing their credit. They may come to a time when they wish to put a mortgage on their land, and they might go to an insurance company or a bank to do it, but the insurance company or the bank, reading this bill, will appraise his land and will not lend the farmer 10 cents on the dollar, because the appraisal will be put at the lowest possible point. That logic cannot be escaped. Am I going to run the risk of lending a thousand dollars and then having the property appraised at a hundred dollars? I would lend only a hundred. That beats down the farmer.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I will ask the Senator to wait for a moment. I have one more remark to make. The United States Government has provided, so I have been informed in public speech and on the floor here, nine different plans whereby farmers may borrow from the Government, and I understand, and I think I am safe in saying, that within the last 2 years something like a billion dollars has been loaned to farmers.

I take it that this proposed act will apply to the instrumentalities of the Government; and from the passage of this bill forward, the appraisers, operating under the Farm Credit Administration and the Federal land banks and the other governmental lending institutions, will be charged with the duty not of finding the appraisal as of the date of the loan but finding the appraisal as of some future time in the event of default. Since it is the money of the Government and of the taxpayers and since the loans are made with a view to being collected they, too, will beat down the loan, and we will thereby defeat the very object of the legislation; we will destroy the very purpose which actuated us in enacting the acts providing for loans to farmers.

I will agree that in certain sections of the country there are farmers in distress, and I very greatly sympathize with them, but we ought not to destroy the credit of half the farmers in order to restore farms to the other half; for, if we undertake to do that, the consequence will be that we will destroy the credit of the entire hundred percent of them.

I am willing to listen to reason about this bill. If I can be convinced that it will help the farmer, I will be for it, but the considerations which I have stated to the Senate indicate to my mind that it may destroy the purpose and the objective of all we have done by way of providing loans to farmers. Further than that, it will place the farmer who owes nothing on his land in a position where he will never be able to get anything on his land.

If I am right in that reasoning, this bill ought not to pass; if I am wrong, and someone will show me I am wrong, I will be happy to vote for it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I heartily concur in what the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has stated in regard to any likelihood of depreciation of property because of the bankruptcy proceedings. Farm property, if it shall be appraised under the bankruptcy court, will, it is assumed, be appraised at a fair value. If the property is sold at mortgage sale, it will not bring more than a fair value, and probably not the fair value. It is true that there might be a chance of getting a deficiency judgment. Some States bar deficiency judgments; and I think they should be barred; but a deficiency judgment ordinarily does not amount to much.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator believes, if a man makes a mortgage for $1,000 and the security brings $500, that the other $500 may be repudiated. He does not believe in deficiency judgments. If that is the Senator's position, I want to know it. Is that the Senator's position?

Mr. FRAZIER. Let me explain. When a loan is made on real estate it is on the basis of 40 or 50 percent of the valuation of the property at that time. It may be, because of circumstances over which the mortgagor, as the farmer, has no control, that the property is brought to a lower value, as it has been in many cases up to the present time.

Mr. BAILEY. How does that affect the fact that the man borrowed $1,000? If a man borrows $1,000 from me, does the Senator think there should be some way by which he can fix it honestly whereby he has to pay me back only $500?

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator would make the loan on the security that is given.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no. Men make their loans on the character of the borrower as well as his capacity to pay.

Mr. FRAZIER. Then why would the Senator take security?

Mr. BAILEY. The security is simply a part of the loan, but security has never yet been the measure of a debt. Nobody will say to the contrary. I think I understand what is going on. The Senator from North Dakota is proposing that we shall set up a commercial system in America under which if a man borrows $500, he may pay the debt with $250.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Congress is given the power to legislate on bankruptcy matters. Of course, that must be considered in connection with the loan made.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is altogether opposed to deficiency judgments in America.

Mr. FRAZIER. When property is sold at a mortgage sale it oftentimes sells far below the mortgage value. The appraised value would undoubtedly be as much as the property would sell for. I see no reason why there should be any objection to this provision of the bill. I do not believe it will have the effect of depriving the farmer of loans, as the Senator has suggested. While the measure enacted at the last session was still in force, the banks made more loans than they had for some time, because it resulted in the creditors scaling down to some extent to meet the appraised fair value.

Mr. BAILEY. And also because there was not anywhere on the face of the earth that an American farmer could borrow money, except from the Government, and that was due to the policies of the Government.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, it is and has been for some time, difficult for anyone to borrow any money on any property except from the Government. However, I understand that some banks are making real-estate loans even now.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not care to perpetuate the kind of system the Senator evidently has in mind, because if it should be done the Government would be swamped.

Mr. FRAZIER. If the farmers are successful in North Carolina there is no question that the banks will make loans to them, just as they will to any other successful business man.

Mr. BAILEY. They will not make loans unless they know they are going to collect 100 cents on the dollar, and I do not think the Senator should expect them to do otherwise, they paying back $100 for $100 borrowed. The elementary feature of credit is honor. I think Christian civilization has not changed in that respect since the pagan days, and that principle prevailed even among the pagans.

Mr. FRAZIER. Is not the Senator in favor of bankruptcy legislation?

Mr. BAILEY. Absolutely, but I respect the principles of bankruptcy legislation. A man is discharged from his debts because he has become hopelessly involved.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not think the bill is subject to the construction placed upon it by the able Senator from North Carolina. I do not know any reason why a farmer should not be allowed to avail himself of the principles of the bankruptcy law. If the bill should pass and the farmer should be unable to compose his difficulties with his creditors, then he may go into court and ask to be declared a bankrupt. Is that an unusual privilege?

Mr. BAILEY. But even now the farmer may go into court and ask to be declared a bankrupt.

Mr. BORAH. This bill undertakes to adapt the bankruptcy principles to the situation of the farmer. I venture to say that in principle the bill is no different than the acts under which multiple railroads have gone through bankruptcy, and where those creditors of whom the Senator speaks have lost their 100 cents on the dollar. I see nothing in this bill which in principle has not been given to business, to municipal corporations, and to all lines of industry.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I say to my friend the able and distinguished Senator from Idaho, that I think the same sort of thing has destroyed the credit of the railroads. My definition of recovery is a return to the normal activities of business, but if we are going somewhere else and have the Government become a central bank to relieve all creditors, and to which everyone must come, then that is going to happen over my protest. I realize that we have that sort of government elsewhere in the world, but I do not want to have to have that kind of thing here.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. Is there any parallel between the principles sought to be established by the enactment of this bill into law, and the present composition with the creditors of the average business man affected by the bankruptcy provisions of law?

Mr. BORAH. I think that in principle it is the same.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator think there is a parallel principle running through both propositions?

Mr. BORAH. I do. When the farmer reaches the point where he cannot carry on as against his creditors and seeks to adjust his affairs with his creditors, he seeks a composition of the debts he owes. If he is unable to get that adjustment, unable to get the settlement, then we propose to open the bankruptcy court for him. We propose to say, "You may go into court not for the purpose of postponing your payment, not for the purpose of cutting down necessarily your obligation." It may pay out entirely. Who knows? He is to go into court and turn over all the property he has to the administration of the court. The court makes its appraisal and the business is carried on for a reasonable length of time. If the farmer is able to pay out 100 cents on the dollar, he pays it. If he is not able to pay out then the property is sold for every cent it is worth and the farmer is declared a bankrupt and relieved, just the same as a railroad company.

Mr. BAILEY. In the meantime he is allowed to stay in possession of the mortgaged property for 3 years and the statement he is to get all it is worth is based solely on the theory of an appraisal rather than a sale.

Mr. BORAH. He is permitted to remain in control of the property. He pays a rental reasonable in the judgment of the court. That rental which he pays goes to the payment of taxes upon the property, keeping the title clear if possible. If it is sufficiently large it goes to the payment of the claims of creditors under the direction of the court. Mind you, in the meantime the farmer has turned over every iota of property he has, has turned it over to his creditors to be utilized by his creditors under the direction and judgment of the court. No provision is made for a change of contract, no provision is made for a change of interest or change of obligation. Everything is as he contracted it to be. But misfortune has overtaken him and his creditors are pressing down upon him. He wants relief and asks the court to give it to him. The court administers his property in the best judgment of the court and if possible he pays out in the end.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The courts have said in many, many cases that it is just as much the purpose of the Bankruptcy Act to give the debtor relief from debts impossible to be paid as it is to distribute his property among his creditors.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not the sole purpose of the Bankruptcy Act to administer the debtor's estate, but it is to do that which is best for both the debtor and the creditor.

Mr. BORAH. The bill is drawn upon the theory that the court, in its judgment, will take his property and, if possible, make it pay the debts of the debtor. If it is not possible, he is in the situation of hundreds of thousands of people who have gone through the bankruptcy court. That is all there is to it. Why should the American farmer not be permitted to avail himself of the Bankruptcy Act, if there is any virtue in bankruptcy proceedings, the same as a business man?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has used the illustration of the American farmer. Does the bill apply only to the farmer?

Mr. BORAH. There are other bankruptcy laws for the business man, and so forth.

Mr. TYDINGS. This bill, as I understand, is drawn to apply only to farm bankruptcies.

Mr. BORAH. The bill simply amends that section of the Bankruptcy Act which deals with agriculture; that is all.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. I am in sympathy with what the Senator says, and I should like to have him develop this point, following out the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas.

The point is that the obligation the farmer owes is a given amount, which may be equal to or in excess of, or less than the amount fixed by a reappraisal of the property at this time. I should like to have the Senator develop, if he will, the constitutional effect of an appraisal of the debtor's assets at this time which would be a figure less than the amount of the mortgage indebtedness on the property, and whether or not, in his view, that would be an invasion of contractual rights.

Mr. BORAH. The Supreme Court has decided more than once that the provision of the Constitution which gives Congress the power to enact bankruptcy laws takes into consideration the fact that the very fact of enacting bankruptcy laws will change contracts. I will not say that it is one of the purposes, but it is one of the inevitable effects of a bankruptcy proceeding to change the terms of the contract, because the property is not there to fulfill the contract. So I have no doubt that in that respect this bill would not be vulnerable to constitutional objections.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question about a matter on which I wish to have my mind clear. He states that he does not think the bill will impair the credit of the farmer.

Mr. BORAH. No.

Mr. BAILEY. Does it not postpone by 3 years the date of collection?

Mr. BORAH. Yes, Mr. President, it postpones the time of collection; but suppose the postponement of the time should work out to the benefit of the creditor. It cannot be said that a mere postponement will necessarily work to the disadvantage of the creditor.

Mr. BAILEY. But let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose I am a farmer, and I go to the Senator from Idaho to borrow a thousand dollars on my land today, and I say, "I want to borrow it for a year." The Senator from Idaho takes notice of the fact that under this act I am really borrowing it for 4 years.

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not. I take notice only of the fact that in case the party to whom I am loaning the money is overtaken by the misfortune of debt, I know as an American citizen that the Constitution of the United States gives him the right to go into a court and make the best settlement he can with his creditors. That is a matter within my knowledge. Every dollar that is loaned in the United States to business, to railroads, or to anyone else, is loaned with the knowledge of that fact.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall not interrupt the Senator, but he made the statement that the bankrupt goes into court under existing law to make the best settlement he can. Is that correct? He does not make the best settlement he can with his creditor. It is left to an appraisal.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose we take the proposition to which the Senator has referred several times. Suppose I borrow a thousand dollars from the Senator. I put it in that way because that is the only way in which it could happen.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe I will interrupt to say that the Senator would pay me 100 cents on the dollar, no matter how hard he had to work to do it.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose I borrow it on a farm which I have. Suppose next year, after I have borrowed it from the Senator, the value of that farm, by reason of circumstances over which I have no control, should decrease in value 50 percent; would not the Senator have lost out on his contract? I could not pay 100 cents on the dollar. It would not be possible.

Mr. BAILEY. If that were all the property the farmer had, I should have lost out; yes.

Mr. BORAH. Under this bill, the farmer turns over to the court all the property he has.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; and then, instead of exhausting the value of the property which is the security, the creditor is not allowed to take it over. He is not allowed to ascertain its value in the market. He submits himself to an appraisal, and the unsecured creditors submit themselves to an appraisal. There is the point at which I think the bill tends very seriously to destroy the credit of the large portion of our farmers who are not in debt. That is the whole question.

As I understand the statistics, very nearly 50 percent of the farmers have mortgages on their land. There are more mortgages in some States than in others. In my State I do not think the proportion is over 30 or 33 percent. While there are some people there who are embarrassed, I am very glad to state that there has been a great deal of debt paid, and the Federal land bank and the Farm Credit Administration have brought to them a great deal of relief; and that may be necessary in the future. We are not through the depression. When it becomes necessary, I desire a system under which the farmers who are now free of debt may have some reasonable opportunity to borrow money.

That is the whole motive that I have in my mind. Of course, it is much easier to vote for the bill than to vote against it; but I wish to vote constructively with a view to the welfare of the farmers as a whole, and I do not think that in order to rescue 50 percent we should destroy the other 50 percent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. We find 50 percent who are not in debt, and we find 50 percent who are in debt. We are undertaking to apply a bankruptcy principle to the 50 percent who are in debt.

Mr. BAILEY. And, if I may interrupt the Senator, we are going beyond that; we are undertaking to apply an entirely different bankruptcy principle from that which now exists and has been practiced in this country since 1898. The farmer now has the benefit of that.

Mr. BORAH. The bankruptcy law without this particular provision is not of any practical benefit to the farmer.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me ask the Senator another question. Would he be willing to accept or to advocate an amendment which would put all other embarrassed creditors on the same basis as the farmers are put and modify the whole bankruptcy law with a view to that?

Mr. BORAH. I think the agricultural situation calls for the application of a modified principle of the bankruptcy law as it now exists. This is simply an amendment to the section of the bankruptcy law which deals with agriculture. It was recognized in the beginning that a different situation, calling for different principles, applies to agriculture, and we enacted it into the law. This is simply an amendment of that provision; that is all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina if he does not think it would take more than the passage of a bankruptcy act to destroy the credit of any farmer who had been able to go through this depression without owing anything on his place.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very happy to say that that has always been so, and that men who wish to pay their debts and who do not object to deficiency debts and deficiency judgments—men who, having nothing, stand to the racket and fight it through—always have credit and always will.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator knows enough about the farmer to know that he is about the last individual under the flag to seek the courts for his redress.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is perfectly true.

Mr. BORAH. It may be regarded as absolutely certain that any farmer who has any possibility of paying out and paying his creditors will never go into court and turn over everything he has to the court to be administered. That would be the last resort he would take.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is true; but my point is that the creditor is looking on the situation with a view to the return of his dollar.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. The farmer comes to borrow. I am not thinking about what has happened in the bankruptcy. When the farmer comes to borrow the creditor is notified that there are definite circumstances laid down by the Congress under which he must expect a low return on his loan, and therefore the creditor will loan very little money. He must protect himself; and that is why I fear this bill is going to impair the credit of the farmer.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. Assume we do not enact this measure and we permit a creditor to foreclose at will. The presumption is that, foreclosing then, he would foreclose at whatever the value is today. That might or might not be less than the amount of his loan. In the circumstances do we change the situation as to the value of the security which he has by the enactment of this bill?

Mr. BAILEY. My whole argument has been that we do. I am sorry if I have to say it over again, but I shall be very happy to do it.

I was just saying that by passing this bill we notify the creditor that he will not collect the amount of his loan. He will not be able to take the land as collateral. He will be able to take only what the appraisers find. Now, follow me. Assume that to be true; will he not take notice that he must make his loan at the lowest possible point in order to fall under the appraisal? That being so, the borrowing power of the farmer is destroyed and he is put in an adverse position as compared with other men.

Mr. MURPHY. I am frank to say to the Senator that I think his reaction as to the disposition of the creditor thereafter to loan the least possible amount is sound. However, the creditor has competition. The money lender has competition. The land banks are lending, the insurance companies are lending, individual neighbors are lending. That competition of money should tend to bring the value of the land up for loaning purposes. The Senator is apprehensive of the loss of money to the farm investment market.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I am apprehensive of the destruction of the credit of the farmer by an act which purports to help him.

Mr. MURPHY. I think that is on all fours with my last statement. It is a fact that during the life of the Frazier-Lemke Act lending was not interfered with. The agencies of the Federal Government set up in the land banks were not restrained from making loans, and I think it is perhaps fair to say that numbers of individuals were not afraid thereafter to make loans.

Has the Senator considered the conditions of today? I have a letter from home this morning advising me that the foreclosures since the invalidation of the Frazier-Lemke Act are greater in number than at any time in the last 3 years. We have a condition which demands some measure of relief.

We on this side of the Chamber came into power with a promise made the farmers who are in debt that we would seek to lift the burden of that debt and enable them to carry on, to head off the deflationary processes which were crushing them. We do not fulfill that promise unless we enact legislation of this nature. If the emergency still continues—and I think it does as respects the farmer, because he has had the benefit of only one season of good prices—the obligation is on us to continue this effort, during the life of the emergency, at least. Is there any alternative suggestion advanced here to that proposed in the Frazier-Lemke Act? I know of none.

Mr. BAILEY. I know of one, I will inform the Senator.

Mr. MURPHY. I should be glad to have my attention directed to it.

Mr. BAILEY. I just now stated that the Congress of the United States has provided nine different institutions under which hard-pressed farmers may borrow money from the Government on 30 days' time. That is a considerable alternative.

Mr. MURPHY. Is the Senator's reference to the land banks?

Mr. BAILEY. And the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. MURPHY. Unfortunately, the position of the debtor farmer is too frequently such that the land banks will not lend him in an amount sufficient to satisfy the demands of creditors on existing mortgages.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. This situation frequently arises: The land banks have loaned only 50 percent of the appraised value. The Commissioner's loans, of course, are made for a larger amount, but that is the restriction as to land-bank loans, and frequently the farmer whose debt is mature, whose payments are in default, finds himself in the possession of property which in his opinion and which in normal times is worth very much more than he can realize upon his property. His debt is due, he cannot borrow more than 50 percent of the appraised value of the property, and therefore cannot refinance his obligation; so that unless he is to be foreclosed and to lose his home it is necessary to have some arrangement which will give him time to work out his problem. It may be that within 3 years or, indeed, in a shorter time than that, recovery will so far progress that he may effect other refinancing arrangements, or it may be that the property will be restored in value until he can save something from the wreckage.

Mr. BORAH. That is the real virtue of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. The real question presented, as I see it, is whether there is anything unfair in what the legislation proposes shall be accomplished, assuming it to be constitutional, of course. The question, I repeat, is whether the Congress is trying to do an act of injustice to the creditor in order to save the farm owner.

Mr. BAILEY. That depends on the point of view. Grant that it does an injustice to the creditor, but grant that we are perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not grant that.

Mr. BAILEY. I am going to grant it. The other question is, Does it not do an injustice to the borrowing farmer? That is my point. Let us resolve everything in favor of that question.

The Senator from Arkansas said just now that he thought it did impair the credit of farmers to some extent, a very frank and, I think, a very worthy statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. I said it affected it, just as resort to the bankruptcy court affects the credit of any debtor. Always there is the contingency which may arise that a creditor may lose his obligation, or a part of it, by reason of the judgment of the debtor to be a bankrupt. But I do not think this proposed statute would affect any more the credit of a farmer, whether he is in debt or not in debt, than the general bankruptcy statute affects debtors generally.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I agree with the conclusions of the able Senator from Arkansas. It will be remembered that when we had before us and passed the so-called "municipal-bankruptcy bill" there were cities of a population of five or six hundred thousand and many towns, counties, and villages that took advantage of that law. We granted to such municipalities the right to compose with their creditors. Naturally it occurred to such reflective and observing minds as that of the Senator from North Carolina and others that such action might injure the credit of cities and towns going into bankruptcy.

Of course, whenever a bankruptcy law is enacted, theoretically it may affect the credit of a city; but I noticed that, notwithstanding the municipal bankruptcy law, where a city composed its indebtedness at 50 cents on the dollar, the new issue of that city's bonds was sold at 3 percent above par.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply wish to suggest, by way of conclusion, since Senators who are very able and for whom I have great respect are persuaded that this proposed legislation is absolutely fair and thoroughly justified by the emergency and that it will not impair the credit of farmers or others, that we amend it so as to embrace all the owners of little homes in the United States which have been mortgaged, and I will apply in support of a bill carrying such a provision everything that has been said here today by way of argument.

If it is a good thing, let us go the whole way. I will agree that the railroad arrangement may be improvident, that the municipal measure was probably improvident; but that this bill, however, is the right bill. Now let us put everything in it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have a bill on the calendar covering the home owners similar to the bill before us.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the argument is good for one that is good for the other.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there is no escape from the irresistible logic of the Senator from North Carolina, and I am willing to do what he suggests. Indeed, we have done so for municipal corporations and corporations other than municipal. Within a few hours we will probably have before us a bill affecting railroads; and I say again, we cannot escape the irresistible logic of the Senator from North Carolina. Therefore I shall support the bill, because in these great cataclysms, these tremendous events that sweep over mankind and come every fifty or a hundred years, in the nature of things there must be a sharing of the losses. The creditor class cannot say, "We refuse to share in the loss."

Mr. BAILEY. Would the Senator apply this same beneficent principle to little merchants all over the country, and let them keep their stocks and operate?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, under the bankruptcy law, if the court sees fit to do so, such thing can happen.

Mr. BAILEY. Does it allow them to keep their stocks on hand, or are they not seized on the first day by the trustee and sold within 30 days?

Mr. ASHURST. I cannot be of much help here, because I look upon too much credit as a thing which has injured our country; I look upon too much credit as a thing which has helped to bring the farmer to his present position, and I think the greatest courtesy and favor we can sometimes show to a man is to deny him credit.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator, then, is supporting the bill in order to destroy credit, as I understand.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is not only an able scholar but an able dialectician. I know the Senator is partly facetious in that remark, but it is not the purpose of the bill to destroy credit. When Senators ably argued for the municipal-bankruptcy bill, under which cities and villages and towns composed their indebtedness, it was not their intention to destroy the credit of the cities, but I would be lacking in candor if I failed to say that a bankruptcy bill, no matter of what kind, after a fashion, theoretically does injure credit to the extent that it makes the creditor and the money lender—and against him I have no prejudice—more careful and more prudent as to the security he takes, it makes him more prudent to investigate what he is doing, before lending the money.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has referred to the Municipal Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. ASHURST. And I wish to thank the Senator from Michigan for his valuable assistance in having the bill passed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I had considerable to do with it, and therefore I felt some responsibility for watching its ultimate operation.

Mr. ASHURST. May I say that it would not have passed had it not been for the able Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I want to tell the Senator that the effect of that law was to substitute laudable composition for chaotic repudiation, and the net result has been to strengthen the entire municipal-bond market, and I venture the assertion that it is a provable fact that it has saved millions of dollars of value for municipal-bond holders.

Mr. ASHURST. If I could be subject to envy, it would be envying the Senator the able way in which he stated the proposition which I tried to state.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I have already said, the purpose of this proposed legislation is, first, to promote compositions between debtor farmers and their creditors, and, second, to establish a system by which the farmer debtor may have the opportunity, without injustice to the creditor, to work out his problem and save his property or a part of it.

It is not a little thing for one who has spent the best years of his life acquiring a home and who, by reason of circumstances which he has been unable to control, has been compelled to mortgage that home, to find that economic conditions generally are such that no class of debtors is able to meet its obligations and that he is in danger of losing his home. It is rather a pathetic circumstance, after he has spent his years, his best thought, his energy, and his strength in acquiring his home, to lose it because of circumstances which he has not created, and not because of his dishonesty or his indisposition to meet his obligations. Must he be denied any opportunity to recover himself, to retain his property, to work out his debt? Must he be compelled to lead his wife and his children out from under the shelter that he has worked all his life to raise above them, and to set them adrift in an unsympathetic world when his strength has been impaired, when his ability to provide for them has diminished? It is not unfair, retaining to the creditor his lien undiminished, to give the debtor farmer some opportunity to save his home.

I grant that we have no right to deprive the creditor of his security. This bill gives the creditor the right to apply in writing at any time for a sale of the property. At any time during the 3-year moratorium the creditor may ask the court to sell the property. This bill does not deny the creditor the right to have foreclosure if, under the circumstances, it is found proper that foreclosure shall proceed.

There is, however, another provision in the bill, sought to be inserted by way of a committee amendment, which I do not understand. I mean by that that I do not comprehend either the principle of the amendment or the object of the committee in proposing it. On page 7 appears this language:

> When the annual net rental exceeds 5 percent of the appraised value of the property, the excess shall be applied in reduction of the indebtedness as established by the appraised value of the property, and paid to the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear.

I take it that what that really means is that when the rental exceeds 5 percent of the appraised value, the excess of 5 percent shall be paid over to the lienholder; but it is my understanding that the lienholder, the creditor, would be entitled to have the rents credited on the debts. It is true that there is a provision elsewhere in the bill that rents shall be first used in paying taxes and insurance; and that is incorporated, as I believe, for the reason that in most cases the debtor would not have any outside resources with which to meet those obligations. There is a question in my mind whether that provision would be sustained. I do not understand why the committee denies the right to apply any amount of the rent to the indebtedness.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the rent must first be used for the payment of taxes and for insurance, and so forth; and then, if there is an excess, it should be used for the payment of creditors.

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President; that is the very point. The provision I am speaking of now, on page 7, is as follows:

When the annual net rental exceeds 5 percent of the appraised value of the property, the excess shall be applied in reduction of the indebtedness as established by the appraised value of the property, and paid to the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, is that not just so much surplusage, because of the statement above that—

Such rental shall be paid into court, to be used, first, for the payment of taxes and upkeep of the property, and the remainder to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; that is not surplusage. It is a provision which I think will cause the raising of another constitutional question on this bill.

Mr. BONE. Does it add anything to the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not add anything of value to the bill, in my judgment, and I cannot find out the purpose of it.

Mr. BONE. I do not see it, either.

Mr. ROBINSON. Stated in different language, the provision means that if the land rents for less than 5 percent of the appraised value of the property, no part of the rent can be paid on the debt. What is the object of that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator has made a very strong argument against that amendment. I was wondering, if the words "and unsecured debtors" were stricken out, whether the defect would be cured.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; that does not go to the question which I am discussing, because the thought which the Senator from Maryland has in that particular, which also occurred to me, I believe is properly safeguarded by the remainder of the language, "as their interests may appear". The Senator sees that what that means, as I said in the beginning, is that it shall be paid to the lien holder.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I see.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I do not understand is why the committee denies the court the power to apply the rents and profits to the payment of the indebtedness, and why all rentals less than 5 percent of the appraised value must be reserved from application on the debt. It cannot benefit the debtor. He does not get it. He is in possession of the property, and pays the rent. A 5-percent fund is set up, of which the debtor cannot get the benefit and of which the creditor cannot get the benefit; and I should like to have someone who knows tell me why it was put in the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not pretend to know, and I am not handling the bill; but, in view of the able argument of the Senator from Arkansas, whilst the committee did not consider the provision to be unconstitutional, it may go out of the bill, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ROBINSON. Since it cannot benefit the debtor and cannot benefit the creditor, I should like to know for what purpose it is intended. I repeat that it is not clear to me that it is legally valid. If the creditor is entitled to have the rents applied to the payment of the indebtedness after taxes and insurance have been paid, while the property is in the custody of the court, it would seem to me that to impose that restriction would endanger the validity of the proposed act.

Mr. ASHURST. The intention of the committee, I think, is fully met by what is attempted to be effectuated by the language in lines 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19 on page 7.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is all I desire to say.

PURCHASE OF THE "WINNIE MAE"

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask that the House amendment to Senate bill 3135 be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3135) to authorize the purchase of the Winnie Mae by the Smithsonian Institution, which was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the comma and "from" and insert "with the original instruments used in its world trips by."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF ACT RELATING TO BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION ACROSS THE TENNESSEE RIVER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3105) to amend the act approved June 12, 1934, relating to the granting of the consent of Congress to certain bridge construction across the Tennessee River at a point between the city of Sheffield, Ala., and the city of Florence, Ala., which was, on page 2, after line 20, to insert the following section:

SEC. 2. The times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge authorized to be built by such act approved June 12, 1934, as amended by section 1 of this act, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of the enactment of this amendatory act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FARM-MORTGAGE RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3002) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho a question with reference to the amendment on page 9, beginning in line 6. The amendment reads as follows:

Provided, That upon request in writing by any secured creditor or creditors, the court, in its discretion, if it deems it for the best interests of the secured creditors and debtor, may order the property upon which such secured creditors have a lien to be sold at public auction—

It is all right up to that point—

but no mortgagee or lienholder shall be permitted to bid on any property at such sale in excess of the appraised value or the original principal, whichever is the higher.

Now, aside for the moment from the fact that the provision last read strikes me as being unconstitutional, because I do not see why the lien holder cannot bid as much as he pleases if everybody else but the lien holder can; in other words, the lien holder is denied a right which is not denied to anybody else at the sale——

Mr. BORAH. That amendment came up sometime ago and it was agreed to strike it out of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Ah!

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it has been agreed to strike out that provision.

Let me say, however, while I have agreed to strike it out of the bill I have no doubt whatever as to its constitutionality, and I have no doubt whatever as to its fairness. When the borrower is in a position to redeem his property, he should be permitted to redeem it upon the basis of the appraised value, and not upon the basis of the price to which some one else may be willing to run it up on him.

This proposed law is being made, insofar as it can be made, in the interest of the debtor, and the idea was that the debtor was entitled to redeem his property upon the basis of the appraised value of the property and not upon the price to which John Doe or Richard Roe, desiring to hold the property, might bid it up.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator another question in order to obtain his judgment, because this bill is entirely new to me and I had not read it until the last half hour. It strikes me, if this provision is proposed in order to be fair, that the lien holder ought to be permitted to bid up the property at least to the extent of his debt, principal and accrued interest, together with costs. I can see no reason of giving him only the principal of the debt, when the interest, if he has been a kind lien holder, may be 3 years in arrears. In the section from which I come quite often that is the case. Interest runs for a couple of years or more, and when the mortgagor is a good risk the lien holder gives him a chance to win his property back, but under this provision the lien holder would be afraid to give the debtor a chance to win it back when he had had a bad year or some disease had affected his cattle or his crops were injured, because under the terms of this bill he would be denied the right, if he was tolerant, kindly, and helpful, of recovering the interest due.

Mr. BORAH. All that provision goes out. I am willing to admit the logic of the Senator's position, but if it were not going out of the bill I think I could defend it. I have consented that it be taken out, as those for whose opinions I have great respect think it may be of doubtful validity and not wholly just. But, I repeat, I feel it could be defended both legally and morally.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment to enable me to make an inquiry?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BONE. May I ask if the bill is now open for amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). The committee amendments are now under consideration, under an order of the Senate. After the disposition of the committee amendments, the bill will be open to individual amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Idaho in a moment. Before doing that I wish to comment briefly upon this bill.

My State stands eighth in agriculture, and, of course, we have an interest in this measure. I have had my attention attracted this morning to a number of things about the bill. If I understand correctly, this bill, in the first place, proposes to overcome confusion which has arisen by reason of diverse rulings on the part of various courts. In the second place, it proposes to give the farmer time in which to obtain cash to pay the claims against him. In the third place, as I understand, it does not reduce the various liens below the value of the property.

The bill comes to us by reason of an epidemic of disasters among farm owners. In the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle for August 15, I read an appalling list of foreclosures in Monroe County. Distress on all sides is apparent.

I regard this bill as giving exactly the same sort of treatment as is administered to a man who has heart disease. He is given rest, a period of time in which to recuperate. Within that time given him for recuperation it is hoped his heart may resume its normal functions. In the case of this bill it is hoped that the farm may be made to function as a going concern.

I am interested in this bill for a further reason. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] has presented another bill which has to do with home owners in cities and villages. The same conditions confront the home owners in the cities and in the towns as those which confront the farm owners.

So I feel kindly disposed toward this bill, for the reasons I have given, and because, if this bill shall become a law and shall succeed, there will be hope that the other measure may be enacted. Then it is hoped the urban home owner may have much-needed relief.

Now, turning to the Senator from Idaho, I wish to say of him, in the first place that with the dozen years of contact with him in the Senate, I have come to trust him. This statement applies to all matters, of course, but particularly as to his reliability on constitutional questions.

Time and again, I have observed and admired the high degree of courage possessed by the Senator from Idaho. Time and again he has resisted measures which undoubtedly, so far as his personal interests were concerned, he would have been glad to have seen enacted into law.

I have been distressed over the bill because of the decision of the Court relating to the act which we formerly passed on this subject. It has worried me.

With this introduction, I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho: Is it his conviction that this bill, in the form in which it is now presented to us, is likely to run the gauntlet of the courts and to be declared to be valid legislation?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that was the conclusion which was reached by the Judiciary Committee, including myself. The Judiciary Committee devoted their effort to working out the measure so as to bring it within the Constitution and obviate the objections made by the Court to the previous act. I do not think there was any disagreement in the Judiciary Committee that we had finally framed such a measure. It is my opinion that it will run the gantlet of the courts. It is really nothing more now, if the Senator please, than a bankruptcy bill.

The other measures, as the Senator will recall, undertook to change the terms of contracts; it undertook, by legislative power, to reduce the rate of interest, and to change the relationship of debtor and creditor. We have avoided that. The pending bill simply proposes to give the farmer an opportunity to go into court and ask to be adjudged bankrupt.

Under those circumstances, there are certain things which the court may do under the bankruptcy proceedings which do change the terms of the contract, but they are changed by force of the fact that there is not sufficient property to take care of the contract which was made; and the courts have held that that may be done.

I always hesitate to give an opinion on a constitutional question where it is a matter of debate, because no man can be sure upon close questions until the Court speaks; but, in my opinion, this bill is constitutional.

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator take an opposite view regarding the original Frazier-Lemke Act?

Mr. BORAH. I opposed that measure here on the floor, as the RECORD will show.

Mr. COPELAND. On constitutional grounds?

Mr. BORAH. For the reason that I thought it was unconstitutional.

Mr. COPELAND. At least, though, it appealed to the Senator's heart and he would have been glad to support it if he had thought it to be constitutional?

Mr. BORAH. I would have been anxious to see the measure passed if I had thought it would have been able to escape the constitutional objection.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to thank the Senator, and to say that I am being governed very largely in my attitude toward this bill by the position he takes.

Mr. BORAH. If the Court should make a mistake, and hold the bill to be unconstitutional, of course, I hope the Senator would not hold me responsible for the mistake of the Court. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. I may say to the Senator that I have known death to make a mistake and sometimes to take a patient when I had predicted that recovery would take place. So I can quite understand that courts also sometimes make mistakes.

I am very much obliged to the Senator, and I am glad to have been reassured.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, page 3, line 20, after the word "expired", it is proposed to insert "or where the right under a deed of trust is not or had not become absolute"; on page 4, line 2, after the word "The", to strike out "word" and insert "words 'period of'"; in line 3, after the word "wherever", to strike out "it occurs" and insert "they occur", so as to read:

In all cases where, at the time of filing the petition, the period of redemption has not or had not expired, or where the right under a deed of trust has not or had not become absolute, or where the sale has not or had not been confirmed, or where deed had not been delivered, the period of redemption shall be extended or the confirmation of sale withheld for the period necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section. The words "period of redemption" wherever they occur in this section shall include any State moratorium, whether established by legislative enactment or executive proclamation, or where the period of redemption has been extended by a judicial decree. In proceedings under this section, except as otherwise provided herein, the jurisdiction and powers of the courts, the title, powers, and duties of its officers, the duties of the farmer, and the rights and liabilities of creditors, and of all persons with respect to the property of the farmer and the jurisdiction of the appellate courts, shall be the same as if a voluntary petition for adjudication had been filed and a decree of adjudication had been entered on the day when the farmer's petition, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt, was filed with the clerk of court or left with the conciliation commissioner for the purpose of forwarding same to the clerk of court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 5, line 17, after the word "exemptions", to insert "and unencumbered interest or equity in his exemptions"; in line 21, after the word "property", to insert "including his encumbered exemptions"; on page 6, line 12, after the word "exemptions", to insert "and his unencumbered interest or equity in his exemptions"; on the same page, line 23, after the word "appear", to strike out "up to the actual value of such property, as fixed by the appraisals provided for in this section", so as to read:

SEC. 6. That section 75 of said act, as amended, be further amended by adding a new subsection (s), after subsection (r), to read as follows:

"(s) Any farmer failing to obtain the acceptance of a majority in number and amount of all creditors whose claims are affected by a composition and/or extension proposal, or if he feels aggrieved by the composition and/or extension, may amend his petition or answer, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt. Such farmer may, at the same time, or at the time of the first hearing, petition the court that all of his property, whether located, whether pledged, encumbered, or unencumbered, be appraised, and that his unemcumbered exemptions, and unencumbered interest or equity in his exemptions, as prescribed by State law, be set aside to him, and that he be allowed to retain possession, under the supervision and control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of his property, including his encumbered exemptions, under the terms and conditions set forth in this section. Upon such a request being made, the referee, under the jurisdiction of the court, shall designate and appoint appraisers, as provided for in this act. Such appraisers shall appraise all of the property of the debtor, wherever located, at its then fair and reasonable market value. The appraisals shall be made in all other respects with rights of objections, exceptions, and appeals, in accordance with this act: Provided, That in proceedings under this section, either party may file objections, exceptions, and take appeals within 4 months from the date that the referee approves the appraisal.

"(1) After the value of the debtor's property shall have been fixed by the appraisal herein provided, the referee shall issue an order setting aside to such debtor his unencumbered exemptions, and his unencumbered interest or equity in his exemptions, as prescribed by the State law, and shall further order that the possession, under the supervision and control of the court, of any part or parcel or all of the remainder of the debtor's property shall remain in the debtor, as herein provided for, subject to all existing mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances. All such existing mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances shall remain in full force and effect, and the property covered by such mortgages, liens, pledges, or encumbrances shall be subject to the payment of the claims of the secured creditors, as their interest may appear.

"(2) When the conditions set forth in this section have been complied with, the court shall stay all judicial or official proceedings in any court, or under the direction of any official, against the debtor or any of his property, for a period of 3 years. During such 3 years the debtor shall be permitted to retain possession of all or any part of his property, in the custody and under the supervision and control of the court, provided he pays a reasonable rental semiannually for that part of the property of which he retains possession. The first payment of such rental shall be made within 6 months of the date of the order staying proceedings, the amount and kind of such rental to be the usual customary rental in the community where the property is located, based upon the rental value, net income, and earning capacity of the property. Such rental shall be paid into court, to be used, first, for payment of taxes and upkeep of the property, and the remainder to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors as their interests may appear.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 19, after the word "appear", to insert "When the annual net rental exceeds 5 percent of the appraised value of the property, the excess shall be applied in reduction of the indebtedness as established by the appraised value of the property, and paid to the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment be rejected, in view of the position which has been taken by certain Senators. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] will later offer an amendment to come in after the word "appear."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 3, after the word "unexempt", to insert the word "personal"; on the same page, line 5, after the word "sale", to insert "and may, in addition to the rental, require payments on the principal due and owing by the debtor to the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, in accordance with the provisions of this act, and may require such payments to be made quarterly, semiannually, or annually"; on the same page, line 12, after the word "the", to insert "debtor's ability to pay, with a view to his"; and in line 13, after the word "rehabilitation", to strike out "of the debtor", so as to read:

The court, in its discretion, if it deems it necessary to protect the creditors from loss by the estate, and/or to conserve the security, may order sold any unexempt perishable property of the debtor, or any unexempt personal property not reasonably necessary for the farming operations of the debtor, such sale to be had at private or public sale, and may, in addition to the rental, require payments on the principal due and owing by the debtor to the secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, in accordance with the provisions of this act, and may require such payments to be made quarterly, semiannually, or annually, not inconsistent with the protection of the rights of the creditors and the debtor's ability to pay, with a view to his financial rehabilitation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 15, after the word "appraisal", to strike out "or any part or parcel or all"; in line 18, after the word "appraisal", to insert "less the amount paid on principal"; in line 20, after the word "creditor", to insert "or upon request of the debtor"; in line 22, after the word "property", to insert "or in its discretion set a date for a hearing, and after such hearing, fix the value of the property, in accordance with the evidence submitted"; at the beginning of line 25, to strike out "difference between the appraised and reappraised value, if any, into court", and insert "value so arrived at into court, less payments made on the principal, for distribution to all secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear"; and on page 9, line 5, after the word "property", to insert "free and clear of encumbrances", so as to read:

(3) At the end of 3 years, or prior thereto, the debtor may pay into court the amount of the appraisal of the property of which he retains possession, including the amount of encumbrances on his exemptions, up to the amount of the appraisal, less the amount paid on principal: Provided, That upon request of any secured or unsecured creditor, or upon request of the debtor, the court shall cause a reappraisal of the debtor's property, or in its discretion set a date for hearing, and after such hearing, fix the value of the property, in accordance with the evidence submitted, and the debtor shall then pay the value so arrived at into court, less payments made on the principal, for distribution to all secured and unsecured creditors, as their interests may appear, and thereupon the court shall, by an order, turn over full possession and title of said property, free and clear of encumbrances, to the debtor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 6, after the word "debtor", to insert the following proviso:

Provided, that upon request in writing by any secured creditor or creditors, the court, in its discretion, if it deems it for the best interests of the secured creditors and debtor, may order the property upon which secured creditors have a lien to be sold at public auction; but no mortgage or lienholder shall be permitted to bid on any property at such sale in excess of the appraised value or the original principal, whichever is the higher. The debtor shall have 90 days to redeem any property sold at such sale, by paying the amount for which any such property was sold, together with 5 percent per annum interest, into court.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to have stricken from the proviso that portion in line 10, after the word "auction", reading as follows:

But no mortgagee or lien holder shall be permitted to bid on any property at such sale in excess of the appraised value of the original principal, whichever is the higher.

I desire to eliminate that language from the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 9, in the committee amendment, in line 10, after the word "auction", to strike out the words "but no mortgagee or lien holder shall be permitted to bid on any property at such sale in excess of the appraised value or the original principal, whichever is the higher", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That upon request in writing of any secured creditor or creditors, the court, in its discretion, if it deems it for the best interests of the secured creditors and debtor, may order the property upon which such secured creditors have a lien to be sold at public auction. The debtor shall have 90 days to redeem any property sold at such sale, by paying the amount for which any such property was sold, together with 5 percent per annum interest, into court, and he may apply for his discharge, as provided for by this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 19, after the word "section", to insert the words "or with any orders of the court made pursuant to this section, or is unable to refinance itself within 3 years"; in line 22, after the word "and", to insert the word "order"; and in line 23, after the word "sold", to insert the words "or otherwise disposed of", so as to read:

If, however, the debtor at any time fails to comply with the provisions of this section, or with any orders of the court made pursuant to this section, or is unable to refinance himself within 3 years, the court may order the appointment of a trustee, and order the property sold or otherwise disposed of as provided for in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in subsection (4), on page 10, line 17, after the word "estate" and the period, to insert "conciliation commissioners and referees appointed under section 75 of this act shall be entitled to transmit in the mails, free of postage, under cover of a penalty envelop, all matters which relate exclusively to the business of the courts, including notices to creditors," so as to make the subsection read:

(4) The conciliation commissioner, appointed under subsection (a) of section 75 of this act, as amended, shall continue to act, and act as referee, when the farmer debtor amends his petition or answer, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt under the provisions of subsection (s) of section 75 of this act, and continue so to act until the case has been finally disposed of. The conciliation commissioner, as such referee, shall receive such an additional fee for his services as may be allowed by the court, not to exceed $35 in any case, to be paid out of the bankrupt's estate. No additional fees or costs of administration or supervision of any kind shall be charged to the farmer debtor when or after he amends his petition or answer, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt, under subsection (s) of section 75 of this act, but all such additional filing fees or costs of administration or supervision shall be charged against the bankrupt's estate. Conciliation commissioners and referees appointed under section 75 of this act shall be entitled to transmit in the mails, free of postage, under cover of a penalty envelop, all matters which relate exclusively to the business of the courts, including notices to creditors. If, at the time that the farmer debtor amends his petition or answer, asking to be adjudged a bankrupt, a receiver is in charge of any of his property, such receiver shall be divested of possession, and the property returned to the possession of such farmer, under the provisions of this act. The provisions of this act shall be held to apply also to partnerships, common, entirety, joint, community ownerships, or to farming corporations where at least 75 percent of the stock is owned by actual farmers, and any such parties may join in one petition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in subsection (5), on page 11, in line 8, after the word "this", to strike out the word "section" and insert the word "act"; and after line 13, to insert the words "Any farm debtor who has filed under the General Bankruptcy Act may take advantage of this section upon written request to the court", so as to make the subsection read:

(5) This act shall be held to apply to all existing cases now pending in any Federal court, under this act, as well as to future cases; and all cases that have been dismissed by any conciliation commissioner, referee, or court because of the Supreme Court decision holding the former subsection (s) unconstitutional, shall be promptly reinstated, without any additional filing fees or charges. Any farm debtor who has filed under the General Bankruptcy Act may take advantage of this section upon written request to the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in subsection (6), on page 11, line 18, after the word "measure", to insert the words "and if in the judgment of the court such emergency ceases to exist in its locality, then the court, in its discretion, may shorten the stay of proceedings herein provided for and proceed to liquidate the estate", and to strike out the following:

Due to the depression and low prices for agricultural products, hundreds and thousands of additional farmers are threatened with foreclosure and loss of their farms and homes, due to no fault of their own, thus adding to the army of unemployed. There is no adequate system or credit anywhere by which these farmers can refinance their existing debts and save their property. Not only does an emergency exist but there is danger of a calamity, a collapse. Therefore, this act shall be liberally construed, so as to protect the rights of the creditors, and at the same time with a view of the rehabilitation of the farm debtors, by giving them time within which to refinance their loans when the usual credit once more is obtainable. If such a time should arrive prior to the 3-year period provided for in this act, during which the farm debtor may lease his own property, and that fact is made to appear clearly to the court, then the court may shorten the stay of proceedings herein provided for.

So as to make the subsection read:

(6) This act is hereby declared to be an emergency measure and if in the judgment of the court such emergency ceases to exist in its locality, then the court, in its discretion, may shorten the stay of proceedings herein provided for and proceed to liquidate the estate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BONE. I desire to offer an amendment, on page 7, in line 18, after the word "creditors", to insert the words "and applied on their claims."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in subsection (2), on page 7, line 18, after the word "creditors", to insert the words "and applied on their claims", so as to make the sentence read:

Such rental shall be paid into court, to be used, first, for payment of taxes and upkeep of the property, and the remainder to be distributed among the secured and unsecured creditors, and applied on their claims, as their interests may appear.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I think it is proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, there are two further amendments which would make the bill conform to the bill as reported by the Judiciary Committee of the House. I send them to the desk and ask that they may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment of the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 7, line 11, to strike out the words "six months" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year", so as to make the sentence read:

The first payment of such rental shall be made within 1 year of the date of the order staying proceedings, the amount and kind of such rental to be the usual, customary rental in the community where the property is located, based upon the rental value, net income, and earning capacity of the property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second amendment of the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In subsection (5), page 11, line 16, after the word "court" at the end of the committee amendment previously adopted, it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following:

And a previous discharge of the debtor under any other section of this act shall not be grounds for denying him the benefits of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

RETIREMENT SYSTEM FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is temporarily absent, intended to move at this point in the proceedings that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill commonly known as the "Railway Pension Act", Senate bill 3151. In his absence I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3151) to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Copeland	Lewis	Reynolds
Austin	Costigan	Logan	Robinson
Bachman	Dieterich	Lonergan	Russell
Bailey	Donahey	McAdoo	Schall

Bone	Gerry	Metcalf	Steiwer
Borah	Gibson	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Glass	Moore	Thomas, Utah
Bulkley	Gore	Murphy	Trammell

Byrnes	Hastings	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Hatch	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Chavez	Johnson	Overton	Wheeler
Clark	King	Pittman	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I hardly suppose that this bill requires any extensive explanation, because with one or two exceptions its provisions as to pensions for railway employees are identical with those of the bill which passed the Senate last year without a dissenting vote.

The major difference betweeen the two has arisen from the desire to meet a criticism directed by the Supreme Court, in a 5-to-4 opinion declaring the old law unconstitutional, against the inclusion among those eligible for pensions of all workers who had been employees of carriers during a period of not more than a year prior to the effective date of the act. The present bill covers only actual employees, either in service or upon furlough.

I take it that there is no need now to defend the course of providing pensions for employees. Not only did we pass last year, by unanimous vote, a bill almost identical to this one, but also since then we have passed the social-security bill with only 6 votes of dissent. The economic and social desirability of pensions is an established fact. Therefore, we need concern ourselves only with the provisions of this particular bill.

The bill includes all railway employees subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, who are in service or on furlough at the time of or subsequent to the enactment of the measure; and it includes also all who are representatives of employees at the time of enactment or subsequently, and who at any time have been in the service of the railways. This latter provision was in the act of last year.

Those eligible for annuities are:

First, any employee or representative of employees 65 years of age or over.

Second, any employee or representative of employees 50 years of age or over who has had a service period of 30 years or more. The service period includes service for any railway before or after the enactment of the measure.

Third, any employee or representative of employees who has had a service period of 30 years or over, and who has retired because of mental or physical disability.

The rates of annuities are calculated as follows:

The monthly annuity of employees shall be the employees' service period, not exceeding 30 years—that is, any service above 30 years shall not be calculated at all in determining the annuity—multiplied by a certain percentage of his average monthly compensation. This percentage shall be 2 percent of the first $50, 1½ percent of the next $100, and 1 percent of the wage in excess of $150. No part of any monthly compensation in excess of $300 shall be counted in calculating an annuity.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I think I understood my colleague to say that this bill applies to employees on furlough.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Does it make any difference how long they have been on furlough?

Mr. WAGNER. No; because men on furlough have always been regarded as employees of the company, since they are subject to call at any time.

Mr. COPELAND. Even though the furlough is for a number of years?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. I raised the same question; but the experience has been that generally the furloughs do not last for any great length of time. I think that at present less than 100,000 of the 1,025,000 railway employees are on furlough. Five hundred thousand men who were employees in 1929 are no longer employed at all, nor are they eligible for retirement pensions. They have simply been thrown to the winds, I am sorry to say.

Let me illustrate the working of the system. Take, for example, 30 years of service at $200 per month. In that event the pensioner would receive 2 percent on the first $50, which is $1; 1½ per cent on the next $100, which is $1.50; and 1 percent on the last $50, which is 50 cents, making a total of $3, multiplied by his 30 years of service would come to a monthly annuity of $90.

The annuity shall be reduced by one-fifteenth for each year an employee is less than 65 years of age when he retires, unless, of course, he retires on account of disability.

Similarly, the annuity shall be reduced by one-fifteenth for each year the employee stays on after he reaches the age of 65 years. In the bill of last year, it should be noted, we provided for compulsory retirement at the age of 65, with a possible extension to the age of 70 by agreement between employee and employer. Under the pending bill, there is no compulsory age of retirement; but the service after an employee passes 65 is not counted in calculating benefits, while there is an actual reduction in his rate of annuity for each year of service beyond that age. Here again, however, the maximum age limit may be extended 5 years by mutual agreement.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. There is no material difference, then, between this bill and the bill which was previously passed by the Congress?

Mr. WAGNER. There is none, except, as I say, that there is a large class—I have forgotten how many—whom we exclude from this bill, who were included in the bill of last year.

Mr. BYRNES. What is the Senator's estimate as to the cost of this bill as compared to the cost of last year's bill?

Mr. WAGNER. It is somewhat less than the cost of the bill of last year. I think it is figured that the cost during the first year under this bill would be about $50,000,000. It is a matter which cannot be ascertained exactly.

Mr. BYRNES. This bill simply provides for the appropriation of the necessary money?

Mr. WAGNER. No; it does not even provide for that, but for an authorization.

Mr. BYRNES. Is it the Senator's opinion, from his study of the bill, that there is no question as to its constitutionality?

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that if our efforts here are not within the constitutional authority, then neither is the social-security bill which was just enacted, because the legal principle in both measures is the same. We are pursuing exactly the same theory.

Mr. BYRNES. The same as in the Social Security Act?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly; but, of course, we have not yet before us the bill which imposes an excise tax upon the employer and an income tax upon the employee. That is now pending in the Finance Committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Should such a bill ever be passed, the revenue would go into the general fund of the Treasury?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; and then, may I say to the Senator, the Government will pay no part of the expense of the annuities. The plan is to be self-supporting, just like the one created under the social-security law.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree with the Senator that if the social-security bill is constitutional, so is this bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. I may say by way of interpolation that the House today, by unanimous vote, passed an act identical with this measure practically without discussion. I am waiting for the message to arrive at any moment.

The bill also provides for a retirement board of three members, who are to receive the same salaries and have the same terms of office as provided in the bill of last year.

In addition to that—and this is new—we are providing for the creation of a commission consisting of 3 Members of the Senate, 3 Members of the House, and 3 to be apppointed by the President to investigate and report on this whole subject by January 1 of next year. This bill will not become effective until March 1 of next year, so that before the bill actually goes into effect we shall have the benefit of a thorough investigation of the whole subject.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree with the Senator that this bill should be passed and that it is constitutional if the Social Security Act is. In view of that, what is to be gained by an investigation?

Mr. WAGNER. There are some questions like this: Some of the railroads have pension systems of their own, and the same question arises which arose in the case of the Clark amendment to the security law, which was discussed here.

The railways contend that the bill ought to be modified to exempt their pension systems. I disagree with that point of view, but I am not certain of my position. I think it will be of great benefit to the Senate to be enlightened upon that question, along with many others, including the adequacy of the suggested methods of financing the plan.

The other provisions of the bill are fairly standardized; one of them permits recourse to the courts in the event that any employee feels aggrieved, either as to the amount of his annuity, or for some other reason.

Mr. President, this covers the provisions of the bill.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. Is the Senator satisfied that the bill completely meets the objections which were raised successfully in the Court before?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. The Senator will recall that the decision was based upon the ground that we had no authority, under the power to regulate interstate commerce, to retire old railway employees. While I accept the decision as the law of the land, just as the Senator does, I have a right, I think, to comment upon it, just as the four minority members of the Court did. The majority of the Court found that displacing the older workers with younger men would not in any way affect the efficiency of our transportation system, and therefore could not be regarded as affecting interstate commerce. I had thought that one of the theories underlying a pension system was the desire to remove the old worker because he has lost some of his efficiency. Therefore, I can hardly subscribe to the decision of the Court.

But that is not the point here. Under this bill, I may say to the Senator, we are proceeding on an entirely different theory, namely, the power of Congress to impose taxes. It is upon that that the social-security law is based.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is there any provision in the bill for taxing the railroads to pay the expenses?

Mr. WAGNER. No; the bill provides no tax. The tax will be provided in a separate bill, which is now pending before the Ways and Means Committee of the House. Being a revenue measure, it must be acted on first by the House. A similar bill is also pending before the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. HASTINGS. A moment ago the Senator referred to this bill's being similar to the social-security measure. My recollection is that in the social-security bill there was a provision for the tax necessary to take care of the expenses.

Mr. WAGNER. There were separate titles to the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. But it was all one bill.

Mr. WAGNER. One title provided for the pension, and the method of computing the annuity, and another title imposed the excise and income taxes, respectively, upon the employer and the employees.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to know why that procedure was not followed in connection with the pending bill.

Mr. WAGNER. That is a matter of procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think I can offer one explanation. Normally the Committee on Interstate Commerce has jurisdiction of railroad pension legislation. Always the Finance Committee has jurisdiction of tax legislation. In the case of the social-security bill, it was my personal thought that it would be better to separate the legislation, to have the administrative and other provisions in one measure, and the tax provision in a separate measure; but that course was not followed. In the case of the railroad pensions, that course is being followed, and I believe it is the best practice.

Mr. WAGNER. I may add, Mr. President, that I am now reminded of one of the reasons, due to the clearer recollection of the Senator from Arkansas.

Last year the Interstate Commerce Committee made a special study of this whole subject, as the Senator from Delaware knows well because he participated in the hearings. Thus that committee is quite familiar with the details of the pension proposal. But the Finance Committee, if it had handled the whole measure, would have had to begin all over again and study the entire question. And, of course, it is not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to consider matters involving the taxing power of the Government.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, in reply to both the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from New York, I may call attention to this fact, especially to the attention of the Senator from Arkansas, that heretofore all bills amending the bankruptcy law have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; but now we have before us a bill amending the bankruptcy law which refers especially to railroads, which has been referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee, and reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee to the Senate, so that it seems to me that is not a sufficient reason to show that one subject ought to be divided into two bills.

It seems to me when the Senate is acting upon this bill, which will probably involve an expenditure of something like $100,000,000 in appropriations, it is important for the Senate to know at the time it is passing the bill the source from which the money is to come in order to pay the benefits. Certainly it cannot be insisted that we are going to start out to pay all of the employees of railroads and of the various industries without having some place from which to get the money.

Mr. WAGNER. I think I can assure the Senator that provisions will be made, by the imposition of taxes, to secure the funds with which to pay these annuities. We have no more patriotic citizens in the United States than our railway employees, and I am sure that they will insist upon legislation which will make them bear their share of the costs of their benefits. They are not seeking a gratuity from the Federal Treasury directly. The Senator's point is not very relevant to this discussion, because I can assure the Senator that provision will be made for the imposition of taxes to secure the funds.

Mr. HASTINGS. It must be done by a vote of the Senate, must it not, and how can the Senator give us that assurance?

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator is not satisfied with my explanation, I think he can get a satisfactory one from the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The same question arises whenever we authorize an appropriation. Whenever we authorize the expenditure of money for any purpose we always have in mind the necessity of legislation subsequently to provide the funds.

The intention is to follow this bill with a tax measure, and while no one can solemnly swear that the tax bill will pass, it is expected that it will be enacted.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I inquire whether there is any objection to adding a new title to this bill, including the tax, instead of passing a separate bill——

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; there is a valid objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Just a moment—similar to what was done with respect to the social-security bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. There is this objection, which the Senator from Delaware saw before he asked the question, that the Senate has no power to originate a revenue measure, and the body at the other end of the Capitol probably would take the view that we were originating a revenue measure if we put into this bill a provision for the tax to which the Senator is referring.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether it is not a fact——

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I still have the floor; I yielded for a question.

I may say to the Senate that the House has already acted unanimously upon the measure we are now considering, and undoubtedly the House will deal next with the question of the imposition of taxes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that it is the purpose, when the bill which has just passed the House reaches the Senate, to move to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, the two measures being identical, or practically so.

Mr. WAGNER. They are identical.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas or the Senator from New York why it was that the House made these two separate bills? There was no reason why the House could not add the taxing feature to the bill. Why did they not make it in one bill?

Mr. WAGNER. That is the business of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it may or may not have been due to my own suggestion. I felt then and still feel that the committee which has jurisdiction of the legislation to provide for pensions, to work out the administrative features, is a different committee from that which has the tax-raising authority, and I think the course that has been pursued is the better course. Our committee formulated the legislation—a committee which is familiar with the subject matter of this bill. The taxing committee, the Ways and Means Committee, is composed of men of eminence and of ability; nevertheless they have not made the studies and do not possess the knowledge of this particular subject which is essential to proper formulation of the legislation. So I think the course which the House has pursued is a good one. I am perfectly willing, if the Senator thinks otherwise, to have him get them to reverse their action if he can do so.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Senator for the compliment. I should like to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. I assure the Senator from Delaware that the course which has been pursued does not involve any legerdemain, if that is what the Senator is intimating.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am glad the Senator assures me of that, because I am very suspicious of it, and I will tell the Senator why.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes, the Senator is always suspicious of anything which anyone else does. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASTINGS. That is not quite a fair statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was made with the utmost of good will, and I hoped the Senator would laugh.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, let me say, in line with the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, that like the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House last year devoted several months to the study of this whole subject. Hearings covered a period of at least one month. Experts upon this question, those representing the railroad point of view and those representing the employees' point of view, were heard. In view of this long study, it would seem a ludicrous procedure to send the measure deliberately to another committee which would have to begin the hearings all over again and study the question de novo.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the Senator permit me to make a further inquiry?

Mr. WAGNER. Undoubtedly the Senator is going to speak on the subject.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. HASTINGS. My general understanding is that a tax can only be laid for a public purpose, and that there is some danger of the constitutionality of the Security Act because a tax has been laid for a particular purpose, namely, for taking care of people who are to receive benefits under that act. I insisted at the time the social-security bill was passed that we could not cure that by separating the bill into titles, and I believe that is true. But in this case a very clever thing has been done, by design or otherwise, which is to separate the granting of a pension from the levying of the tax. It is not new to the Senator from New York. Judge Fletcher, who represented the railroads, called attention to the fact that in one bill it is provided that a pension shall be paid to railroad employees. Then those sponsoring the legislation come along with an entirely different bill and levy a tax upon the railroads without in any way identifying the two. I say that that in my judgment makes very much more certain the constitutionality of the two acts, but I say in doing it Senators are violating the spirit of the Constitution, and what I am trying to find out is whether or not it has been done deliberately and for the purpose of making more certain the constitutionality of these two bills.

Mr. WAGNER. I know of no such deliberate design. I think a very clear and persuasive explanation was made as to why the two bills went to the separate committees. If the event should occur of which the Senator speaks, and the Supreme Court should declare the tax measure unconstitutional, which I do not believe they will do, the Congress will deal with the problem when that time comes. Of course, I am thoroughly convinced that we are exercising our power appropriately when we impose these taxes in order to secure the funds for the payment of old-age annuities.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Has not the distinguished Senator from New York, who is a good lawyer——

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HASTINGS. If there is contained in one bill the provision with reference to pension and the levying of a tax upon the railroads to pay a retirement fund to railroad employees, has not the Senator from New York some doubt whether that raises a very serious constitutional question?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator may think so. The Senator did not listen to my speech in behalf of the so-called "security bill", in which I contended that the imposition of a tax for this particular purpose was a public purpose and that the classification was fair. That is my opinion. The Senator may disagree with it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator, as a lawyer, agree that it would be very much more difficult to raise the constitutional question as to these two bills if he had them combined than it would if he had them separated?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think that makes a particle of difference in the consideration of the matter.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator agree that the Court may take judicial notice of the taxing act when the other is being tested, or vice versa?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, it would be obvious in the act itself.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator from New York does not understand the position of the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Delaware says that he has less doubt about the constitutionality of this measure than he had about the measure passed in the last Congress. The Senator from Delaware voted for the measure in the last Congress, and if he voted for that measure, certainly he is not opposed to the present measure when he says he has less doubt about its constitutionality than he had about the constitutionality of the previous measure.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I am perfectly serious in what I am saying with respect to this measure.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware will agree that he voted for the previous measure, will he not?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am perfectly serious in my discussion of this matter, and I do not care to be taken off on some flight of funny business.

Mr. BYRNES. Did the Senator from Delaware vote for the measure in the last Congress?

Mr. HASTINGS. It is no one's business if I did or not.

Mr. BYRNES. It is.

Mr. HASTINGS. It has nothing to do with the objection I make now.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator voted for it, did he not?

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senator may look at the RECORD and see whether I did or not.

Mr. BYRNES. I looked at it, and I did find that he voted for it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why did the Senator ask me then?

Mr. BYRNES. I wanted to see whether the Senator remembered how he voted.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does not the Senator know how I voted if he looked at the RECORD?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; I knew how the Senator voted, but I wanted to find out if the Senator from Delaware knew how he voted and would admit that he voted in favor of the previous measure?

Mr. HASTINGS. I say now that that act having been declared unconstitutional, I am unwilling to have some scheme set up here of two bills which test the constitutionality of the act again. That is what I say.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Delaware is in sympathy with railroad pension legislation, if he believes that it ought to be enacted, he certainly cannot object to any course the Congress might decide to take which would tend to sustain the legislation after it had been passed. Every day we pass bills here authorizing appropriations. Our rules do not permit the appropriations to be carried in the bill which authorizes them. We are compelled under the regulations which we have adopted for the government of our own conduct to pass separate bills, and now the Senator from Delaware, who professes to be in sympathy with the proposed legislation, complains that the Congress is taking a course which he declares will make it more likely that the action which he says he favors will be sustained. There is nothing wrong, there is nothing immoral, and there is nothing treacherous in separating the two subjects. They ought to be separated for the reasons which I gave a few moments ago. One committee is familiar with the subject matter of one phase of the legislation; another committee is familiar with the subject matter of the tax legislation. Yet the Senator from Delaware is suspicious that there is something wrong with the policy of passing two bills—one as a tax bill. We seldom put tax legislation in the bills that we enact for the expenditure of the money. It was the consistent course which was pursued.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator desire to ask a question?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the question which is raised here is to what the effect constitutionally will be by reason of providing the two measures. I doubt if any change whatever is affected by that. But suppose it does. Suppose, however, the legislation is brought within the Constitution by reason of that fact, is it not our duty to do that very thing?

Mr. WAGNER. That is what the Senator from Arkansas suggested, and I tried to suggest that if we are friends of this measure and anxious to provide a pension for the employees, if the Senator is right, that is the very course which we ought to pursue.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WAGNER. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. I see the bill provides that—

> The annuities hereinbefore mentioned shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury which may be appropriated for that purpose.

Do I understand correctly that the annuities are to be paid from the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly; just as payments are to be made under the social-security law. An excise tax is imposed upon the employer and an income tax upon the employee. The proceeds of that tax go into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. FLETCHER. The tax is provided for in some subsequent bill?

Mr. WAGNER. That is provided for in another bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. But primarily this bill provides that the Government is to pay these annuities?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly; and the Government is to be reimbursed by the imposition of the taxes imposed by another bill. They are all calculated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is a sort of theoretical connection between the tax to be levied and the annuities to be paid, but, as a matter of fact, the annuities provided by this bill are to be paid out of the Treasury out of any funds not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; as they are in the Social Security Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Exactly. When the other bill levying a tax comes along, if and when it does come, the funds raised by that tax will be covered into the general fund of the Treasury?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that, while there is this theoretical connection between the two, they are not necessarily connected at all?

Mr. WAGNER. They are not necessarily connected.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, there is a relationship, but not a direct connection?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the tax has been figured out so as to conform to the actuarial requirements so that they dovetail together but each stands on its own merits?

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. The tax imposed is to provide a solvent fund. This is not new; we made similar provision a month or so ago when the social-security bill was passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. But in that case we did it all in one bill, under different titles.

Mr. WAGNER. That is correct; there were different titles to the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is my recollection that in the case of the Federal employees' retirement fund the employees and the Government respectively contribute monthly to a general fund which permits Federal employees to retire between 60 and 70 years of age under various terms and conditions of retirement set forth in the act.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that the funds which the employees of the Federal Government pay are segregated into a separate fund under the control, more or less, of the Federal retirement board?

Mr. WAGNER. That may be so and it may not be so; I do not know, but I do not think it is a very important matter.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me on that point?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the statement of the Senator from Maryland is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. My recollection is that the money is paid into a separate fund, because when a Federal employee separates himself from the service prior to the time of retirement he is permitted to file papers and recover the principal of the sum he has paid in, with some interest.

Mr. COPELAND. That is true of the amount paid by the Government. The sum paid for retirement is paid directly by the Government. The amount paid by the employees referred to by the Senator is separated into a fund and bears interest.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. It is converted into an annuity, and if the employee chooses to have it so it may be returned to him; but the principal retirement aid that he gets from the Government consists in the money paid by the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. It may be a small matter to the junior Senator from New York; it is incidental, of course; but, speaking for myself, I should much rather have this fund segregated and the retirement benefits paid out of such fund than have the Treasury of the United States, without any limitation whatsoever, become the source from which these payments are to be made.

It seems to me, if I may in the Senator's time make just this concluding observation, that the money which the employees pay in should be paid into a separate fund; whatever the Government is to add to the fund, or the railroads, or what not, should likewise go into that fund; and it should be administered by those in charge of it in returning the benefits to those entitled to receive them as pensions. I believe it is extremely bad policy to have the Federal Government made the bank to pay pensions of this character with which the Federal Government has nothing at all to do, except to supervise and to enforce any laws between employer and employee.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, it was pointed out when the social-security bill was under consideration that the provision under discussion was merely a matter of bookkeeping. The calculations are definitely made; they are predictable as to the amount which will be required in order to secure a solvent fund for the payment of these pensions; and a sufficient tax is imposed to secure that fund. So whether it be segregated or put it into the general fund of the Treasury is really a very minor matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I take it the Senator would have no particular objection to segregating these funds under the Railroad Retirement Board?

Mr. WAGNER. I should want to consult the Treasury authorities. I think perhaps such segregation would impose upon the Treasury Department unnecessary bookkeeping and unnecessary work. It is a matter that I do not regard as very important, so long as the calculations are definitely made, and that can be done. It is done by every insurance company in the United States. We do that again and again; there is no difficulty about it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish, if time should afford, that, at the very first opportunity, the Senator from New York, who is the sponsor of this bill, would consult the Treasury about the advisability of having these moneys segregated into a separate fund.

Mr. WAGNER. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am certain if the bill were now so worded that it would attract support which otherwise might not be present. I think some Senators feel that a matter that is extraneous to the Government such as these funds, only being administered by the Government, ought not to be confused with the general revenues of the Government.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say that the Senator raises a question really worth while. Under this bill a commission is to be appointed to make an investigation of all the matters that relate to this whole subject, including the possibility of continuing in existence some private pension systems. The commission may, among other things, study the very question which the Senator has raised. Furthermore, the commission is to report to the Congress on January 1 next, which will be 3 months prior to the effective date of this particular act; so that ample time will be afforded to study that very question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Even so, if I may so ask the Senator, I request that he ascertain if the Treasury would look with favor upon it; and if the Treasury should look with favor upon it and the author of the bill should do so, I should like to see such a provision incorporated in the law. If subsequently after the examination shall have been made, he should find that the money should be covered into the general fund for one reason or another, that would be a different thing. I do not like to start the bill out in that form if it can be avoided.

Mr. WAGNER. At this late date I hope the Senator will not press the suggestion, because the commission will be in a position to study the question and report to us before any tax is imposed in accordance with the design of this bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to suggest that my recollection is that the social-security bill as originally framed provided exactly what the Senator from Maryland indicates; but in the House the conclusion was reached that that kind of bill would not stand the test in the Supreme Court?

Mr. WAGNER. If I may interrupt the Senator, he is mistaken about that.

Mr. HASTINGS. It was not in the original bill.

Mr. WAGNER. No; not insofar as old-age pensions were concerned. There was some discussion as to the segregation of the unemployment-insurance fund.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is it not true that in the social-security bill the taxing feature and the provisions that the payment should be made directly to the Treasury and that the payments to the beneficiaries should be made out of the Treasury were put in a separate title, because it was believed necessary to do that in order to make the act constitutional? Further, was not the conclusion reached that what the Senator from Maryland suggests could not be done and have it stand the test of the Supreme Court, because then it would be taxing someone for a private purpose and not for a public purpose?

Mr. WAGNER. There is no need of going into that; I know the Senator's point of view from the standpoint of the law upon this subject; but there is no need of our pursuing it any further. The courts will finally have to speak upon that question; but I am very confident that the tax is imposed for a public purpose and is therefore a proper exercise of the taxing power of the Government. I think that various decisions which the courts have rendered heretofore, cases with which the Senator is familiar, sustain my point of view.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the able Senator from New York indicate whether the pending bill, in the admirable objectives of which many of us are deeply interested, contains any retroactive feature?

Mr. WAGNER. It depends upon what the Senator means by "retroactive feature." Only those are eligible for pensions who are actually employees of the carrier at the time the act goes into effect, or at some subsequent time, or who are on leave or on furlough. On the other hand, when a man retires, he is entitled to credit for his services even prior to the enactment of the law. If that be called "retroactive", of course, that feature exists.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator's statement covers the point of my inquiry.

Mr. WAGNER. Otherwise the law would work a very great injustice to the older employees.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was it felt that there might be legal or other questions raised if the act attempted an extension other than that suggested by the Senator from New York?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator will remember that the Supreme Court criticized the act of last year, which did extend to all those employed 1 year before its enactment. So, unfortunately, we have had to eliminate that provision, although I think that by so doing an injustice will be worked in some very worthy cases.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, if there are no further questions to be asked, may the committee amendment now be considered?

The PRESIDING OFFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. For the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "carrier" means any express company, sleeping-car company, or carrier by railroad, subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and any company which may be directly or indirectly owned or controlled thereby or under common control therewith, and which operates any equipment or facilities or performs any service (other than trucking service) in connection with the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, refrigeration or icing, storage, or handling of property transported by railroad, and any receiver, trustee, or other individual or body, judicial or otherwise, when in the possession of and operating the business of any such "carrier": Provided, however, That the term "carrier" shall not include any street, interurban, or suburban electric railway, unless such railway is operating as a part of a general steam-railroad system of transportation, but shall not exclude any part of the general steam-railroad system of transportation now or hereafter operated by any other motive power. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized and directed upon request of the Board or upon complaint of any party interested to determine after hearing whether any line operated by electric power falls within the terms of this proviso.

(b) The term "employee" means any person (1) who shall be at the enactment hereof or shall have been at any time after the enactment hereof in the service of a carrier, or who shall be at the enactment hereof or shall have been at any time after the enactment hereof in the employment relation to a carrier, and (2) each officer or other official representative of an "employee organization", herein called "representative" who before or after the enactment hereof has performed service for a carrier, who at the enactment hereof or at any time after the enactment is or shall be duly designated and authorized to represent employees in accordance with the Railway Labor Act, and who, during, or immediately following employment by a carrier, is, shall be, or shall have been engaged in such representative service in behalf of such employees.

(c) A person shall be deemed to be in the service of a carrier whenever he may be subject to its continuing authority to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of his service, for which service he receives compensation.

(d) A person is in the employment relation to a carrier when furloughed or on leave of absence, and subject to call for service and ready and willing to serve, all in accordance with the established rules and practices usually in effect on railroads.

(e) The term "service period" means the total service of a person for one or more carriers whether or not continuously performed either before or after the effective date, and includes as 1 month every calendar month during which such person has rendered service to a carrier for compensation and includes as 1 year every 12 such months. An ultimate fraction of 6 months or more shall be computed as 1 year.

(f) The term "annuity" means a fixed sum payable at the beginning of each month during retirement, ceasing at death except as otherwise provided in section 5 hereof or at resumption of service for which an employee receives compensation.

(g) The term "compensation" means any form of money remuneration for service, received by an employee from a carrier, including salaries and commissions, but shall not include free transportation nor any payment received on account of sickness, disability, pensions, or other form of relief.

(h) The term "retirement" means the status of cessation of compensated service with the right to receive an annuity.

(i) The term "age" means age at the latest attained birthday.

(j) The term "Board" means the Railroad Retirement Board.

(k) The term "effective date" means the 1st day of March 1936.

(l) The term "enactment" means the date on which this act shall become a law.

RETIREMENT

SEC. 2. Upon the attainment of 65 years of age and continuance in service by the employee (but not before the effective date of this act), the annuity of such employee shall be reduced one-fifteenth for every year of such continued service beyond the age of 65 years; except that such reduction shall not apply during any period, beginning at the age of 65 and not extending beyond the age of 70, while the employee is continued in employment under an agreement in writing between the carrier and employee filed with the Board, which agreement may provide for extension of employment for 1 year and thereafter in like manner for successive periods of 1 year each. Such reduction of annuity shall not apply to an employee who occupies an official position in the service of a carrier or to employees' representatives.

ANNUITIES

SEC. 3. The following-described employees, after retirement whether or not then in the service of a carrier, shall be paid annuities:

(a) A person (without regard to the period of service and whether rendered before or after enactment hereof), who either at the enactment hereof or thereafter shall be 65 years of age or over.

(b) A person who either at the enactment hereof or who thereafter shall be 50 years of age or over and who shall have completed a service period of 30 years. An annuity paid under this subdivision shall be reduced by one-fifteenth of such annuity for each year such employee may be less than 65 years of age at the time of the first annuity payment.

(c) A person who either before or after the enactment shall have completed a service period of 30 years and who shall be after the enactment hereof retired by the carrier on account of mental or physical disability. An annuity paid under this subdivision shall not be subject to the deduction specified in subdivision (b) of this section.

The annuities hereinbefore mentioned shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury which may be appropriated for that purpose. An annuity shall begin as of a date to be specified in a written application to be signed by the employee entitled thereto, and approved by the Board, which date shall not be more than 60 days before the filing of the application, nor before the date on which the first annuity shall have become due and payable. An annuity shall not be due and payable until 90 days after the effective date hereof. The annuity shall be payable on the 1st day of the month during the lifetime of the annuitant. Such annuity shall be based upon the service period of the employee and shall be the sum of the amounts determined by multiplying the total number of years of service not exceeding 30 years by the following percentages of the monthly compensation: 2 percent of the first $50; 1½ percent of the next $100; and 1 percent of the compensation in excess of $150. The "monthly compensation" shall be the average of the monthly compensation paid to the employee by the carrier, except that where applicable for service before the effective date the monthly compensation shall be the average of the monthly compensation for all pay-roll periods for which the employee shall have received compensation from any carrier out of 8 consecutive calendar years of such services ended December 31, 1931. No part of any monthly compensation in excess of $300 shall be recognized in determining any annuity. Any employee who shall be entitled to an annuity with a commuted value determined by the Board of less than $300 shall be paid such value in a lump sum.

ANNUITIES TO REPRESENTATIVES

SEC. 4. The annuity of a representative shall be determined according to such rules and regulations as the Board shall deem just and reasonable and, as near as may be, shall be the same annuity as if the representative were still in the employ of his last former carrier.

PAYMENTS UPON DEATH

SEC. 5. If a person receiving or entitled to receive an annuity shall die, the Board, for 1 year after the first day of the month in which the death may have occurred, shall pay, as herein provided, an annuity equal to one-half of the annuity which such person so dying may have received or may have been entitled to receive, to the widow or widower of the deceased, or if there be no widow or widower, to the dependent next of kin of the deceased. Any employee may elect, on making application for an annuity, to have the present value of the annuity apply to the payment of a reduced annuity to the employee during life and an annuity during the life of a surviving spouse. The present values and amounts of the annuity payments shall be determined on the basis of the combined annuity tables with interest at 3 percent per annum.

RETIREMENT BOARD

Personnel

SEC. 6. (a) There is hereby established as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government a Railroad Retirement Board, to be composed of three members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each member shall hold office for a term of 5 years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of the term and the terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President, one at the end of 2 years, one at the end of 3 years, and one at the end of 4 years, after the date of enactment of this act. One member shall be appointed from recommendations made by representatives of the employees and one member shall be appointed from recommendations made by representatives of the carriers, in both cases as the President shall direct, so as to provide representation on the Board satisfactory to the largest number, respectively, of employees and carriers concerned. One member, who shall be the chairman of the Board, shall be appointed initially, for a term of 2 years without recommendation by either carriers or employees and shall not be in the employment of or be pecuniarily or otherwise interested in any carrier or organization of employees. Vacancies in the Board shall not impair the powers nor affect the duties of the Board nor of the remaining members of the Board of whom a majority of those in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Each of said members shall receive a salary of $10,000 per year, together with necessary traveling expenses and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, while away from the principal office of the Board on duties required by this act.

Duties

(b) The Board shall have and exercise all the duties and powers necessary to administer this act. The Board shall take such steps as may be necessary to enforce this act and make and certify awards and payments.

The Board shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the name and address of each person entitled to receive a payment under this act, the amount of such payment, and the time at which it should be made, and the Secretary of the Treasury through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall make payment in accordance with the certification by the Board.

The Board shall establish and promulgate rules and regulations and provide for the adjustment of all controversial matters, with power as a Board or through any member or subordinate designated thereof, to require and compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, take testimony, and make all necessary investigations in any matter involving annuities or other payments, and shall maintain such offices, provide such equipment, furnishings, supplies, services, and facilities, and employ such persons and provide for their compensation and expenses, as may be necessary to the proper discharge of its functions. All rules, regulations, or decisions of the Board shall require the approval of at least two members and shall be entered upon the records of the Board which shall be a public record. The Board shall gather, keep, compile, and publish in convenient form such records and data as may be necessary, and at intervals of not more than 2 years shall cause to be made actuarial surveys and analyses, to determine from time to time the payments to be required to provide for all annuities, other disbursements, and expenses, and to assure proper administration and the adequacy and permanency of the retirement system hereby established. The Board shall have power to require all carriers and employees and any officer, board, commission, or other agency of the United States to furnish such information and records as shall be necessary for the administration of this act. The Board shall make an annual report to the President of the United States to be submitted to Congress. Witnesses summoned before the board shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

SPECIAL REPORT

SEC. 7. Not later than 4 years from the effective date, the Board, in a special report to the President of the United States to be submitted to Congress, shall make specific recommendations for such changes in the retirement system hereby created as shall assure the adequacy of said retirement system on the basis of its experience and all information and experience then available. For this purpose the Board shall from time to time make such investigations and actuarial studies as shall provide the fullest information practicable for such report and recommendations. The Board shall in a like special report to be made at the earliest practicable time, make specific recommendations with regard to the desirability and practicability of substituting the provisions for annuities and other benefits to employees under this act for any obligation for prior service or for any existing provisions for the voluntary payment of pensions to employees subject to this act by a carrier or any employees subject to this act, so as to relieve such carrier from its obligations for age retirement benefits under its existing pension systems and transfer such obligations to the retirement system herein established.

It is recognized that existing individual carrier pension plans are wholly at the option of the carriers unless in any case express provision is made otherwise, and no restriction is imposed under this act upon such plans; nor is it expected that carriers will modify existing pension plans on account of this act beyond a reduction of current pension payments under such existing plans in amounts equal to the annuity payments currently received by the employee under this act.

INVESTIGATION COMMISSION

SEC. 8. (a) That a commission be appointed which shall be composed of 3 Members of the Senate designated by the President of the Senate; 3 Members of the House of Representatives designated by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and 3 members who shall be designated by the President of the United States. The President shall designate one member to be chairman and another to be vice chairman of the Commission. The Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make, and report through the President to the Congress of the United States not later than January 1, 1936, the results of, a thorough investigation of all pertinent facts relating to a retirement annuity system applicable by law to carriers by railroad engaged in interstate commerce and particularly any and all questions for the investigation of which provision is made under the preceding section. The Commission is also authorized to hold hearings respecting desirable provisions of a sound retirement and annuity system. In the making of such investigation the Commission may consider the experience of other industries and of governments, as well as of the railroad industry, and may avail itself of the assistance of all agencies of the Federal Government. Until January 1, 1936, the duties and authority of the Board under the preceding section are limited to cooperation with and action under the direction of the Commission. With its report setting forth the results of its investigation, the Commission shall include such recommendations for legislation, if any, as it may deem necessary to give effect to its conclusions.

(b) The Commission, in the performance of its duties, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-fourth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production and impounding of such books, papers, records, files, and documents, to have access to such books, papers, records, files, and documents of any corporation or person, to administer such oaths and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures, as it may deem advisable. The several district courts of the United States and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction upon application by the Commission through its attorneys to compel obedience to any order or subpena of the Commission issued pursuant to this section. The orders, writs, and processes of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in such matters may run and be served anywhere in the United States.

(c) The Commission shall maintain such offices, provide such equipment, furnishings, supplies, services, and facilities, and employ, without regard to the provisions of the Civil Service Act such experts and clerical, stenographic, legal, or other assistance as may be necessary for the proper discharge of its duties, and without respect to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of any person employed. The President shall fix the compensation to be paid the three members of the Commission to be appointed by the President. All expenses of the Commission for all time in which the Commission shall be actually engaged in this investigation shall be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States, not otherwise appropriated, on a certificate of the chairman of the Commission, and the sum necessary for carrying out the provisions of this resolution is hereby authorized to be appropriated: Provided, That the total expense authorized for the purposes of the Commission shall not exceed the sum of $60,000 which shall include the compensation herein authorized.

COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 9. The several district courts of the United States and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, respectively, shall have jurisdiction to entertain an application and to grant appropriate relief in the following cases which may arise under the provisions of this act:

(a) An application by an employee or other person aggrieved in or to the district court of any district wherein the Board may have established an office, to compel the Board to set aside an action or decision claimed to be in violation of a legally enforceable right of the applicant, or to take action, or to make a decision necessary for the enforcement of a legal right of the applicant.

(b) The jurisdiction herein specifically conferred upon the said Federal courts shall not be held exclusive of any jurisdiction otherwise possessed by said courts to entertain actions at law or suits in equity in aid of the enforcement of rights or obligations arising under the provisions of this act.

(c) The Railroad Retirement Board, as hereinbefore established, shall be and constitute a body corporate and be capable of suing and being sued as such.

EXEMPTION

SEC. 10. No annuity payment shall be assignable or be subject to any tax or to garnishment, attachment, or other legal process under any circumstances whatsoever, nor shall the payment thereof be anticipated.

PENALTIES

SEC. 11. Any officer or agent of a carrier, as the word "carrier" is hereinbefore defined, or any employee as such word is hereinbefore defined, or any person whether or not of the character hereinbefore defined, who shall willfully fail or refuse to make any report or furnish any information required by the Board in the administration of this act, or who shall knowingly make any false or fraudulent statement or report in response to any report or statement required to be made for the purpose of this act, or who shall knowingly make or aid in making any false or fraudulent statement or claim for the purpose of receiving any award or payment under this act, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 12. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act or application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

SEC. 13. The appropriation of such money from time to time out of the Treasury of the United States as may be necessary to carry this act into effect is hereby authorized.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 14. This act may be cited as the "Railroad Retirement Act of 1935."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, a further amendment now becomes necessary in view of the fact that the Social Security Act includes railway employees. Since we are dealing with pensions for railway employees in a different act, the amendment which I send to the desk and now offer becomes necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 30, at the end of the bill, to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 15. The term "employment", as defined in subsection (b) of section 210 of title II of the Social Security Act, shall not include service performed in the employ of a carrier as defined in subdivision (a) of section 1 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think this method of legislating is establishing an exceedingly bad precedent. I was delighted to hear the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] suggest that it was not designedly done. I had the distinct impression that the Social Security Act, as to the constitutionality of which many of us had serious doubt, was divided into separate titles because the fear was existent that if the fund were segregated, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] suggested he would like to see done, there would be very grave danger of the act being declared to be unconstitutional. Accordingly the committee suggested another title and inserted a taxing feature wholly separate from the provisions with reference to the payment of money to various employees.

I never believed that would be a successful procedure. I believed the Supreme Court would look through it instantly, and that the suggestion of the change would not help at all. However, when I found in these two bills that the two proposals are separated entirely, I reached the conclusion that some smart person had probably thought he would be able to circumvent the Constitution in that way. I was not certain and I am not now certain whether the Supreme Court may take the two acts together in order to determine whether both or either may be constitutional.

As an illustration, when we pass the second bill providing for a tax upon railroads, there is no doubt that nothing in that measure will show the purpose for which the tax is levied. The Federal Government may take it, may pay the pensions due the World War veterans, may use it for relief, may use it to assist the farmers, may use it as the Federal Government may use any other part of the general fund which comes into the Federal Treasury. That is undoubtedly true. There is no earmark to the taxation.

If that may be done, it is undoubtedly true that we may continue to do other similar things. We might, for instance, levy a tax upon the automobile industry without specifying the purpose of the tax, though we in the Senate might understand that it is done to meet the needs of the farmers who are in distress. We might tax the steel industry, levying a tax and collecting millions of dollars a year, and we might agree here that it should be done for a specific purpose. But the query I have in my mind is whether or not the Supreme Court may look at the two acts and determine that the tax was levied for a purpose.

I do not raise the objection here for any other reason than to caution the Senate against this kind of legislation which separates a tax bill from the purpose of the tax itself. I think unless we can combine the two, and safely combine the two, we ought not to enact it at all. I am not in favor of circumventing the spirit of the Constitution in any way. We have developed new and important minds recently. They have new ideas. It seems to me this is one idea which they might be able to "put over." I am glad, in view of that thought, to hear the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] say it was not done designedly, that it was not for any such purpose as that.

With that statement in the record I assume the Supreme Court, when they come to consider one of these acts, will feel justified in considering both of them and reading the record in order to ascertain whether or not we have done a lawful thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Lewis	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	Logan	Robinson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMERCIAL AIRPORT

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the House has passed a bill dealing with the subject of a District airport. The Senate was not in favor of the House bill. As the matter now stands, no action will be taken at this session. I have prepared an amendment which I think reconciles the differences, which will authorize the President to appoint a commission to report in January next which site, if any, should be adopted. There is no appropriation involved; and I ask for the immediate consideration of the House bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I did not quite understand what the Senator's amendment purports to do. I desire to ask him whether it leaves discretion to the commission which is to be appointed to recommend any site, or whether the commission is to be confined to a choice between the two sites which have been under consideration.

Mr. TYDINGS. The bill makes no choice whatsoever. It asks the commission to review the whole situation, and to make a recommendation to the next Congress on January 4, 1936.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But the commission is not confined to a choice between the two sites which have been under discussion?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not at all. It may recommend either of them, or an entirely new one.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, as I recall the history of this matter, the House has passed a bill on the subject, and the Senate has passed a bill on the subject. The two bills deal with the situation from different angles. In order to have the matter properly before us I think the Senator from Maryland should explain the bill and the reason for his desire to take it from the calendar in an irregular manner.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the amendment strikes out everything after the enacting clause of the bill. It authorizes and requests the President to appoint a commission of seven members to examine all the sites now being used and any others they may care to look at, and to advise the Congress at the next session what it considers to be the best site for this purpose in the District, its cost, and any other information or data which may be of value. That is all there is to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland for the present consideration of the bill referred to by him?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to appoint a committee of seven persons to be known as the "District of Columbia Airport Commission", the said Commission to consist of persons who because of official positions are interested in the development of a commercial airport in the District of Columbia. No person shall serve on the said Commission who has any financial interest direct or indirect in any site or sites for said airport which may be the subject of consideration. The District of Columbia Airport Commission shall proceed immediately after its appointment and organization to examine all available data concerning potential sites for commercial airports within the District of Columbia, inspect such potential sites and shall select a site for such purpose with due regard to the cost of acquisition and development, safety, and adaptability to the requirements of commercial aviation and national defense.

SEC. 2. The said Commission shall preserve its decision and selection in confidence and shall make a confidential report thereon to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives during the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

SEC. 3. The members of the said Commission shall receive no salary as such, but shall be reimbursed for actual expenses incurred in the discharge of official duties as such commissioners. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,000 to be charged one-half to the moneys in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia and one-half to the moneys to the credit of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

VIRGIN ISLANDS CO.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, House bill 7380. The bill deals with a claim of $1,736.81 from the Virgin Islands Co. I understand that the Comptroller General has asked that the bill be passed. The Senate and House bills are identical; but the amendments to the House and Senate bills to carry out the Comptroller General's wishes are not identical. Therefore I ask for the immediate consideration of House bill 7380, so that the two bills may be in consonance, and may not die in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7380) authorizing the Virgin Islands Co. to settle valid claims of its creditors, and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Virgin Islands Co., a nonprofit corporation, created by special act of the Colonial Council of Saint Thomas and Saint John, Virgin Islands of the United States, to engage in enterprises for the rehabilitation of the Virgin Islands of the United States, is hereby authorized to pay to Phagen, Tillison, and Tremble for services rendered during governmental fiscal years 1934 and 1935 in providing a general accounting and cost system for the corporation a sum not to exceed $1,736.81: Provided, That this act shall not be deemed to authorize the payment of any claim out of any money other than funds belonging to or deposited to the credit of the corporation.

RETIREMENT SYSTEM FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3151) to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The House today has passed an identical bill. It is on its way to the Senate. I think both the Senator from New York and I have been interested in serving the convenience of the Senate in this matter. Does the Senator desire to have the Senate bill pass, or will he wait until the House message reaches the Senate?

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that I understand the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is about to address the Senate upon a matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. My information is that the House message will be here in a few minutes. If the Senator from Illinois desires to address the Senate, now is an opportune time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] sometime ago asked the Chair for recognition. The Chairs feels that he should recognize the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to any previous commitment, Mr. President.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask consent to have some observations read through the eyes of the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the clerk may read some observations which he has placed in the clerk's hands.

Mr. ROBINSON. I reserve the right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read the address.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, WEST SWANTON, VT.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SCHALL. I do.

Mr. GIBSON. Referring to Senate bill 2681, providing for building a bridge over an arm of Lake Champlain, the Senate has disagreed to the House amendment. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote disagreeing to the House amendment and asking for a conference, and I request that the bill and all papers relating thereto be returned to the custody of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the action of the Senate, whereby it asked for a conference with the House and appointed conferees, be rescinded, and that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REGULATION OF SHIPMENT OF FILLED MILK

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHALL. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 6361, to amend the Filled Milk Act. This matter came up on Friday, but the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asked that it go over. I have discussed the bill with him since that time, and he now states that he has no objection. The bill is approved by both departments which are involved, the Department of Justice and the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think that in view of what transpired in the Senate when the bill was called on the Unanimous Consent Calendar the Senator should explain the changes the bill makes in existing law.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, the only change it makes is to transfer from the Department of Justice, which now has the duty of enforcing the Filled Milk Act, which was passed in 1922, the duty of enforcing the act. It does not amend the law in any other way. Both departments involved want the change made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6361) to amend the Filled Milk Act, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT SYSTEM FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3151) to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SCHALL. I do.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in order that we may proceed in an orderly fashion, I suggest that we now take a vote upon the pending unfinished business, and I suggested a moment ago that a quorum be called for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator probably was temporarily out of the Chamber when it was explained that the message from the House has not as yet been received. The House has passed a bill identical with the Senate bill, and the Senator from New York and I reached the conclusion that the proper procedure would be to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill so as to avoid the necessity for future action.

Mr. McNARY. That action would be proper. I was out of the Chamber when the Senator made the suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. I believe the message is just about to be delivered to the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide for the sound, effective, and uninterrupted operation of the banking system, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8651) to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RETIREMENT SYSTEM FOR RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3151) to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SCHALL. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is suggested that the House bill lie on the table for some time until it can be ascertained whether amendments have been adopted by the body at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. WAGNER subsequently said: Mr. President, House bill 8651, identical with the bill upon which the Senate was about to act, is now before the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8651) to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ROBINSON. Let us have a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. I am not advised how he would vote on this question. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] has a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO].

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is unavoidably detained. If present, he would vote "yea."

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] is absent on official business.

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is detained in a meeting of the House Judiciary Committee. I am advised that if present and voting he would vote "yea."

I also announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] are detained in committee meetings.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is detained on official business.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who has been called away from the Senate. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that I am authorized to say that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] are unavoidably detained and that if present and voting each would vote "yea."

Mr. NEELY. The junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, on this roll call, he would vote "yea".

Mr. MCKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], but I do not see him in the Chamber. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the following general pair on this question:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I am not advised as to how either Senator would vote if present.

Mr. LOGAN. May I inquire whether the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, which I transfer to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 76, nays 3, as follows:

THE BANKING SYSTEM—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS. I call up the conference report on the banking bill and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide for the sound, effective, and uninterrupted operation of the banking system, and for other purposes, which was read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. LEWIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate bill 2665, calendar 1204, being the bill which has been described as the bill providing for the amalgamation of certain departments, and the change of name of the Department of the Interior to the Department of Conservation and Works.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] does not wish to yield for that purpose at this time. He wishes to complete his speech before yielding further.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH. Did not the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] have the floor, and did he not yield it temporarily in order that other business might be disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is correct. The Senator from Minnesota now has the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota does not yield for the transaction of business at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a measure?

Mr. SCHALL. No, Mr. President; I cannot yield at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator does not yield for that purpose. The clerk will read the address of the Senator from Minnesota.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PROSPERITY AND/OR "EMERGENCY"

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, until I heard the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] read to the Senate the other day eight prepared pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of glowing periods and long statistical demonstration, I supposed we were living in a period of dire emergency. I received that impression from the President himself when he asked us for another $5,000,000,000, or $1,500,000,000 more than all the revenue produced in a year, to meet the distress of the people on every hand throughout the land.

I also thought the country was in need, because Government agencies declared that we had 22,000,000 of the public on Federal doles—nearly one-fifth of the total population, and five times as many as 3 years ago.

I thought American labor was in need, not only from the declaration of labor itself but from the declarations of all Government labor agencies. I thought so for the additional reason that the President said he wanted about $5,000,000,000 for work relief. I took due note of labor data amounting to over 13,000,000 unemployed, an increase of nearly 90 percent in unemployment in 3 years—not to mention a loss of a similar number of employed in the fields of agriculture, commerce, domestic and professional life—bringing the total unemployed up to more than 20,000,000, or a greater number than the aggregate unemployment of the 22 industrial countries of Europe.

But all of this sad picture created in our minds by the messages of the President, by the reports of the American Federation of Labor, and by the tales of political woe with which our ears have been assailed through these 2½ years of pretended emergency, is now swept away in one eight-page breath by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

He has convinced us all, I am sure, that we are living again in a day of Nation-wide prosperity. He has proved it. He has given us the glowing newspaper headlines which show that we are now enjoying the boomiest times that ever boomed since the days of Coolidge, from 1923 to 1929.

I have had my office make a list of the boom headlines, and the boom trade, and the boom industries, and the boom employment and wages, and the boom insurance and bank news, and the boom stock and bond markets, and the boom farm income, and the boom industries and wages, and the boom in rising trade and good orders, and the boom in earnings and dividends, and the booming price indexes, and the booming South and Southwest, and the booming New England—though Rhode Island was not named—and the booming Philadelphia, where Mr. Hopson, the administration's grasshopper, under White House espionage, was hopping up and down, and the boom in all merchandise with a Nation-wide upswing, and the boom in the once so-called "heavy industries", which now are as light as a feather. In short, as the Senator from Tennessee himself assures us:

Our country virtually has returned to prosperity and happiness.

And he has discovered all this, not by a visit to the Democratic National Committee, not even from the editorials of the Democratic press, but from reading headlines in Republican newspapers.

So, Mr. President, I am wondering what the price of a headline is on the market page of a newspaper, and who pays for it.

But, alas, it remains for a Democratic Senator, the distinguished medical authority from the State of New York [Mr. COPELAND] to throw a dead fly or a live bumblebee into the ointment of the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from New York wants enlightenment and encouragement on this point, to wit:

Why is it, if all this boom in production and other things is going on, that the car loadings of freight during the 12 months just ended are 1,000,000 tons less than the year before?

Then the Senator from Tennessee explained that that was due to the trucks and busses, and he offered to drive the Senator from New York to Baltimore to show him. However, the Senator from New York says trucks and busses were running in Baltimore last year and the year before. He had seen them. Perhaps they were not carrying so much freight this year as last year, and perhaps what they carried they were taking to or from the railway station to help railway business.

Then the Senator from Tennessee suggested that the falling off in railway freight was due to airplanes. I have been wondering how many cars of heavy freight have been carried by airplanes in the past year. Would all the railroad freight carried by airplanes in the past 20 years over North America amount to one trainload? Does any airplane carry, at 100 times the rate charged by freight cars, any heavy freight that usually travels by rail? I am afraid this one dead fly cast in the direction of Tennessee has spoiled the ointment of a thousand distorted headlines, influenced, no doubt, by the local bank controlled from Washington.

But I am willing to assume—indeed, I should be glad to assume—that all the wisdom gleaned by the Senator from Tennessee is gospel truth. I am glad the Senator is studying Republican newspapers, for then he knows about the election returns from Rhode Island. I am glad to know that, according to the Senator, "prosperity and happiness" are "virtually returned."

I am glad, moreover, to hear from the Senator that we have a President who loves and upholds the Constitution. So now I know that we could not have received from the White House any unconstitutional bills, notwithstanding the former supposition that we have received about 40 since January.

It must be that we have now a different President from the one who a few weeks ago told a House committee to rush through a bill, notwithstanding the known fact of a "reasonable doubt" of the bill's constitutionality.

It must be that we have no longer an Executive who jeered at the United States Supreme Court that they had gone back to "horse and buggy" days because they had upheld the Constitution they had sworn to uphold.

It must be, moreover, that if we are "virtually returned to prosperity and happiness", we now have already what Rhode Island voted for the other day.

If Ohio had been allowed to hold another election test for the election of Congressman at large, the national roll call would have continued to make the verdict unanimous.

In short, if the picture painted by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee is true in all particulars, then we are again returned to the 70-year period of progress and prosperity which we enjoyed before the "crack down" of March 1933, before a dictator closed all banks, 15,000 of which were solvent, began plowing under the crops and reducing the pigs and cows to fertilizer, prostrating the mills and factories under 751 codes of unfair monopoly, produced the greatest textile strike in world history, and destroyed the gold standard and the confidence of the country.

If the conditions are here as described by the eloquent Senator from Tennessee, then I know that again we have a responsible and skilled financier at the head of the United States Treasury who knows banking and currency—a Hamilton, a Gallatin, a John Sherman or William Windom, a John G. Carlisle or Lyman J. Gage, an Ogden L. Mills, or the distinguished financier from Virginia, CARTER GLASS.

Then I know that the American dollar, when it lies down at night or looks out of the window at sunrise, can say in faith and full knowledge:

I know that my Redeemer liveth!

And the Government bond, when it walks abroad at noon, can say to the investors of the world: "The contract I here bear on my face that I am redeemable in so many ounces and grains of gold is honest, gentlemen, believe me, and not a blankety-blank whopper."

And the little "baby bond" can look up from its cradle and truly say: "My name, Mister, is $25 and not $18.75, as that boy across the fence there once told you."

And the free, self-reliant farm yeomanry of America, whose plowmen fathers fired the shot heard round the world, can say: "We have got back our farms and our freedom, and we are running those farms ourselves to produce the Nation's food. We reject the insult of an autocrat's offer to bribe us to loaf and raise weeds for the starvation of the hungry unemployed."

Moreover, if the prosperity shout of hallelujah rings true, we know another thing, and that is that American tariff laws are made again by Congress and its fact-finding commission without Executive interference, with free public hearings and debate, open hearings where labor, factory owners, and farmers are all entitled to a voice; and that the star-chamber proceedings between the Executive here and an emissary abroad are a thing of the past; and that we no longer are swamped by a tidal wave of imports which drown our farms and factories and take away the jobs of our employed.

But something has happened to our vision of prosperity and happiness. In the joyous recital of his epic poem the Tennessee prophet began to quote Scripture. And he exclaimed:

By their fruits ye shall know them.

Well, when he began to talk about fruit I looked out at the orchard, and this is what I saw:

Twenty-two million public charges hanging onto sour-apple trees; about 7,000,000 barnacles and caterpillars eating the substance out of the Federal orchard; the trees bowed with the weight of nearly $40,000,000,000 of bonded or contingent debt; the roots of the orchard eaten into and dying from the effect of $12,000,000,000 of accrued deficits; and the 100-percent standard of the orchard reduced to 59 cents.

So I said: "What has happened? What has been there? Is it a plague, a drove of hogs, or an army of hoboes?"

The distinguished poet from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] said:

This is Democracy, and it is Democracy of the Jeffersonian type.

If he had not said "Jeffersonian Democracy" I might have believed him. If he had said "Farley pork-and-pie Democracy on the Socialist platform of 1932" I would have known that he was at least 90 percent correct.

But when he charged it to Jeffersonian Democracy, it just would not go down. Recently I have had read to me about 100 letters of Thomas Jefferson on just the conditions—the fruit or lack of fruit—I saw out there through the spyglass of that scriptural quotation.

This is what I heard from the letters of Thomas Jefferson, and I know that my ears are on the job, because they heard the epic poem from Tennessee for over an hour. This is what Jefferson said about the state of the Union, and the way it should be conducted as to that fruit described.

He denounced public debt—which includes $40,000,000,000 of actual and contingent debt created by 2½ years of this monthly series of "emergency."

He denounced even the approach of Government deficit—of which this administration has accrued $12,000,000,000.

He denounced Federal domination of the States—which is now universal.

He denounced Federal usurpation of the rights and immunities of citizens.

He denounced those who had neglected to give us a Bill of Rights—free speech, freedom of the press and worship, due process of law, the right to a day in court, and the guaranty of a republican form of government to each and every State, and he himself wrote us a Bill of Rights which has never been trampled upon until this new deal.

Thomas Jefferson, furthermore, denounced Federal patronage, Federal bureaucracy, loaves and fishes, monopolies and doles, star-chamber proceedings, and Government subsidy and favoritism.

In short, Thomas Jefferson denounced pretty much everything that has happened under this administration since the day it repudiated the Jeffersonian Democratic platform adopted at Chicago, and climbed up over the back wheels of Norman Thomas' bandwagon and got on the platform of socialism and Moscow.

Then another idea came to me. If we are already in the boom times of "virtually returned prosperity and happiness", why are we making all these unprecedented "allocations" of billions to relieve misery? After 2½ years of alleged "emergency", we are projecting this "emergency" 2 to 4 years ahead, and the Treasury carries on the back page of its daily statement an "emergency fund" of $8,000,000,000 yet to be expended after $10,000,000,000 already has been expended from March 1933 to August 1933.

If prosperity and happiness are virtually returned already, why squander $8,000,000,000 more for nothing? Everybody here recalls what the President said at the opening day of this session. He was shouting for help. Said he:

Oh tempora! Oh Mores! Oh misery! Oh emergency!

Gentlemen of the House, gentlemen of the Senate, help! Here, put $880,000,000 into my left hand, and $4,000,000,000 in one lump sum in my right hand, and other billions into my trouser pockets, coat pockets, and vest pockets, and into the hats of Hopkins, Ickes, and Tugwell, in all around $8,000,000,000, to save the country from the direst perils the world has known. Hurry, and do not look at the Constitution and your legislative rights and powers. Just do it, and do it sudden. Make it enough to last, not only for this year but for 2 years ahead. Give me twice as much as you have or expect to have from revenue collections, and charge the deficit to the coming generation.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, notwithstanding his news "ads", is in what the French call a "cul de sac." Is he not charging the President of the United States with the grave crime of securing money under false pretenses?

If prosperity is here or just around the corner and the chicks are already going in pairs into every pot to take the place of the Russian blue duck in every window, then why are we putting out twice as much appropriation as reasonably we can raise from revenue to pay for this year's and next years' misery and want and planning for a further "emergency" extension for 2 years ahead?

Either the Senator from Tennessee got newspaper clippings for the wrong year—say for that boom period under the tax-reduction and debt-reduction era of the G. O. P.—or the gentleman from the White House sold us a con game and bum deck.

Moreover, if the epic from Tennessee about prosperity is so, we do not need this tax bill at all. Why crack down on prosperous industry, rising trade, a cheery stock market, booming sales, and floods of good orders with a confiscatory tax bill that no one wants and the Government does not need, just to kill the goose that lays the egg that is sucked by laughing hyenas of Farley's patronage zoo?

If what comes here from Tennessee is true, we need no tax bill, and we do not need the shame of a Government hold-up to haunt us another hour. All we need to do is to pass a joint resolution ordering the President to turn over $5,000,000,000 of "allocation" to balance the last Budget and show a fiscal-year surplus of $1,500,000,000 to apply on the debt. That done, we can go home and fix our fences from now till January. We can relieve the country from the nightmare of this threat of confiscation by the blighting hand of an administration that has spread 2½ years of blight over all industry and all the States. We can convert chaos into the heaven of normal peace and prosperity, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. Let us believe the Senator from Tennessee and do it. It will be the first decent constructive thing we have done in 2½ long years of false and pretended emergency.

There is one appeal in the oration of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to which all here may respond, regardless of party division. Says the Senator:

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Had he gone into details, I doubt not that he would have continued somewhat as follows:

Lest we forget the Democratic platform of 1932 and all other Democratic platforms since the time of Andrew Jackson in 1828.

Lest we forget the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, which we are sworn to maintain and uphold in order to get our respective Senate seats.

Lest we forget that the sole branch of government lawfully exercising legislative power is the Congress of the United States.

Lest we forget that the sole constitutional repository of the tax power—which is defined as "the power to destroy"—is Congress and not a bureau of the executive branch of the Government.

Lest we forget that the sole power of Federal Government over industry and commerce is the power of Congress over interstate and foreign commerce.

Lest we forget that the sole constitutional function of government in the appropriation and allocation of public funds, except in case of true emergency, like acts of nature or foreign foes, is to meet the public needs of government economically administered.

Lest we forget that the foundations of American liberty are laid in the civic rights and immunities of a free and industrious people, such people as those who began the preamble of their Constitution with the words "We, the people of the United States", which means that the people of this country are the sovereigns and that the Government in Washington is their public servant.

Lest we forget that this is "an indissoluble Union of indestructible States" and that each and every State is guaranteed a republican form of government.

Lest we forget that ours is a "government of laws" and not a dictatorship where, as "Comrade" Rexford Guy Tugwell, as he is known in Russia, tells us, "everything is done by men"—and such men!

Lest we forget that long succession of Presidents from George Washington down to the inauguration of the new deal—that American era of 144 years when Presidents respected their oaths to uphold and support the Constitution, respected the Bill of Rights including free speech and freedom of the press, respected the authority of Congress to make the laws, respected the function of the Supreme Court as the tribune which determines what is law under the Constitution, and respected the American creed of "government of, by, and for the people."

Lest we forget Washington and Jefferson, Madison and Monroe, Andrew Jackson and Abraham Lincoln, Benjamin Harrison and Grover Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, and Calvin Coolidge.

Let we forget the 35 administrations up to and including the first Administration of Woodrow Wilson, and including five wars, with a total expenditure of twenty-four and one-half billion dollars, to be compared with the new deal administration that in 4 years will have spent $39,000,000,000, approximately fifteen billions more than 35 administrations in 125 years.

Lest we forget the great structure of our American jurisprudence, built up by our great jurists from the day of John Marshall down to Charles Evans Hughes, and the long line of great Speakers, great Vice Presidents, great Secretaries of the Treasury, great Secretaries of State, and the great progress and prosperity, the greatest the human race has known, during the 144 years of American liberty under the Constitution and Bill of Rights.

So I find myself in full agreement with the noble words of the Senator from Tennessee:

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

THE RIGHT OF PETITION

Mr. President, it was Thomas Jefferson, the long-supposed godfather of the party which this Administration is presumed to represent, who wrote the first amendment of the Constitution, which includes, besides free speech, free press, free worship, and free assembly, the right of petition.

One of the grievances cited by the 57 signers of the Declaration of Independence against the British Government on July 4, 1776, was the denial of the right of petition, and the punishment of those who petitioned—petitioned against the destruction of their property; petitioned against "swarms of officers" and unjust taxes.

Said the signers of the great Declaration:

> In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms: Our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A Prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Over in London, under the Lord North Ministry of George III, all petitions from America were called "lobbying by insurrectionists" in disobedience to the Crown.

In fact, all petitions and petition groups are known as "lobbies" to the government or the legislative majority which represents the other side. All petitions supporting our point of view are termed "intelligent and constructive", and all petitions against our point of view are termed "lobbies".

Thomas Jefferson himself, Benjamin Franklin, and their compatriots of the early day of this Republic, were among the greatest lobbyists of their day and age, or of any age up to that time. Thomas Jefferson, the greatest letter writer in the history of modern politics, was the world's greatest "lobbyist" until recently.

It was due to the intensive "lobbying" of Thomas Jefferson through the mails of 1776 to 1824 that the early "Republican Party" of 1800 to 1824 was born—Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe being the first Presidents to call themselves "Republicans"—and it was due to the same "lobbying" through the mails that the foundation was laid for the organization of the "Democratic Party" by Andrew Jackson in 1828.

There was no telegraph in that day, or Jefferson doubtless would have flooded the wires with night letters. He would not have employed, perhaps, the method of the White House protégé, of whom Marvin H. McIntyre, Assistant Secretary of the President, was recently a guest at the Mayflower. Jefferson would have attached to his petitions genuine names of people he knew.

Jefferson, I say, would not have employed the methods said to be employed by the friend and protégé of the Chairman of the House Rules Committee, a bosom friend and party colleague of Postmaster General James Aloysius Farley, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, chairman of the New York State Democratic Committee, and political manager of the President. Not at all! The telegraphic methods now described by the press have come to their fruition only since the new deal came in.

Thomas Jefferson, who belonged to that Republican-Democratic school to which Drs. Tugwell and Moley say we shall never go back, would not have used the methods of the friend of the Rules Committee Chairman, and/or the Assistant Secretary of the President.

Indeed, that method might not have been Mr. "Hopson's choice" if he had had his way about it, and had not been compelled to use the new-deal way under the protective skirt of a new-deal escort.

After all, Mr. Hopson may have had no "choice." Unless he could send those telegrams in the new-deal way, he might not have been allowed to get away with it at all. If he had not used an "offensive" method to provide a smoke-screen for the Cohen-Corcoran-Frankfurter-Winerwurst bills, Hopson might not have received the protection of the new-deal Rules Committee, or had the honor of playing host to the Assistant Secretary of the President.

"Hopson's choice" seems to be what is called in my part of the country a "woodchuck case." The woodchuck he thought he saw over his eyebrow, as related in the story by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], was in reality the new deal. So Hopson banged away, 15,000 shots an hour, and got no woodchucks of any value; but he did get the protection of a Rules Committee Chairman, and the highly exalted privilege of playing host to a White House secretary.

When the Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate broke into the Hopson suite at the Mayflower, the press tells us, our officer was told to go away. He was not an invited guest, and he was spoiling a beautiful picture of the hopping Mr. Hopson and his White House guest sitting down to a choice and juicy steak, while laughing over the bone-heads on the Hill, who had been used as supernumeraries in this reproduction of a Midsummer Night's Dream.

Our Sergeant at Arms and his assistant had been made to play the part of the two Dromios. Our Senate Committee of Investigation, with, or without their knowledge, and with or without rehearsal, seem to have played the parts, first, of Theseus, Duke of Athens, the hero, and the less heroic roles of Bottom the Weaver, Quince and Snug, Flute and Snout, Oberon, king of the fairies, Puck or Robin Goodfellow, and the good fairies, Peaseblossom, Cobweb, Moth, and Mustardseed.

So, by their joint cooperation, the country has enjoyed a good play during the dog-day season—as good as any turned out in Hollywood. We have been shown what can be done under the new deal. No harm has been done, and nobody fooled except those who wanted to be fooled. Flute, the "bellows mender", was the only member of the cast who suffered from the heat. Starveling, the "tailor", who represented the unemployed, is still starving, but that would have been his fate anyhow. Cobweb lost his whole outfit, but the White House can easily replenish that, for cobwebs are one of the principal commodities of the new deal. Bottom, the "weaver", will have to beware of the fate of Richberg, who contracted "ants in his pants." Otherwise, all is well that ends well.

Mr. President, I desire to have printed at the conclusion of my remarks an editorial leader from the Evening Public Ledger of Philadelphia on the subject "The Same Old Battle Against the Lobbies."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REYNOLDS in the chair). Without objection, the editorial will be printed at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks.

(See Exhibit A.)

Mr. SCHALL. We have been having "lobbies", it seems, ever since December 15, 1791, when the 13 original States voted into the Constitution the article drafted by Thomas Jefferson, providing that:

> Congress shall make no law respecting * * * the right * * * to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

It is fortunate for us and our investigation that Jefferson only covered the matter of "making no law." He forgot to put in the word "investigation", or anything about the Sergeant at Arms, or the dinner party at the Mayflower; and that lets us out.

MANIA AGAINST RIGHT OF PETITION

Mr. President, I also ask to print, at the conclusion of my remarks, an editorial leader from the New York Times of Sunday, August 18, the accredited leading Democratic independent newspaper of this country, with regard to the political prejudice that has developed against the right of citizens to petition the Government for redress of grievances—the same issue which was foremost in 1776.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be printed at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks.

(See Exhibit B.)

Mr. SCHALL. In its references to the administration's attitude in opposing any opportunity for a hearing on measures fathered by the administration, the New York Times, which heartily supported Roosevelt in 1932, has this to say:

> The fact is notorious that the administration itself has done, or has countenanced, an immense amount of lobbying for measures which it favors. Only last week the Republican leader in the House, Mr. SNELL, openly denounced, by name, the President's special liaison official with Congress, and declared that his buttonholing of Members on the floor and in committee rooms had been absolutely "outrageous." But nobody gave heed to such charges. The full cry of the pack was on the trail of men openly, and, so far as is known, honorably, lobbying against legislation desired by the administration.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States has a mandate from the people, and not from the Executive. Our duty is to the people whom we represent, and not to the White House. It is our duty to make the laws to direct the Executive, and not to receive law-making instructions from him. It is our duty to afford a free public hearing to all who desire to petition us for redress of grievances. From the adoption of the Bill of Rights in 1791 that has been our sworn duty, pursuant to our oaths to support and uphold the Constitution, of which Jefferson's Bill of Rights is a constituent part.

This attack upon the right of petition, popularly termed "lobbying", is consistent only with the general line of attack upon the Constitution and the courts, and upon the legislative function of Congress.

EXHIBIT A

[From the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger of July 18, 1935]

THE SAME OLD BATTLE AGAINST THE LOBBIES

In one of its lucid moments the Senate Judiciary Committee tentatively rejected a proposal to end lobbying in Federal departments. The Senators realized this, after all, would bar an American citizen from making legitimate requests and filing justified protests.

Possibly some Senator felt, also, that since the Federal Government is moving to prohibit its own citizens from bringing suits against it for damages or other injuries, this lobbying proviso would be carrying matters a little too far.

As yet the new deal, as administered by its extreme doctrinaires, has not gone all the way in silencing the citizen. So far, at least, the right of petition has not been formally abolished.

There is a little more noise than usual in Washington now about silencing all lobbyists.

The idea, apparently, is to punish those who do not approve the ways and works of the administration and who dare attack the measures approved by the dominant forces in the Senate and House.

This is a very old war against the lobbyists. In part it is natural and justified. The history of lobbying is full of scandals and abuses. Lobbying can be and often is a filthy business.

There nearly always is an antilobbying bill pending. While he lived, the late Senator Thaddeus Caraway, of Arkansas, made war against them. Senator BLACK, of Alabama, has a bill requiring all lobbyists to register their names and objectives and to file monthly reports of what they spend and how they spend it.

The trouble about wiping out the lobbyist is that, after all, he has just as much right to be heard as any other citizen.

He has exactly as much right to offer testimony in a hearing or to approach a Member of Congress as has a Cabinet member or an administration advocate.

And he has just as much right to spend his time and money in preparing a case against an administration bill as has the administration to use the time of tax-paid Federal agents or employees in preparing a case favoring an administration bill.

There is something also in the viewpoints of Senators MOORE and SCHALL concerning the lobby's usefulness. Senator MOORE, of New Jersey, finds lobbying actually helpful in clarifying doubtful legislation. Senator SCHALL, of Minnesota, goes much further:

"Liberty is not at stake in any country where the citizens are welcome guests at the seat of legislation and a free 'lobby' maintains their Bill of Rights. Liberty is in danger where an autocratic executive is able to drive away all 'lobbies' of citizens from the executive throne, administers government through an executive star chamber, as during the Stuart tyranny in England 300 years ago, and as today in the 'new deals' here and in Rome, Berlin, and Moscow, and wherever bureaucratic dictatorship is in the government saddle."

Senator SCHALL does not believe in the sincerity of the lobby hunt. He regards it as another devilish new-deal device:

"This bogy cry of 'lobby', like the bogy cry of 'stop thief', is invoked by an autocracy which, in violation of article I, usurps the tariff-making powers of Congress, denies tariff hearings to its citizens, and makes executive tariff duties or abolishes duties in star chamber. This bogy cry of 'lobby' is raised and inspired by an autocracy which tried 3 years—through its Rayburn-Roosevelt bills, drafted by Frankfurter, Cohen, and Corcoran, to curb and destroy free communications, freedom of the press, freedom of the radio, telegraph, and telephone, and now demands that Members of Congress shall be barred from consultation with the people whose rights have been trampled upon by Federal autocrats."

The Senator's views may, or may not, be regarded as extreme. However, the tendency of Congress to shorten hearings, to limit debate and browbeat witnesses gives a basis for his charges. So, also, does the steady drift toward government by bureaucracy, executive order and decree.

Like it or not, the right of protest, the right to be heard, is an inalienable right in these United States. It can be and is abused. Usually it is abused by both sides in every important question that becomes an issue before Congress. It has caused the formation of "pressure groups" and is the favorite weapon of both organized minorities and special interests.

But it will be a sorry day when a citizen or a group of citizens, an organized minority or any special interest is denied a hearing and the right of protest. Liberty then will unquestionably be in danger.

[From the New York Times of Aug. 18, 1935]

EXHIBIT B

TWO CONGRESSIONAL MANIAS

It may be a trifle unfair to take the morbid symptoms displayed by this Congress within the past 2 months as if they were permanent characteristics. Men who are hot and tired and angry are often subject to nervous instability. They suffer from illusions and frustrations. Having to wrestle with many actual evils, they easily imagine others. But when this tendency works collectively through both Houses of Congress it produces some strange results. One of them is to cause Members to seize upon certain phrases, epithets, characterizations, exaggerations, and treat them as if they accounted for everything which they dislike and which they fancy the public would dread.

One such word of sinister power in this dying Congress has been a public utility. Name it, or let it somehow be dragged into seeming connection with pending legislation, and a sort of mania about it seems to afflict great numbers who ordinarily seem sane and sensible. Connect a witness before a committee, or even a Representative or Senator, with a utility company, and he is considered unworthy and doomed on sight. Last year, for example, when Senator AUSTIN, of Vermont, was making a powerful legal argument in the Senate, it was considered a complete answer to it, and a demolition of all that he had said, to point to the fact that before he was elected to the Senate and was practising law, he had been counsel for a local electric-power company. This year, the thing has grown much worse as the torrid heat of Washington and the extreme fatigue of Congressmen have made them susceptible to every suggestion and insinuation. Members who, perhaps because of firmer health or even of sounder judgment, have refused to follow the panic-stricken crowd and stand for sobriety and discriminating treatment of witnesses and their principals, have been looked at askance as if they had a record of secret crimes which could not bear the light of day.

The other thing which has seemed to drive Congressmen almost frantic by its very mention is the lobby. When it is up for debate or inquiry the strangest mental upset is seen on all sides. If it can be shown that lobbyists are against a pending bill, then that measure becomes at once a model of all that is right and true, and its opponents are left under the suspicion that their hearts are filled with evil thoughts and dark designs. No discrimination is permitted. The fact that an individual or a corporation has a right to be heard in opposition to a proposed law which will inflict serious damage upon him or it is entirely ignored. Testimony in favor of a controverted bill is welcome. Opposition to it is on the instant dismissed as selfish and sordid and probably corrupt. Cool observers at Washington—if anybody can keep cool there—remember that there is always lobbying when Congress is in session. Some of it may be bad, and may use forbidden methods, but much of it is perfectly legitimate and respectable. The fact is notorious that the administration itself has done, or has countenanced, an immense amount of lobbying for measures which it favors. Only last week the Republican leader in the House [Mr. SNELL], openly denounced by name the President's special liaison official with Congress, and declared that his buttonholing of Members on the floor and in committee rooms had been absolutely "outrageous." But nobody gave heed to such charges. The full cry of the pack was on the trail of men openly and, so far as is known, honorably lobbying against legislation desired by the administration.

This particular mania, in truth, went to such extremes and ridiculous lengths as almost to discredit itself. At any rate, it became a subject of scornful laughter by Members of Congress as well as by outsiders present. It may be hoped that cooler weather, or a few weeks of quiet at home, may restore the mental equilibrium of Congressmen who otherwise might be thought fit subjects for a psychoanalyst or a skilled psychiatrist.

STABILIZATION OF BITUMINOUS COAL MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the House has passed and sent to the Senate House bill 9100, to stabilize the bituminous coal mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous-coal resources of the United States; to provide for the general welfare, and for other purposes; and providing penalties.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be read twice by its title and lie on the table, in order that copies may be printed and be available.

The bill was read twice by its title and ordered to lie on the table.

RAILROAD-BANKRUPTCY RELIEF

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which has been considering House bill 8587, to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, be discharged from the further consideration of the bill. The committee has already reported out a bill practically identical with this measure, except that the House has made two or three amendments which the Senate committee has not made. My purpose in making this request is that the House bill may be made the unfinished business.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise merely to resume the matter which I had in mind when I yielded to the able Senator from Oregon touching the request of the Senator from Minnesota. I rise at this time again to renew the motion.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I recognize that the Senator from Montana is entitled to the floor, and I would not take it away from him for anything, but I wish to know to what bill he refers.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill is an amendment to section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act and provides for railroad reorganizations. I may say that the bill has passed the House. It is one of the bills recommended by Mr. Eastman because the present section 77, relating to bankruptcies of railroads, has been found to be unworkable, and this bill is an attempt to amend it so as to make the section workable. There is practically no opposition to the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Has the committee of which the Senator is chairman reported the bill favorably?

Mr. WHEELER. The committee has reported favorably Senate bill 1634, which is a companion bill. The House has made two or three minor amendments to the House bill, and we desire to have the House bill considered and passed.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this is not the bill relating to consolidations?

Mr. WHEELER. No; this is the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. SMITH. The railroad bankruptcy bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; the railroad bankruptcy bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the purpose of the Senator to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill and then to move to make the House bill the unfinished business?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the request, but I should not want the motion to make it the unfinished business finally disposed of until tomorrow.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I was intending to ask unanimous consent to make the bill the unfinished business, and if that were refused, to make a motion to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. McNARY. I shall not object to the substitution. The bill may be a very good measure, and doubtless is, but no one has been prepared for the measure's being called up today, no one had knowledge that it would come up today, and I suggest to the Senator, in all fairness, that after he obtains unanimous consent to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, he then make his motion, and let that be pending tomorrow when the Senate meets at 12 o'clock.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, has the Senator from Oregon any objection to discharging the committee from the consideration of the bill so that it may be put on the calendar? Then the Senator could make a motion to take it up. That would not interfere with the idea of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I made myself perfectly clear in the matter. I have no objection to the Senator's request, but I want his motion to be pending tomorrow, and not to have action on it today.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not submitting the motion. I am asking merely for the discharge of the committee from the consideration of the House bill.

Mr. McNARY. Again I say, I have no objection whatever to that. The only appeal I make is that no action be taken on the matter today.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not intend to ask for any action to be taken today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the understanding of the Chair that there is no objection to the discharge of the committee, which the Senator from Montana has just requested. As the Chair understands, the motion will be deferred until tomorrow; there will be no disposition of it at the present time.

If there is no objection, the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 8587, and the bill will be placed upon the calendar.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move that House bill 8587 be considered, which, if agreed to, will make it the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the motion of the Senator from Montana is not in order at the present time.

Mr. WHEELER. I will ask unanimous consent that House bill 8587 be made the unfinished business, with the statement that I will not ask for consideration of the bill until tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. That is very satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a motion pending at the present time. The motion of the Senator from Montana therefore is not now in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the pending motion?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senate has given consent to the substitution of the bill mentioned by the Senator from Montana. The motion now is being made by the Senator to make it the unfinished business. That is the pending motion and is in order at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon that the Chair is informed that the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] made a motion relative to Senate bill 2665, Order of Business 1204, and that that motion is pending at the present time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that motion was not made. There was an attempt to make the motion, but the Senator from Minnesota refused to yield for the purpose of having the Chair entertain the motion, so it went by the board. That was the record that was made here earlier in the afternoon. I particularly know about it because I conferred with the Senator from Minnesota at the time and he did not yield for the purpose of having the motion made. Therefore, it is not the pending motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had been advised that a motion was pending.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to correct the recollection of the Senator from Oregon. I made a motion to take up the bill relating to the amalgamation of certain departments.

I was proceeding when the Senator from Oregon gave some notice that the Senator from Minnesota desired to present an address, and it was then that I yielded, announcing that at the conclusion of the address I would follow up the motion. The Senator probably has forgotten that I made the motion and yielded.

Mr. McNARY. There was no yielding on the part of the Senator. The Senator from Minnesota had the floor. The Senator from Illinois rose and offered to make a motion. I conferred with the Senator from Minnesota and he declined to yield for that purpose. Hence that foreclosed any right the Senator might have had under different circumstances. If the motion had been made, it could not have been entertained, because the Senator from Minnesota did not yield for that purpose when he had the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8587, so as to make it the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the motion may be made and be pending, but I do not want it pursued this evening.

Mr. WHEELER. Will not the Senator allow the motion to be voted on? I am not going to ask that the bill be taken up until tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. The motion has been made and is pending. I do not want a vote on the motion tonight; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator from Montana will defer action upon his motion until tomorrow morning, in accordance with the request of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the senior Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I now renew my motion, which I felt I had made, in spite of the difference between me and my able friend from Oregon, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2665, to change the name of the Department of the Interior and to coordinate certain governmental functions, and that the bill be made the unfinished order of business.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. LEWIS. Who is it who desires that I yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I make a point of order.

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have nothing to say other than that I am sure the Chair will find that the motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to advise the Senator from Kentucky that the senior Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to take the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator for the purpose of propounding his inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Montana, through the Chair, whether he shares the view that his motion shall be temporarily laid aside?

Mr. WHEELER. No; I do not care to have it temporarily laid aside. I want the motion pending.

Mr. BARKLEY. So long as that is the pending motion, of course, it would not be in order for the Senator from Illinois to make his motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Montana had made a motion and that it had been objected to by the Senator from Oregon, and then the Senator from Montana advised the Chair that he would not press for action upon his motion, but that he would leave it in abeyance until tomorrow morning. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will now recognize—although it is unnecessary—the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, under parliamentary procedure I now have the right to move that the bill be taken up, and that it then be laid upon the table as the unfinished business.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois must know that that motion is not in order, and I invoke the rule which is familiar to everyone.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to announce that I have been suffering great misfortune. I cannot gather from the velvet tones of the eminent leader on the Republican side, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], either his expression or his meaning. If he meant to intimate that I am out of order, I should like to know in what respect I am out of order, because in every detail I should be glad to correct it. The Senator from Idaho has intimated that he would ask if I would yield to him. I gladly yield to him, and trust he will give me the information I desire.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BORAH. The motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill is debatable, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will express the opinion that it is a debatable motion.

Mr. BORAH. Then, when the Senator from Illinois shall have made his motion and concluded his remarks, I wish an opportunity to debate the motion to take up the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. In order to straighten out the parliamentary situation, I ask whether the Chair held that the motion of the Senator from Illinois is not now in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not rendered that decision.

Mr. CONNALLY. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One moment. The Chair has not rendered that decision, the Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky; but the Chair will also state to the Senator that he is of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from Illinois is not in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Chair now render that decision, officially?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As much as the Chair dislikes to do it, yes; because the Chair would like very much to accommodate the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. My point of order is that if the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is before the Senate, it must be acted upon. I do not believe that the Senator from Montana can make a motion and then defer action upon it until tomorrow, and thereby block the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Chair is likewise of the same opinion. However, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] asked that the vote on the motion go over until tomorrow.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make the further point of order that the pending business is the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If that should be displaced by an agreement to wait until tomorrow, the motion of the Senator from Illinois would be in order. I do not understand that a Senator can make a motion and suspend it in air and keep the Senate from the consideration of further business.

Mr. TYDINGS rose.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. That is a privileged motion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before the motion is put, may I ask the Chair what business was before the Senate prior to the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. TYDINGS. But the Chair said that had gone over until tomorrow.

Mr. WHEELER. No, Mr. President; that is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By acquiescence.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield to me to make a motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I had moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That motion of the Senator from Oregon is not debatable. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understood the Chair held that the Senator from Illinois had the floor. The Senator from Illinois has not yet yielded to anyone to make a motion. I am asking him now if he will yield to me to make a motion.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before I do that I wish to have the situation understood. Has a ruling been made by the Chair as to my having a right to move that the bill which I have tendered be taken up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire of the parliamentary clerk as to the parliamentary situation, and will then state it.

Mr. LEWIS. When the Chair has stated the parliamentary situation, I should like to relate the status of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised by the parliamentary clerk that the parliamentary status is as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] moved to take up a bill. While that motion was pending, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] made a motion to take up another bill. If the Chair is correct about that, one motion will have to be disposed of—that of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]—before the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] may be considered.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, as a substitute for the motion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], I move that the bill which I have tendered be first taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator that that motion will not be in order until the motion of the Senator from Montana, which is pending, shall have been disposed of.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. McNARY rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] has the floor. Does the Senator yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. LEWIS. I will yield in just a moment. I should like to state the status of the bill which I have tendered. I have been interfered with by eminent parliamentarians who have dealt me saber thrusts here and there until I am perforated.

I ask now: Have I not the right to tender the bill as a substitute for the bill which was the subject of the motion of the able Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]? Must I wait until the motion of the Senator from Montana shall have been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair again states that the parliamentary situation, as stated to him by the parliamentarian, is that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has made a motion to take up a certain bill. The clerk will report the bill by title.

Mr. LEWIS. But the Senator from Montana has asked to have it go over until tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that has already been done, and the Senator from Montana has announced that he will not ask that his motion be passed on until tomorrow. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois, under the circumstances, if he will yield to me in order to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LEWIS. I think it would tend to undo this tangle, and it would do no harm, to follow that procedure; so I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is pending. The Senator from Montana cannot postpone a motion except by unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of that motion be postponed until tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ASHURST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Edwin D. Bolger, of Michigan, to be United States marshal, western district of Michigan, to succeed Martin Brown, resigned.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Marion M. Caskie, of Alabama, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for a term expiring December 31, 1941, vice Patrick J. Farrell, term expired.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, reported favorably the nomination of George A. Lingo, of Alaska, to be register of the land office at Anchorage, Alaska, vice George J. Love, deceased.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 16) relative to the nomination of E. W. S. Key, of Oklahoma, as State administrator in the Works Progress Administration.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of Rex E. Willard, of Washington, to be a regional director of the Resettlement Administration.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the following nominations:

Walter Packard, of California, to be a regional director of the Resettlement Administration; and

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

RESETTLEMENT ADMINISTRATION

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of J. H. Jenkins, of Colorado, to be regional director.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask that that nomination go over.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] a question about the last nomination. The Senator from Wyoming recognizes, of course, that this nomination has reached the Senate late in the session with the approaching adjournment of the Congress near at hand. Will the Senator state whether his request is likely to be renewed on a subsequent day, if he is able so to say, or whether he is merely continuing to seek information and expects to reach a decision by tomorrow.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am seeking light upon the nomination.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is that all the Senator from Wyoming wishes?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is all. I may say to the Senator from Colorado that I learned very recently that the district for which this nomination is made includes the States of Montana and Wyoming, as well as the State of Colorado. My information is that the Senators from Montana and Wyoming have had no report with respect to the nomination and no opportunity to investigate it. I am merely asking that the nomination go over.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If I understand the statement of the Senator from Wyoming, he has no present objection to the nominee?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; I am only seeking information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be passed over.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service may be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Diplomatic and Foreign Service nominations are confirmed en bloc.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that nominations in the Coast and Geodetic Survey may be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Coast and Geodetic nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Clyde W. Greenwade, to be postmaster at Springfield, Mo.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the request of the Senators from Missouri I ask that the nomination may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nomination will be passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Andrew J. Daniel, to be postmaster at Franklin, Ga., and Peyton T. Anderson, to be postmaster at Macon, Ga., both of which had been reported adversely.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the two nominations, reported adversely, may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be passed over.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of J. Ernest Douglass to be postmaster at Warrensburg, Mo., reported adversely.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nomination be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was rejected.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Rafael P. Robert to be postmaster at Fajardo, Puerto, Rico; reported adversely.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nomination be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination?

The nomination was rejected.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that nominations of postmasters on the calendar, except those passed over or rejected, may be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. With the exceptions noted, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the Army may be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

PUBLICATION OF OFFICIAL REGISTER OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Printing I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8473) for the compiling and publishing of the Official Register of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 1400) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8473) to provide for the compiling and publishing of the Official Register of the United States was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOVERNMENT INSPECTION OF SEA FOODS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, on the calendar is the bill (S. 3194) to amend section 10A of the Federal Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended. I desire to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I am confident it will precipitate no discussion; otherwise I should not submit the request. It merely provides for the inspection of sea foods by the Government, applying the same rule to sea foods that is now applied to meats. While it is not confined to shrimp, yet it covers the inspection of shrimp.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from what committee was the bill reported?

Mr. HARRISON. From the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McNARY. Unanimously?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. I am sure there is no objection to it.

Mr. McNARY. What is the general purpose of the bill?

Mr. HARRISON. The purpose of the bill is to have Federal inspection of shrimp, oysters, and so forth. The Government ought to pay for the inspection. As applied to the shrimp business, it would cost perhaps not over $60,000 a year. We have a law of this kind now, as the Senator knows, applicable to the meat-packing industry.

Mr. McNARY. Would the inspection be in the same form as inspection of meats is now?

Mr. HARRISON. Absolutely. The Government inspectors would be the ones to make the inspection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3194) to amend section 10A of the Federal Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10A of the act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes", approved June 30, 1906, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10A. The Secretary of Agriculture, upon application of any packer of any sea food for shipment or sale within the jurisdiction of this act, may, at his discretion, designate inspectors to examine and inspect such food and the production, packing, and labeling thereof. If on such examination and inspection compliance is found with the provisions of this act and regulations promulgated thereunder, the applicant shall be authorized or required to mark the food as provided by regulation to show such compliance. Services under this section shall be rendered only upon payment by the applicant of fees fixed by regulation in such amounts as may be necessary to provide, equip, and maintain an adequate and efficient inspection service. Receipts from such fees shall be covered into the Treasury and shall be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for expenditures incurred in carrying out the purposes of this section, including expenditures for salaries of additional inspectors when necessary to supplement the number of inspectors for whose salaries Congress has appropriated. The Secretary is hereby authorized to promulgate regulations governing the sanitary and other conditions under which the service herein provided shall be granted and maintained, and for otherwise carrying out the purposes of this section. Any person who forges, counterfeits, simulates, or falsely represents, or without proper authority uses any mark, stamp, tag, label, or other identification devices authorized or required by the provisions of this section or regulations thereunder, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall on conviction thereof be subject to imprisonment for not more than 1 year or a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or both such imprisonment and fine."

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, August 20, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, AUGUST 19, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and merciful God, bear with us we pray Thee. Create within us clean hearts and renew a right spirit within that we may distinguish the real values of life. We thank Thee for that aroma of pure humanity with which our Lord and Master was clothed touching the joy and beauty of human life. May they be clearly seen by us and passionately desired. Let us discern His sovereignty and purpose in the unity and evolution of the ages. Grant, our Heavenly Father, that His ideals may float on in peace forever over a happy, prosperous, and God-fearing people. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, August 17, 1935, was read and approved.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The certificate of election in due form of law of Representative-elect CHARLES F. RISK to the Seventy-Fourth Congress to fill the vacancy of the First District of Rhode Island has been received and filed in this office.

Very truly yours,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Mr. RISK will present himself at the bar of the House.

Mr. RISK appeared in the well of the House and took the oath of office.

THE SNYDER-GUFFEY COAL BILL

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business before the House is the vote on the passage of the so-called "Guffey bill."

The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on final passage we ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 168, answered "present", 2, not voting 66, as follows:

RAILROAD-RETIREMENT BILL

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 345

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8651, a bill "to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I cannot find——

The SPEAKER. That is not the question before the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. An objection does not prevail over the question put by the Chair.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman asked unanimous consent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution?

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had voted in the affirmative.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. All those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for a division.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, is it customary to consider legislation of this kind without having a printed report available, so that we may see what the bill is all about?

The SPEAKER. The House is proceeding under its regular rule, which provides that two-thirds of the Membership may consider a resolution on the same day reported if it so desires. Two-thirds having voted to consider the resolution, it is now before the House for consideration.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further question of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question as to what is customary is not a proper matter for consideration at the present time, because that lies wholly within the province of the House itself.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a rule for the consideration of the railroad retirement pension bill, which has been reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House and by a similar committee of another body. It is somewhat of an emergency, and this method was adopted to bring it up for consideration at this time. The rule was reported out of the Rules Committee this morning.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this bill comes up for consideration under a rule because of an existing emergency to take care of a situation that has arisen since the last session of Congress. We passed a railroad retirement act in the last session which the Supreme Court thought contained provisions which were unconstitutional. There has been an attempt to remedy these particular features of the former law in order to provide retirement for those who are employed by the railroads of this country.

The railroad workers occupy a position unique in that it is somewhat quasi-public in nature. Railroad employment is hazardous and requires those especially skilled. The railroads are under the exclusive control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and all legislation pertaining to railroads must come from Congress. It is therefore our duty to enact a law that will provide a uniform system of retirement for railroad workers. This would be a contribution to efficient service and give employees an old-age security.

Mr. Speaker, most of the railroad systems have their own retirement plans, but these plans are different. There is no uniformity. The railroad workers, changing employment from one system to another, very often lose retirement rights as well as seniority. This bill provides a uniform system whereby men who are employed for a long period of years in the railroad business may have the same rights under one railroad system that they have under another, and attempts to set up uniformity.

There is no stability at the present time. There is no security to the railroad workers who have to labor under these changing conditions. This bill sets up a trust fund in the Treasury of the United States. A special tax will be levied against the railroads for the maintenance of this fund. The funds are provided by taxation under a separate bill. The railroads have contributed in the past under their own systems to a fund for local control. This bill contemplates, as I stated, a trust fund which will be administered through the Treasury in a uniform manner over all the railroads throughout the United States.

It has been found in many instances that funds for pension and retirement purposes have been paid by the men themselves. The funds were invested by officers of their crafts. Sometimes the trustees of these funds have invested the money unwisely and all the security of the reserve fund has been swept away. In providing this uniformity to be administered by the Government we remove those hazards of investment on the part of those who have the trust funds in charge and will add that security which is necessary to a retirement fund for all employees of the railroads upon a uniform basis.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON. In connection with this subject of benefit under the law, we are here seeking to legislate for the benefit of the employees of the railroads. Now, let us assume a company like the Norfolk & Western, which has a more liberal system than is provided by the proposed law. Does the gentleman see any objection to making an exception in the case of those roads that already deal more liberally with their employees?

Mr. GREENWOOD. As I understand this law, it will not destroy those systems with reference to the men who have certain rights under them, but will result in the accumulation of a reserve fund as to the future. The two plans will be worked out together.

Mr. ROBERTSON. This only excepts those who have already gone on a retirement basis?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman will understand that no railroad management is permanent. It changes from year to year and railroad systems of retirement may change. These systems may be altered so that ultimately there will be a lack of uniformity.

In further reply to the gentleman from Virginia, may I say that it strikes me that in the interest of continuing stability of a system it is better not to rely upon any one railroad system that has set up a single plan, because the control of railroads change. Mergers are formed with other systems, and these systems change from year to year. If we are to have stability, we ought to have uniformity.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Could not the Retirement Board take care of that matter if the railroad was not giving a better plan?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think it can be taken care of under this law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am sure that the Members of the House are very much interested in the gentleman's very informative address, but I wonder if the gentleman will discuss the constitutionality of this bill. It will be recalled that Congress, at the last session, passed a similar retirement bill, which I supported; but, as is well known, that bill was declared unconstitutional. I have therefore asked the gentleman to discuss the constitutionality of the pending measure.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I do not think I have much time left of the 5 minutes yielded to me, but I may say to the gentleman that those who are most interested in the bill have attempted to remedy the features to which the Supreme Court raised objections in the former act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is the point I wanted brought out. I understand the objectionable features have been eliminated from the bill.

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is my understanding. Of course, the bill is brought before us with the assurance that it is an emergency measure and that they have remedied every situation of an objectionable nature which arose under the former bill.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the rule will pass, as I am personally very much interested in the bill.

Mr. MEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, if I remember right, the decision of the Supreme Court in deciding that the previous bill was unconstitutional was a 5 to 4 decision.

Mr. GREENWOOD. That is very true, as many of the great decisions have been decided by one man on the Supreme Court. The Members interested in this bill have attempted to remedy those features in this bill and we have every reason to believe that the Supreme Court will now declare this bill constitutional.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, may I say I am glad the gentleman has brought out that point, because that seems to be the only question in the minds of those who might otherwise be prone to vote against the bill, but who I am sure will support the measure if given reasonable assurance that this bill will stand up.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think that is true. Most of us, I am sure, recognize the necessity for security and uniformity in connection with this class of legislation.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, about 10 minutes ago the Chairman of the Rules Committee asked that a rule be adopted to consider H. R. 8651. At that time there was not a report from the committee in the Chamber of the House of Representatives in reference to this bill. No Member of the House of Representatives, outside of the members of the committee, knew exactly what the rule contained or what was in the report of the committee; and when we tried to get information from the Speaker as to whether the rule that was to be considered would give the Membership of the House any information, we could not get such information from the Speaker, and we could not get it from any person, because the House was by a two-thirds vote granting permission to consider the bill at this particular time, and I venture the assertion that of the two-thirds who voted for the consideration of this bill not 1 out of 20 knew what he was voting for, "must" legislation being driven through to completion and law. Poor law and poor lawmakers.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RICH. I will in a short time, because I think the gentleman has more information in reference to the "must" legislation than probably any other Member of the House, or he probably can get the information, for I doubt if I can. I will take this statement out of the RECORD.

Mr. KELLER. No; leave it in the RECORD. It is perfectly good.

Mr. RICH. Now, we are going to consider legislation that is going to change many of the rules and regulations with respect to pension systems now enjoyed on many railroads, some of them much preferable to anything this bill will permit.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I will yield to the gentleman in just a few minutes.

Mr. KENNEY. I want to ask just one question. Does the gentleman know that the report on this bill is now available?

Mr. RICH. I have one, but it just came into the House this very minute, so that the Membership of the House did not have an opportunity to know what was in the report before, and they have not had time since the time it came into the House to read it, let alone give it any consideration. One of the great complaints I want to make about this "must" legislation is the way we are driving it through. We are driving things through here today that you will find you are going to regret many, many times, and the Democratic Party must assume the responsibility.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I want to say something about this proposed legislation, and then I shall yield.

Mr. HARLAN. Does the gentleman know that this is not on any "must" legislative program?

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman speak for the President of the United States?

Mr. HARLAN. I speak from information.

Mr. RICH. Where did the gentleman get the information?

Mr. HARLAN. From the papers, the same as everybody else.

Mr. RICH. Are the papers speaking for Mr. Roosevelt?

Mr. HARLAN. I do not know; they seem to be.

Mr. RICH. A good many of them do, and if the papers do speak for him, if you will read the Washington Herald and the Washington Times editorials you will find they are giving Mr. Roosevelt some pretty sound advice; and if he would take this advice he would not do some of the things he is doing now. He would be a Democrat, not a Socialist.

Mr. MORITZ and Mr. KENNEY rose.

Mr. RICH. If I knew that I was going to get 10 minutes more I should be pleased to yield.

Mr. KENNEY. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the report on this bill was filed on August 3.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman knows that this report just came into the House not over 10 minutes ago. Why is the gentleman trying to camouflage the matter before the people of the country by stating that this report was filed months ago, when we just got it? The gentleman has not had time to read it himself.

Mr. KENNEY. Yes; I have read it.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman, but I hope that I may continue with my statement in reference to this bill.

Mr. WITHROW. This bill was considered by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House and was reported to the Rules Committee on August 3 of this month.

Mr. RICH. Yes; but when the Rules Committee gets information that committee buries it. The Rules Committee brought this matter up here to be considered this morning, and they did not give anybody any notice about it coming up for consideration today; and when it was brought before the Rules Committee this morning they did not give us any information whatever they would consider it at once on the floor of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield, because I want to talk about what the Rules Committee has done.

The Rules Committee considered this legislation, brought it in here, and you Members of the House did not know what it contained; and now you are asked to pass a rule to consider this legislation by a two-thirds vote. "Must" legislation forced through by Presidential mandate. Dictator legislation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a correction of that statement? The Members of the House who are interested in the problems of the workingman instead of the capitalists knew what was in this bill when it was reported on August 3.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that there are a lot of us who are interested in the workingmen, but we ought to treat them all alike; and that is what I am trying to bring out here. If we are interested in the workingmen of the country, why do we not treat all the workingmen in this country the same? Why make a favored class out of the laboring men engaged in any particular branch of industry?

Mr. O'MALLEY. We have got to start somewhere.

Mr. RICH. We passed here in the House of Representatives a few weeks ago the social-security bill. When we passed that legislation we were trying to take care of all the people in this country, regardless of the industry in which they were engaged and regardless of what business they were in, and the individual who is working in a grocery store, the individual who is working in a silk mill, the individual who is working on a railroad, or the individual who may work in the mines were to receive under the social-security bill the same kind of treatment, and it is right that they should, because we should not establish any preferred classes or any favored classes, which this bill does.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I have not the time. If we are going to give consideration to all of these classes, why should we come in here now to try to do something in certain instances that is going to cause a hardship to some railroad employees, because there are certain railroad-pension systems now that are much better for the employees than anything this bill may do for them, and we should be careful not to injure the rights of old railroad employees who have been retired.

The former bill of 1934 was declared unconstitutional; this bill is similar. This bill levies a tax on the pay roll of the railroads of 4 percent and of the employees of 2 percent to pay the bill. It will add sixty million to railroad operation. The bill sets up another bureau.

Congress has passed the Social Security Act, which applies to railroads as well as to all other lines of industry. Under this act the railroads will be taxed $16,300,000 in 1937 for old-age pensions, which amount will steadily increase, until in 1949 the amount will be $49,000,000. In addition the railroads must pay into the unemployment fund created by the Social Security Act for the first year $16,500,000, which will increase to $49,500,000 in 1949. In other words, under the Social Security Act the cost will increase steadily from $49,000,000 in 1937 to $98,500,000 in 1949. If the pension bill is passed on top of the Social Security Act, railroads subject to the act will have to pay $72,000,000 the first year, this being 4 percent upon the pay rolls. We may expect this feature of the law to be changed from time to time so that the railroads and the employees will have to absorb the entire cost. This cost will unquestionably rapidly increase, as shown by the estimate made by Mr. Latimer, chairman of the Railroad Retirement Board, so that in a few years 15 percent of the pay roll will be required to meet the expense. In addition to all this expense there is the cost of the present pension system, which is approximately $36,000,000 a year. It is perfectly clear that the railroads cannot bear this enormous expense, since they lacked $32,000,000 of paying their fixed charges in 1934.

It is manifestly unfair to impose this burden upon railroads, whereas their competitors on the highways and on the waterways are not subjected to similar requirements. No one can give any good reason why this burden should be placed upon the railroads while their competitors, who are handling a very large part of the traffic, are subject only to the Social Security Act. Even if the railroads were exempted from the Social Security Act, the present pension bill will make the expense, particularly in the earlier years, very much greater than the Social Security Act.

The fact of the matter is we are going to try and give these employees pensions over and above what we would give employees in other lines of endeavor. I make the point that that is not the right thing to do, to give certain favorite classes of employees preference over mill men, over store clerks, and over miners, and so forth.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. No; I want to finish this and then I will yield. When we take the various railroads in this country and consider the changes that are going to be made on the recommendation of Mr. Eastman, and legislation that is going to be put through, you are going to have some of the most difficult problems to solve that you have ever had.

You are driving railroads into Federal ownership, you are driving into Federal control and operation under the guiding hand of politicians the railroads of this country. When you do that, I predict for this country the most sorrowful days in its existence. Not only do you drive into Federal ownership the railroads, but when you have other legislation passed during the last 2 years putting the Government into all lines of business, into all lines of endeavor, contrary to the Constitution of this country, you are doing those things which will help make the United States socialistic; and furthermore, we are heading for communism. Where is the Democratic Party and its platform adopted in 1932?

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman said a while ago that this bill was going to destroy the present railroad-pension systems, to the loss of the employees. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that the million of railroad employees of this country are making no such complaint, that they are unanimously in favor of this legislation, and their organizations are supporting it?

Mr. RICH. I have received letters from railroad employees saying they are against the bill. How do you account for that?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I am taking this time on the rule because the matter has come up very suddenly, and there has been little chance to consider and study the bill. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if I am correct in understanding that this legislation is not perfect, but that there must be additional legislation?

Mr. MONAGHAN. The gentleman is wrong in assuming that this legislation is not perfect. This legislation by itself will stand on its own bottom.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Where does the money come from?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Out of the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLLISTER. There is no appropriation in this bill, of course?

Mr. MONAGHAN. No.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman then states that if this bill should pass, we are putting ourselves upon record as providing that annuities shall be paid to employees of a certain class directly out of the Treasury. Is that the case?

Mr. MONAGHAN. That is correct in many instances. We have made the railroads a special class because of their business character. The Adamson 8-hour law, the Interstate Commerce Act itself, the Transportation Act of 1920, the safety-appliance law, and many others were put upon the statute books upon that theory. Besides that, hundreds of millions were loaned the railroads through the R. F. C. The railroads are peculiarly interstate carriers. They are engaged in interstate commerce, and the Congress has been the body to which they come for relief and legislation.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Can the gentleman tell us how much it will cost?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Approximately $50,000,000.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Then this legislation by itself, if it should pass, provides that $50,000,000 shall be taken from the Treasury in the event the proper appropriation is made.

Mr. MONAGHAN. May be taken from the Treasury.

Mr. HOLLISTER. To provide for pensions for a particular class of employees.

Mr. MONAGHAN. That is all entirely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations after this bill is passed.

Mr. HOLLISTER. But if the bill is passed, that is what this legislation provides for.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Is it true there is a companion measure which has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, which is supposed to raise the amount which will be needed?

Mr. MONAGHAN. There is a measure pending before the Committee on Ways and Means that would levy an excise tax of 4 percent on the total pay rolls of the railroads and of 2 percent of the income of the men. Does the gentleman have reference to that bill?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Are those who are sponsoring this bill in favor of raising the revenue in that way, or of having it as a Federal grant? I am asking these questions because I am sure there are many Members here who do not understand what is going on. If it is true that this is to be a grant of $50,000,000 to pay annuities, we should understand it; and if the funds are to provide in a certain way so that it will not be a grant from the Treasury, we should understand that also.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I can state the representations made before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It was frankly stated that there is a companion bill before the Committee on Ways and Means which proposes by a tax on the railroad employees of 2 percent and an excise tax of 4 percent on the railroad pay rolls to raise the necessary funds, $50,000,000 or $60,000,000. That will go into the Treasury. I understand that the funds so raised will not be earmarked. If that bill from the Committee on Ways and Means does not pass, or those taxes are not raised in some way, there will be a direct payment out of the Treasury to the amount of $50,000,000 or $60,000,000, and there is no need of attempting to cover up that situation.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The money would be paid provided the Committee on Appropriations appropriates the money. This bill automatically would not put that money into circulation.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I want to bring those facts out because I do not believe most of the Membership know exactly what this legislation means. Either $50,000,000 must come out of the Treasury as a direct grant to provide annuities to certain classes of individuals, or the money must be raised by a specific tax on the class involved and on their employers, and that, as I understand it, is the purpose of a separate bill now in the Committee on Ways and Means.

I understand the background of this legislation is this. A bill was passed last year in which these two bills which we are now discussing were consolidated and a pension system was set up approximately as set up here. There was a pay-roll tax assessed on the employees and a pay-roll tax on the employer, to provide funds to pay these annuities. The Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Roberts, ruled that the act was unconstitutional. I have not had time in the short time granted me to get that opinion before me. If I quote it incorrectly I wish to be corrected by someone who has studied it more recently than I have. As I remember it, Mr. Justice Roberts stated that the act was unconstitutional for three reasons.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. WITHROW. It might be well to preface the gentleman's remarks by saying that that was a 5-to-4 decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOLLISTER. It was a 5-to-4 decision; yes. Remember that other bill to which I refer was passed in the last days of the session without a roll call and without adequate consideration. The act was declared unconstitutional for three reasons. First, because there were included in those to be benefited a large number of employees, I believe estimated from 100,000 to 200,000, who were not engaged in interstate commerce. The Court insisted that money could not be raised by the Government to spend on employees who were not engaged in interstate commerce. The second reason was that the money raised from the carriers would be placed in a pool and then spread out for the benefit of all the employees who were covered by the act.

Therefore the funds of one carrier were taken for the benefit of employees of another.

The third reason, as I remember it, was that Mr. Justice Roberts intimated he had grave doubts whether the Federal Government could embark on any scheme of annuities, old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, and so forth, although the case did not go off on that point alone.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The gentleman asked to be corrected if he quoted the decision wrong. I may say, taking the last point first, the Supreme Court in that case said that the pension law of 1934 did not promote efficiency or safety in the operation of railroads in interstate commerce. In other words, that the power " to regulate commerce " did not carry with it the power to provide pensions. He did not say we could not pay an annuity out of the Treasury of the United States. The latter is the theory of this bill.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am glad the gentleman called it to my attention, but he will have some time to speak, and he can explain it then. I should like to proceed now.

As a matter of fact, I am really bringing these questions up without making an argument on the merits of this bill, in the hope that when the bill gets onto the floor these questions will be met. We have so often seen bills brought up here where the most important questions are not discussed at all. I think a great many of us are in sympathy with the purposes of legislation of this kind, but we do not want to proceed day after day to vote for legislation which we know will be declared unconstitutional. If all these unconstitutional questions have been met, if we are not going into the granting of money from the Federal Treasury for an annuity system for one particular class of employees, I am sure there will not be nearly as much difficulty in securing votes to pass such legislation; but I believe it ought to be explained what we are doing. If this is to be a Federal grant, we should know it. If it is not, and the money is to be raised by a tax in some particular way, then I believe it should be explained whether or not we are meeting the unconstitutional questions that were raised by the Supreme Court when they held the previous measure unconstitutional. That is the reason I have taken this time now to bring these questions before the Membership, so that they can be given adequate consideration, so that those who sponsor the bill and, incidentally, those who oppose it, if there be any opposition, may have a chance to meet those questions in fair debate. When the Membership finally comes to vote we should know what we are voting upon and know whether we are voting for something which is merely a hollow shell; whether we are offering a group of people something, knowing in our hearts that the courts will ultimately decide that we have given them nothing at all, and that we have passed another unconstitutional piece of legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk report the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"DEFINITIONS

"SECTION 1. For the purposes of this act—

"(a) The term 'carrier' means any express company, sleeping-car company, or carrier by railroad, subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and any company which may be directly or indirectly owned or controlled thereby or under common control therewith, and which operates any equipment or facilities or performs any service (other than trucking service) in connection with the transportation of passengers or property by railroad, or the receipt, delivery, elevation, transfer in transit, refrigeration or icing, storage, or handling of property transported by railroad, and any receiver, trustee, or other individual or body, judicial or otherwise, when in the possession of and operating the business of any such 'carrier': Provided, however, That the term 'carrier' shall not include any street, interurban, or suburban electric railway, unless such railway is operating as a part of a general steam-railroad system of transportation, but shall not exclude any part of the general steam-railroad system of transportation now or hereafter operated by any other motive power. The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized and directed, upon request of the Board or upon complaint of any party interested, to determine after hearing whether any line operated by electric power falls within the terms of this proviso.

"(b) The term 'employee' means any person (1) who shall be at the enactment hereof or shall have been at any time after the enactment hereof in the service of a carrier, or who shall be at the enactment hereof or shall have been at any time after the enactment hereof in the employment relation to a carrier, and (2) each officer or other official representative of an 'employee organization', herein called 'representative' who before or after the enactment hereof has performed service for a carrier, who at the enactment hereof or at any time after the enactment is or shall be duly designated and authorized to represent employees in accordance with the Railway Labor Act, and who, during, or immediately following employment by a carrier, is, shall be, or shall have been engaged in such representative service in behalf of such employees.

"(c) A person shall be deemed to be in the service of a carrier whenever he may be subject to its continuing authority to supervise and direct the manner of rendition of his service, for which service he receives compensation.

"(d) A person is in the employment relation to a carrier when furloughed or on leave of absence, and subject to call for service and ready and willing to serve, all in accordance with the established rules and practices usually in effect on railroads.

"(e) The term 'service period' means the total service of a person for one or more carriers whether or not continuously performed either before or after the effective date, and includes as 1 month every calendar month during which such person has rendered service to a carrier for compensation and includes as 1 year every 12 such months. An ultimate fraction of 6 months or more shall be computed as 1 year.

"(f) The term 'annuity' means a fixed sum payable at the beginning of each month during retirement, ceasing at death except as otherwise provided in section 5 hereof or at resumption of service for which an employee receives compensation.

"(g) The term 'compensation' means any form of money remuneration for service, received by an employee from a carrier, including salaries and commissions, but shall not include free transportation nor any payment received on account of sickness, disability, pensions, or other form of relief.

"(h) The term 'retirement' means the status of cessation of compensated service with the right to receive an annuity.

"(i) The term 'age' means age at the latest attained birthday.

"(j) The term 'Board' means the Railroad Retirement Board.

"(k) The term 'effective date' means the 1st day of March 1936.

"(l) The term 'enactment' means the date on which this act shall become a law.

"RETIREMENT

"SEC. 2. Upon the attainment of 65 years of age and continuance in service by the employee (but not before the effective date of this act), the annuity of such employee shall be reduced one-fifteenth for every year of such continued service beyond the age of 65 years; except that such reduction shall not apply during any period, beginning at the age of 65 and not extending beyond the age of 70, while the employee is continued in employment under an agreement in writing between the carrier and employee filed with the Board, which agreement may provide for extension of employment for 1 year and thereafter in like manner for successive periods of 1 year each. Such reduction of annuity shall not apply to an employee who occupies an official position in the service of a carrier or to employees' representatives.

"ANNUITIES

"SEC. 3. The following-described employees, after retirement whether or not then in the service of a carrier, shall be paid annuities:

"(a) A person (without regard to the period of service and whether rendered before or after the enactment hereof), who either at the enactment hereof or thereafter shall be 65 years of age or over.

"(b) A person who either at the enactment hereof or who thereafter shall be 50 years of age or over and who shall have completed a service period of 30 years. An annuity paid under this subdivision shall be reduced by one-fifteenth of such annuity for each year such employee may be less than 65 years of age at the time of the first annuity payment.

"(c) A person who either before or after the enactment shall have completed a service period of 30 years and who shall be after the enactment hereof retired by the carrier on account of mental or physical disability. An annuity paid under this subdivision shall not be subject to the deduction specified in subdivision (b) of this section.

"The annuities hereinbefore mentioned shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury which may be appropriated for that purpose. An annuity shall begin as of a date to be specified in a written application to be signed by the employee entitled thereto, and approved by the Board, which date shall not be more than 60 days before the filing of the application, nor before the date on which the first annuity shall have become due and payable. An annuity shall not be due and payable until 90 days after the effective date hereof. The annuity shall be payable on the 1st day of the month during the lifetime of the annuitant. Such annuity shall be based upon the service period of the employee and shall be the sum of the amounts determined by multiplying the total number of years of service not exceeding 30 years by the following percentages of the monthly compensation: 2 percent of the first $50; 1½ percent of the next $100; and 1 percent of the compensation in excess of $150. The 'monthly compensation' shall be the average of the monthly compensation paid to the employee by the carrier, except that where applicable for service before the effective date the monthly compensation shall be the average of the monthly compensation for all pay-roll periods for which the employee shall have received compensation from any carrier out of 8 consecutive calendar years of such services ended December 31, 1931. No part of any monthly compensation in excess of $300 shall be recognized in determining any annuity. Any employee who shall be entitled to an annuity with a commuted value determined by the Board of less than $300 shall be paid such value in a lump sum.

"ANNUITIES TO REPRESENTATIVES

"SEC. 4. The annuity of a representative shall be determined according to such rules and regulations as the Board shall deem just and reasonable and, as near as may be, shall be the same annuity as if the representative were still in the employ of his last former carrier.

"PAYMENTS UPON DEATH

"SEC. 5. If a person receiving or entitled to receive an annuity shall die, the Board, for 1 year after the first day of the month in which the death may have occurred, shall pay, as herein provided, an annuity equal to one-half of the annuity which such person so dying may have received or may have been entitled to receive, to the widow or widower of the deceased, or if there be no widow or widower, to the dependent next of kin of the deceased. Any employee may elect, on making application for an annuity, to have the present value of the annuity apply to the payment of a reduced annuity to the employee during life and an annuity during the life of a surviving spouse. The present values and amounts of the annuity payments shall be determined on the basis of the combined annuity tables with interest at 3 percent per annum.

"RETIREMENT BOARD

"PERSONNEL

"SEC. 6. (a) There is hereby established as an independent agency in the executive branch of the Government a Railroad Retirement Board, to be composed of three members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each member shall hold office for a term of 5 years, except that any member appinted to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of the term and the terms of office of the members first taking office after the date of enactment of this act shall expire, as designated by the President, 1 at the end of 2 years, 1 at the end of 3 years, and 1 at the end of 4 years, after the date of enactment of this act. One member shall be appointed from recommendations made by representatives of the employees and one member shall be appointed from recommendations made by representatives of the carriers, in both cases as the President shall direct, so as to provide representation on the Board satisfactory to the largest number, respectively, of employees and carriers concerned. One member, who shall be the chairman of the Board, shall be appointed initially, for a term of 2 years without recommendation by either carriers or employees and shall not be in the employment of or be pecuniarily or otherwise interested in any carrier or organization of employees. Vacancies in the Board shall not impair the powers nor affect the duties of the Board nor of the remaining members of the Board of whom a majority of those in office shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Each of said members shall receive a salary of $10,000 per year, together with necessary traveling expenses and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, while away from the principal office of the Board on duties required by this act.

"DUTIES

"(b) The Board shall have and exercise all the duties and powers necessary to administer this act. The Board shall take such steps as may be necessary to enforce this act and make and certify awards and payments.

"The Board shall from time to time certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the name and address of each person entitled to receive a payment under this act, the amount of such payment, and the time at which it should be made, and the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office, shall make payment in accordance with the certification by the Board.

"The Board shall establish and promulgate rules and regulations and provide for the adjustment of all controversial matters, with power as a board or through any member or subordinate designated thereof, to require and compel the attendance of witnesses, administer oaths, take testimony, and make all necessary investigations in any matter involving annuities or other payments, and shall maintain such offices, provide such equipment, furnishings, supplies, services, and facilities, and employ such persons and provide for their compensation and expenses as may be necessary to the proper discharge of its functions. All rules, regulations, or decisions of the Board shall require the approval of at least two members and shall be entered upon the records of the Board, which shall be a public record. The Board shall gather, keep, compile, and publish in convenient form such records and data as may be necessary, and at intervals of not more than 2 years shall cause to be made actuarial surveys and analyses, to determine from time to time the payments to be required to provide for all annuities, other disbursements, and expenses, and to assure proper administration and the adequacy and permanency of the retirement system hereby established. The Board shall have power to require all carriers and employees and any officer, board, commission, or other agency of the United States to furnish such information and records as shall be necessary for the administration of this act. The Board shall make an annual report to the President of the United States to be submitted to Congress. Witnesses summoned before the Board shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"SPECIAL REPORT

"SEC. 7. Not later than 4 years from the effective date, the Board, in a special report to the President of the United States to be submitted to Congress, shall make specific recommendations for such changes in the retirement system hereby created as shall assure the adequacy of said retirement system on the basis of its experience and all information and experience then available.

For this purpose the Board shall from time to time make such investigations and actuarial studies as shall provide the fullest information practicable for such report and recommendations. The Board shall in a like special report, to be made at the earliest practicable time, make specific recommendations with regard to the desirability and practicability of substituting the provisions for annuities and other benefits to employees under this act for any obligation for prior service or for any existing provisions for the voluntary payment of pensions to employees subject to this act by a carrier or any employees subject to this act, so as to relieve such carrier from its obligations for age-retirement benefits under its existing pension systems and transfer such obligations to the retirement system herein established.

"It is recognized that existing individual carrier pension plans are wholly at the option of the carriers unless in any case express provision is made otherwise, and no restriction is imposed under this Act upon such plans; nor is it expected that carriers will modify existing pension plans on account of this act beyond a reduction of current pension payments under such existing plans in amounts equal to the annuity payments currently received by the employee under this act.

"INVESTIGATION COMMISSION

"SEC. 8. (a) That a Commission be appointed which shall be composed of 3 Members of the Senate designated by the President of the Senate; 3 Members of the House of Representatives designated by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and 3 members who shall be designated by the President of the United States. The President shall designate one member to be chairman and another to be vice chairman of the Commission. The Commission is hereby authorized and directed to make, and report through the President to the Congress of the United States not later than January 1, 1936, the results of a thorough investigation of all pertinent facts relating to a retirement-annuity system applicable by law to carriers by railroad engaged in interstate commerce and particularly any and all questions for the investigation of which provision is made under the preceding section. The Commission is also authorized to hold hearings respecting desirable provisions of a sound retirement and annuity system. In the making of such investigation the Commission may consider the experience of other industries and of governments, as well as of the railroad industry, and may avail itself of the assistance of all agencies of the Federal Government. Until January 1, 1936, the duties and authority of the Board under the preceding section are limited to cooperation with and action under the direction of the Commission. With its report setting forth the results of its investigation, the Commission shall include such recommendations for legislation, if any, as it may deem necessary to give effect to its conclusions.

"(b) The Commission, in the performance of its duties, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-fourth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production and impounding of such books, papers, records, files, and documents, to have access to such books, papers, records, files, and documents of any corporation or person, to administer such oaths and to take such testimony and to make such expenditures, as it may deem advisable. The several district courts of the United States and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction upon application by the Commission through its attorneys to compel obedience to any order or subpena of the Commission issued pursuant to this section. The orders, writs, and processes of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in such matters may run and be served anywhere in the United States.

"(c) The Commission shall maintain such offices, provide such equipment, furnishings, supplies, services, and facilities, and to employ, without regard to the provisions of the Civil Service Act such experts and clerical, stenographic, legal, and other assistance as may be necessary for the proper discharge of its duties, and without respect to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, fix the compensation of any person employed. The President shall fix the compensation to be paid the three members of the Commission to be appointed by the President. All expenses of the Commission for all time in which the Commission shall be actually engaged in this investigation shall be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States, not otherwise appropriated, on a certificate of the chairman of the Commission, and the sum necessary for carrying out the provisions of this resolution is hereby authorized to be appropriated: Provided, That the total expense authorized for the purposes of the Commission shall not exceed the sum of $60,000 which shall include the compensation herein authorized.

"COURT JURISDICTION

"SEC. 9. The several District Courts of the United States and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, respectively, shall have jurisdiction to entertain an application and to grant appropriate relief in the following cases which may arise under the provisions of this act:

"(a) An application by an employee or other person aggrieved in or to the district court of any district wherein the Board may have established an office, to compel the Board to set aside an action or decision claimed to be in violation of a legally enforceable right of the applicant, or to take action, or to make a decision necessary for the enforcement of a legal right of the applicant.

"(b) The jurisdiction herein specifically conferred upon the said Federal courts shall not be held exclusive of any jurisdiction otherwise possessed by said courts to entertain actions at law or suits in equity in aid of the enforcement of rights or obligations arising under the provisions of this act.

"(c) The Railroad Retirement Board, as hereinbefore established, shall be and constitute a body corporate and be capable of suing and being sued as such.

"EXEMPTION

"SEC. 10. No annuity payment shall be assignable or be subject to any tax or to garnishment, attachment, or other legal process under any circumstances whatsoever, nor shall the payment thereof be anticipated.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 11. Any officer or agent of a carrier, as the word 'carrier' is hereinbefore defined, or any employee as such word is hereinbefore defined, or any person whether or not of the character hereinbefore defined, who shall willfully fail or refuse to make any report or furnish any information required by the Board in the administration of this act, or who shall knowingly make any false or fraudulent statement or report in response to any report or statement required to be made for the purpose of this act, or who shall knowingly make or aid in making any false or fraudulent statement or claim for the purpose of receiving any award or payment under this act, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $10,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year.

"SEPARABILITY

"SEC. 12. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act or application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZED

"SEC. 13. The appropriation of such money from time to time out of the Treasury of the United States as may be necessary to carry this act into effect, is hereby authorized.

"SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 14. This act may be cited as the 'Railroad Retirement Act of 1935.'

"Amend the title so as to read: 'A bill to establish a retirement system for employees of carriers subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, and for other purposes.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROSSER of Ohio: Page 29, line 20, after the figures "1935", insert a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. The term 'employment' as defined in subsection (b) of section 210 of title II of the Social Security Act shall not include service performed in the employ of a carrier as defined in subdivision (a) of section 1 of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935."

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the only purpose of that amendment is to except all those employees who come under this bill from the operations of the Social Security Act. They ought not come under both. Everybody agrees that is right.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make any general speech or argument against this bill, but I think the Members of the House, if they do not appreciate already what it is proposed to do, should have it called to their attention. What we are doing today is to reenact a part of a bill which has already been declared unconstitutional. The way it is proposed to avoid the decision of the Supreme Court is to divide the bill into two bills, and pass this bill, which gives the people who are affected by it, a general claim on the United States Treasury; and then this afternoon to pass an appropriation bill to cover the supposed expense which will be incurred by this pension bill.

I notice the distinguished majority leader referred to the appropriation bill as a "companion bill." I am not enough of a lawyer to know whether when all this legislation is considered, the Supreme Court will take judicial notice of the fact that this Congress is doing over again what the Supreme Court has already said was unconstitutional. What we are doing, in fact, is to pass a pension bill for the benefit of a very small class of our citizens. We are passing a pension bill to take care of a very small special class of our citizens and then to provide for these pensions, we are taxing a certain class of property.

The Supreme Court in its previous decision held that what we were doing was to tax the prosperous roads for the benefit of the less prosperous which, they said, was unconstitutional; and that is just exactly what we are doing now.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. The distinguished gentleman from Connecticut will agree, I think, in connection with his argument, that although this measure is for a certain group all measures of legislation, more or less, are for special groups.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. That is a general statement, but it does not apply to this special pension and special taxation.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Would it not apply in connection with the gentleman's statement on this bill?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I do not think so.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Certainly, it does seem to apply insofar as these people are concerned the same as other bills have applied to other groups.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. There is no reason why the United States should give pensions to railroad men any more than to steamboat men or to bus operators.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Did we not legislate for certain classes in the matter of the processing tax?

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I think that is unconstitutional also.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It has not been so decided.

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. I know; but it will be. That is the whole tendency of the legislation we have been passing recently, picking out special interests either to oppress or to assist. I think this is very dangerous. When you begin to interfere with economic law by statute law, you are getting into very dangerous ground. I am just as much in favor as anybody of pensioning these railroad men. They are deserving men, but let them come under the general pension act.

I call your attention to another fact, as I did once before when the previous Railroad Pension Act was passed, that the railroads today are in most cases losing money, in many cases bankrupt, and in many cases in the hands of receivers. We have passed the social security bill, and it will be a tremendous burden on industry, on consumers, and on employees; and now on top of that we are assessing this railroad tax for this special class.

I say that when business is as sick as it now is it would be much wiser to let it recover to a certain extent before piling additional burdens upon it. On this ground it seems to me that it is unwise at this time to pass this special bill on top of the social security bill, the constitutionality of which has not been passed on, but which I think is very doubtful. This measure may be constitutional. I do not like to say that it is or that I think it may be, but I think a special tax which is proposed to be passed on to this special group clearly will be unconstitutional. We shall find demands on the Treasury to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars in pensions with no money to meet them. It is a great mistake, Mr. Speaker. A matter of a few months for further consideration will harm no one, but to rush legislation through, as we have been doing during the last few weeks, is simply to get it out of the way, simply to put it through, is very unwise procedure.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE RAILROAD RETIREMENT BILL—EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which reported this bill, and of the subcommittee, of which Hon. ROBERT CROSSER, of Ohio, was chairman, which held the hearings and drafted the bill in final form, I want to say that I am whole-heartedly for its passage, but shall content myself with noting two or three of the objections which have been made against it in debate.

The question has been asked several times by opponents of the bill whether this is "must" legislation. The questioners know that although the President has expressed himself favorably to the legislation, it is not on the so-called "must" list to be passed at this session, the inference from this fact being that Members are under no obligation to vote for it, and that it will be all right if they do not.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this is "must" legislation. The demand for it comes from 1,000,000 of the highest grade workers in the United States, workers moreover who propose in another bill to pay their share of the cost of the security which it will furnish. Personally I consider this is the highest command that can come to a representative of the people.

When in the closing hours of the Seventy-third Congress a Railroad Retirement Act was passed overwhelmingly by both Houses, I felt that a great step forward had been made in social security. It was the first such act to be passed by Congress. When the President finally signed the act I rejoiced. No bill that passed the Seventy-third Congress, and I voted for every one of them, gave me such genuine pleasure. And when the Supreme Court declared it unconstitutional, I suffered as one who knew from a life association what a blow it would be to tens of thousands of aged and aging railway employees, who must soon go into the discard, and depend upon others for the bare necessities of life.

Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I read in a Washington paper a full-page story that wrung my heart, the story that on Wednesday night, August 21, at the hour of midnight, the Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Railroad would cease operations forever, throwing out of employment several hundred men who have given all the years of their manhood to its service, who are unfitted for any other type of service, and most of whom, as the newspaper confessed, would never again find employment. But here, Mr. Speaker, was the line in the story, just a short, simple sentence, that makes me eager to vote for this bill, or any such bill: "The railway company had no pension system."

Just seven words, but what tragic words, to several hundred aging men who can never again secure employment in the only calling for which they are fitted. Some of these men will die of broken hearts, some of them will become outcasts, some of them will become menials, and some of them will be living on the dole. Perhaps not 20 percent of them will ever again know what a good job or a decent wage is. Yet in the face of such cases as this, which might be multiplied all over the country, Members want to know whether this is "must" legislation. I answer—yes; it is "must" legislation, by the command of a civilized America, by every consideration of right and justice, and from the sheer necessity of preserving the morale, the spirit, and the manhood of the workers of this country.

Another objection, Mr. Speaker, is that this legislation will destroy the pension systems now in operation on many railroads, systems voluntarily established and financed by the roads themselves, and some few of which, the most advanced, pay a higher rate of pension than this bill carries.

The answer to this objection is that it is not coming from the workers themselves, even the workers on these favored systems; that the million railway workers of the country are almost solidly behind this legislation, and that it was framed and is sponsored and endorsed by the legislative representatives and attorneys of the 21 national organizations representing practically all of the railway workers of the country. I may add that while it is widely known that I was a member of the committee handling this bill and have had a life affiliation with the railway workers, which is well known to many of them, I have not received a single objection to the bill on any ground.

Moreover, its pension rates are the same as in the bill passed by the last Congress, which was the product of the joint efforts of all classes of railway employees and which would have had the same effect on private-pension systems that this bill will have. I honor those railway men who supported it knowing that it carried less provision for them in some cases than the private system of their employers.

But they knew also that what was given could be taken away, and they preferred the assurance of a system which had the controlling and sustaining hand of the Government behind it.

Mr. Speaker, I know the anxiety and the eagerness with which the action of Congress on this bill is awaited throughout the ranks of the railroad men of America. An adequate system of old-age pensions must be devised for them, a way must be found, through this bill or some other bill. Many able lawyers have expressed the opinion that this bill is constitutionally sound. That is a question I must leave to the courts. My judgment must be rendered now, and my judgment is "yes."

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3050) granting the consent of Congress to the States of New York and Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between Rouses Point, N. Y., and Alburg, Vt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the States of New York and Vermont, their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Lake Champlain at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Rouses Point, N. Y., and Alburg, Vt., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the States of New York and Vermont, their successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is located, upon making just compensation therefor to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation and expropriation of property in such State.

SEC. 3. The said States of New York and Vermont, their successors and assigns, are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 30 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches shall have been provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNELL, a motion to reconsider and a similar House bill (H. R. 8857) were laid on the table.

SECURITY FOR ALL—THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT IS ONLY A BEGINNING

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, the Congress has passed the Social Security Act, and a new philosophy of a Government's obligations to its citizens has come into being. Here is something new in American government, vast in scope, tremendous in potentialities.

What does this act offer to America? Who are to be its beneficiaries? What are they to receive? How much? When? Under what conditions?

THE VAST NEW PROGRAM MUST BE CLARIFIED AND EXPLAINED SO ALL WILL UNDERSTAND IT FULLY

There have been few measures in the entire course of our Government which have opened up so wide a field of discussion and controversy. For the past 2 years, especially, social security, as a national problem, has been spotlighted for national attention. And yet, with all this publicity, despite continual examination and exposition, it seems that the problem of social security, as specifically treated in this act, and the changing philosophy and concepts which supply its background, are both hazy to the average American. The man on the street has only a vague idea of the social-security set-up, of its immediate purposes and eventual scope.

In the first place social security—old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, maternity care—is nothing new. That is nothing new in almost every country in the world except the United States.

Furthermore, although some of the provisions of the social-security bill are rather technical, the principle itself is very simple. It amounts to this:

What should the citizens of a country, who have contributed to that country's progress and growth, expect from it in return?

THE SOCIAL-SECURITY ACT IS THE GOVERNMENT'S PROMISE TO ITS CITIZENS

The answer to that question is the answer to the problem of social security. In the past it was a job in good times, the bread line in bad. The answer is changed now. We now say: You have a right to expect protection against the effects of bad times, as well as a job in good times. You have a right to live decently, to be brought into the world decently, to have safeguards set up for you against the destitution you may encounter if you lose your job or health, and when you reach old age.

These are the obligations which are rightfully the Government's, and which it finally has assumed. If only it had assumed them sooner! We might not have had to go through these 5 bitter years. If we had been sensible enough to realize that, good years or bad, the great mass of wage earners in this country have never received more than bare subsistence incomes, and could, under no circumstances, set aside anything more than a few pennies, if that, for the inevitable hard bumps of life.

AN EXAMINATION OF INCOMES SHOWS HOW DESPERATELY SOCIAL SECURITY IS NEEDED IN THIS COUNTRY

In 1929, 5,899,000, or nearly 6,000,000 families, 21½ percent of the total number of families, had a yearly income from nothing up to a maximum of $1,000.

Eleven million six hundred and fifty-three thousand, or nearly 12,000,000 families, 42½ percent of the total number of families, had incomes of less than $1,500 per year.

Nineteen million five hundred and fifty-eight thousand, or nearly 20,000,000 families, 71 percent of all families in the United States, had incomes of less than $2,500 per year. And that was in the year 1929, the year of prosperity.

And now let us look at the number of families with large incomes.

Sixty-three thousand families, 0.230 percent of the total number of families, had incomes of more than $50,000.

Four thousand families, 0.015 percent of the number of families, had incomes of $500,000 and over per year.

Members of families with an income of less than $1,000 a year can, of course, save very little toward meeting the cost of unemployment, old age, sickness, or accidents.

In the year 1929, 10,500,000 families had an income of $1,000 to $2,000 a year. These on an average, saved the magnificent sum of $80 a year. These families and the millions of families with a still lower income are the builders of America. They have dug its ditches, paved its roads, operated its machines, constructed its buildings, and produced its abundant wealth. We repay a debt when we make a start toward giving them some measure of decency in living. We merely turn back to them a part of what they have given us.

II. The Ultimate Goal of Old-Age Pensions

It is no longer necessary to sell the idea of old-age pensions in this country. The idea has been sold, for which we can be truly thankful, for it was hard sledding at first.

In 1934 we had in the United States about 7,200,000 persons who were 65 years of age or older. Even if we base our calculations upon the relatively prosperous years of 1920 to 1929, and disregard for the moment the terrible need which the current depression has brought to the aged, we shall find that out of these 7,200,000 at least 2,400,000 were in need.

The depression increased the number of needy among the aged far beyond 2,400,000.

The United States is the only large industrial country in the world which still has the poorhouse. The following figures will show how more and more old people have been forced to seek refuge in the poorhouse:

Paupers 65 and over in almshouses

1890	23,318
1904	33,141
1910	35,943
1923	41,980

The present old-age pension provisions are only a beginning

However, old-age pensions, as provided for in the Social Security Act, are but the foundation for a real set-up of old-age security in America.

To my mind, these provisions of the act should be, and I hope in time will be, much more liberal and generous than they are now. Let us first see what we now have in the United States, in the way of old-age pensions before the National Security Act begins to operate.

What state provisions do we have for old-age pensions

In 1934, 28 States and 2 Territories had old-age-pension systems. Five additional States adopted such laws this year. Eight States of the 28 have never paid a cent—the laws exist on the statute books only. Ten others pay very negligible amounts. Only the remaining 10 merit serious consideration.

Now, what about the ages at which payments begin in the 28 States? In 14 of them, payments begin at 70; in 13 at 65; and in 1 at 68. Payments? Fifteen States provide a maximum of $30 a month; 6 of $25; 2 of $20; and 3 of less than $20.

In these figures, what probably will catch your eye is that the lowest eligible age in any State is 65 years—and that is the rub. In a country where the advances of the machine age burn people out at 50 and 55, the limit of 65 is far too high.

The age limit for pensions is too high

That age limit, among other things, is my criticism of the national act. Here is what the Government will do under the Social Security Act. The Government says to the State, "I'll match you; for every dollar you give for old-age pensions, I'll give a dollar. However, my maximum will be $15 a month; if you want to pay more than that, you can." I regret that under this arrangement the aged will receive $30 or less in most of the States. This is far too low to permit a decent standard of living for our old people. It is far too low to give them the security which they should have.

No State will receive any money from the Federal Government toward the payment of old-age pensions, unless the State has or will pass an old-age pension law, satisfactory to the Federal Social Security Board and which complies with the minimum standards fixed in the act of Congress.

Until 1940 the old pension laws of the States may deny pensions to any person under 70 years of age. After 1940 the age limit must be 65 years.

Why allow the States 5 years to reduce the age limit from 70 to 65?

This is a serious defect. Why wait 5 years? Why not make the States change their limit from 70 to 65 years by 1937? After all, State legislatures meet regularly every 2 years, and they could have no more important business to transact than this.

And finally, the 65-year limit in the Federal bill must go. It is entirely too high. After all, this is supposed to be a pension for old age, not a graveyard pension. Most people who are 60 years of age are old—the years ahead of them hold no prospect of jobs or gainful occupation. They have every right to live their last years in comfort, in economic peace and security.

Of course, there is nothing in the act to prevent States granting pensions to those under 65, but States simply will not do it, unless the Federal grant is extended to those under 65.

These are my objections. They show serious flaws in the set-up. But it is better than what we had previously. We have started something, surely, and from these beginnings we go forward.

III. The Difference Between Old-Age Pensions and Old-Age Insurance

There has been some confusion, in connection with the Social Security Act, between old-age pensions and old-age insurance. The two have been used interchangeably, which is not correct.

Briefly, the difference lies in the fact that for old-age pensions the beneficiary does not pay; for old-age insurance he does. The Social Security Act makes appropriations to States for the payment of old-age pensions. But it does not stop there. It also sets up an old-age insurance system, which is designed to supersede the pension system, and which on January 1, 1942, will begin the payment of benefits to those 65 years of age or older.

The Federal Government should contribute to the old-age insurance fund

This system will be administered directly by the Federal Government. The States will have no part in it. It will be purely a Federal matter. The funds for this insurance system, as distinguished from the pension system, will be raised by compelling employers and employees to make equal contributions to a common insurance fund.

There is one defect in this old-age insurance system as set up in the act of Congress, a vital, a fundamental defect. The Federal Government does not contribute to it.

The Federal Government, as in many European countries, should contribute one-third of the total fund.

Where will it get the money? I do not want to use this speech as a springboard for a dissertation on the maldistribution of wealth and income in this country, but I will venture to state that in a country where 87 percent of its wealth is owned by 4 percent of its population, inheritance and income taxes could well be increased for this purpose.

The increasing proportion of old people in this country makes the problem doubly important

It is first advisable to bear in mind why the problem of old-age insurance—as distinguished from old-age pensions—has become increasingly important in this country. The fact of the matter is that the population of the United States from year to year has a greater proportion of older people. This has been brought about, of course, through a gradual betterment of our standard of living, improvement in public-health measures, advances in sanitation, new medical discoveries, and the like. But in spite of our realization of these factors it is still amazing to learn that in 1840 the average life span in this country was 39 years, and in 1930 it had gone up to 60 years.

In 1870, 3 percent of our population was over 65 years of age; in 1930 the percentage had gone up to 5½ percent; and it has been estimated that by the end of this century 10 percent of the population will be 65 or more.

The following table well illustrates the increase in the number of old people:

Number of persons 65 years and older in United States

1870	1,000,000
1900	4,000,000
1930	6,500,000
1975 (actuarial computation)	21,000,000

Financially we would have a staggering bill if we continued the straight pension system for these people. In 1940 the cost would be $800,000,000, $2,000,000,000 in 1960, and $2,600,000,000 by 1980.

CHIEF FEATURES OF THE OLD-AGE INSURANCE PROVISIONS

Therefore the Social Security Act sets up, under Government administration, a fund for old-age insurance. The contributions to it will be in the form of equal contributions which employers and employees must make in the form of a tax beginning January 1, 1937. This contribution will be 1 percent in 1937–39, 1½ percent in 1940–42, 2 percent in 1943–45, 2½ percent in 1946–48, and 3 percent in 1949 and thereafter.

It is estimated that total receipts from these two taxes will range from $278,800,000 in 1937 and increase year to year until 1950, when the maximum tax of 3 percent is reached, will amount to $1,877,200,000.

An interesting, and perhaps disturbing fact, is that two large classes of wage earners will not benefit by this insurance. They are agricultural workers and domestics. It is deplorable that they often lose out when social and economic advances are made. All in all, almost 26,000,000 workers are expected to come under the bill's provisions.

The monthly benefits to be paid from the fund will vary from $10 to $85, depending both on the average monthly wage or salary formerly received by the aged and on the number of years when he was employed and contributed to the insurance fund.

IV. THERE IS NO INSURANCE AGAINST UNEMPLOYMENT—WHAT UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION IS FOR

The most important thing to keep in mind, in considering the unemployment "insurance" provisions of the new Social Security Act, is that there is no such thing as unemployment insurance. The term itself is a convenient misnomer for unemployment compensation—an income to be received during periods of idleness. Unemployment compensation is not intended and cannot insure employment. It does not prevent unemployment—as life insurance does not prevent death. The purpose of unemployment-compensation laws is to assure the employee a fixed proportion of his working income during a period of enforced idleness.

Do we need unemployment-compensation laws? The following two tables should effectively answer that question. They show that substantial unemployment is not confined to depression periods. They show that even in years of high prosperity did we have a large number of unemployed.

Unemployed during prosperous years

Year	Number of unemployed	Percentage of unemployed in total working population Percent
1920	1,401,000	4.6
1923	1,532,000	4.7
1926	1,669,000	4.7
1929	1,800,000	5.6

Fluctuation in unemployment in prosperous year 1929

Maximum month for unemployment, February; number of unemployed, 2,817,000.

Minimum month for unemployment, October; number of unemployed, 480,000.

THE WEAKEST LINK IN THE CHAIN

Does the Social Security Act provide for unemployment compensation? It does not, at least not directly. In fact, this is the weakest part of the Social Security Act. It presents an unsatisfactory attempt to tackle one of our greatest economic problems.

The act does not establish direct unemployment compensation for the worker. It does this: It levies a tax on all employers of eight or more employees, the tax rising annually from 1 percent in 1937 to a maximum of 3 percent in 1939. Employers of about 26,000,000 employees are to be covered by the tax. There is the same deplorable exclusion of domestic and farm labor as prevails under the old-age insurance set-up.

It must be borne in mind that the money so collected does not go into any special fund; it is part of the Federal Government's general taxation. How, then, does the unemployed person benefit? He benefits only if his own State enacts an unemployment-compensation act. In that case the Federal Government will allow a credit of 90 percent of the Federal tax to employers who are contributing to the State system. If there is no State system, he pays the full tax, and there is, of course, no benefit for his employees.

The expectation is, of course, that since the tax will be levied in any case States will be encouraged to enact their own laws. Most States will do so. At the present time six States have already adopted such legislation and many more, particularly the industrial States, may soon follow.

THE APPROACH TO THE PROBLEM OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE MUST BE ON A NATIONAL BASIS

I believe the entire method of approach is fundamentally wrong. Unemployment insurance must be considered on a national, and not a State basis. Industry knows no State boundaries. Employees and industries move from State to State. Only a national system can provide adequate protection for the employees, as well as equal competitive conditions for employers. With 48 State laws we may have almost that many widely varying systems, just as we have wide divergence in the various State workmen's compensation laws.

That is the grave defect in the social-security bill, insofar as unemployment compensation is concerned. I pointed this out in hearings on the bill before the House Ways and Means Committee. At the very least, if we cannot at once have a national system, the social-security bill should have laid down certain definite minimum standards for the State system. This it has not done; there are few specific requirements as to what the State laws should contain. The States are given carte blanche, as it were, in writing their laws.

DEFINITE STANDARDS MUST BE DEMANDED OF THE STATES

What should have been demanded of the States? First minimum standards as to amounts of compensation. Second, the maximum waiting period, before benefits are paid should have been definitely fixed. Third, schedules of the minimum duration of benefit payments to idle employees should have been laid down. Fourth, the so-called "Wisconsin plan", which is in no sense of the word social insurance and provides little protection for the worker, should have been outlawed. Fifth, the most important, the bill should have definitely barred the States from forcing employees to contribute to unemployment compensation funds.

Without such standards, I do not see that we are going to get very far in setting up decent unemployment compensation systems.

Keen will be the disappointment of those who are now jobless. They are not included in the contemplated scheme for unemployment compensation, unless they first secure a substantial amount of private employment.

Under the program of the administration the jobless who can work, are to be taken off relief and to be employed on work-relief projects. Whether they will be, only the future can tell—I am very doubtful. The jobless will be the group most disappointed in the Social Security Act—and justly so.

V. WHO PAYS THE BILL FOR SOCIAL SECURITY?

One cannot conclude a discussion of the unemployment-compensation features of the Social Security Act without reexamining, if only briefly, its chief feature—the financing of unemployment compensation by a tax on pay rolls. This tax will largely be shifted upon the consumer in the form of higher prices. Therefore, this is in reality a tax upon consumption to be paid for by the broad masses of the people.

Frankly, I am very much disturbed at this method of setting up an unemployment-compensation system. In the final analysis, the reason we must have unemployment compensation, old-age pensions, old-age insurance, and the like is because our national wealth and income have been so badly distributed. Very few people will deny this any longer.

A PAY-ROLL TAX IS NOT AN EQUITABLE TAX

But I fail to see where a more equitable distribution will be obtained by gigantic pay-roll taxes. The money will be taken from the worker, perhaps in lowered wages, more certainly in higher prices for what he buys. The latter condition will also apply to consumers generally.

Where, then, is the gain? We will be taking the buying money, the money that should be in circulation, out of it, pile it up in reserves, decrease purchasing power, and, in short, continue the old vicious cycle.

Higher taxes on inheritances, gifts, tremendously large incomes—from those sources and not from the pay roll and consumers' taxes, should come a large part of the money for the payment of social-security benefits. From huge fortunes should come at least a part of the money needed for the payment of these expenditures.

In addition to its three chief provisions—old-age pensions, old-age insurance, and unemployment compensation—the Social Security Act recognizes a number of other social problems, and makes some contribution toward alleviating them.

THE ACT'S PROVISIONS FOR DEPENDENT CHILDREN

I like particularly the recognition of the child problem, especially during this depression period. Perhaps it is not generally known that, although children under 16 comprise only 28 percent of the population, of those on relief 40 percent are in this age group—9,000,000 children.

The act appropriates $24,750,000 for dependent children, children in families where the support of the father, through death or otherwise, has been lost.

Under the Federal act, the Government will pay one-third, the State one-third, and the county one-third.

MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH

For maternal and child health an appropriation of $3,800,000 is allotted. Particular attention is to be centered on maternity and infant welfare in rural and farm areas, and in localities where economic distress is especially severe. In this connection, it is distressing to know that the maternal-mortality rate in the United States is higher than that of almost any other progressive country.

Another appropriation of $2,850,000 is made for hospital and later care of crippled children. In this country there are between 350,000 and 400,000 crippled children, many of them victims of infantile paralysis, and if treatment is extended early enough, the condition of a larger number could be greatly improved.

The act allots $1,500,000 to enable the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor to cooperate with State public-welfare agencies in establishing and extending help to the half million or more neglected and dependent children, and those who come before the juvenile courts. These are injured and harmed lives, and far greater sums could be expended to repair them and reestablish them in society.

GREATER UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION IN PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Finally, the act makes greater provision, through an appropriation of $8,000,000 for more extended participation by the Government in public-health services. These services have unfortunately, been drastically curtailed during the depression—a period when they are most necessary. Out of more than 4,000 counties in the country, only 528 have full-time health officers.

Admitted, each of these appropriations is small—any one of them might well be increased tenfold. But likewise, they are all splendid stimulants to carry on and forward fields of work which have been sadly neglected and often ignored.

VI. THE MEANING OF TRUE SOCIAL SECURITY

As you analyze the new Social Security Act and study its provisions and limitations, you are forcibly impressed with the fact that the Federal Government, itself, occupies a secondary role in the set-up. In the main, responsibility for immediate action rests on the States. The financial burden is largely placed upon the employers, the employees, and through increased prices on the consumer. The balance of the cost is divided between the States and the Federal Government. Important, however, is the fact that the Federal Government admits a responsibility in providing for the unemployed, the aged, the indigent, and the physically handicapped.

The Social Security Act is based on the principle of action by the States. By offering to them financial participation it encourages the States to pass and enforce laws providing pensions for old people and for needy blind, mothers-assistance funds, and child welfare. By permitting employers to deduct the contributions which they make to State unemployment compensation funds up to 90 percent of a Federal pay-roll tax, the act of Congress seeks to create pressure on State legislature for the enactment of State unemployment-compensation laws.

THE PRINCIPLE OF STATE ACTION MUST BE CHANGED FOR THE PRINCIPLE OF FEDERAL ACTION

The Federal Government is willing to help, but action must be taken by the legislature in each of the States. If a State fails to act, the people in that State cannot participate in the social-security program. This is the important principle of the act of Congress which the people must keep in mind.

This principle of State action and separate and distinct State laws will cause a great deal of difficulty. Particularly it is likely to prevent real unemployment insurance in many of the States. Our industries are built along national and not along State lines. Unemployment reserve systems should also be built along national and not along State lines. At least, the Federal act should have fixed minimum standards which every State law must observe.

THIS ACT IS A FOUNDATION ON WHICH TO BUILD

I am not satisfied with the provisions of the Social Security Act. I am not satisfied with its provision for old-age pensions, for unemployment compensation, or for child welfare. But the principle which this act of Congress establishes, the decent, humane, and social philosophy upon which it is based, is far more important than its specific provisions. We now have the foundation; we can improve and enlarge from time to time the building which we construct upon that foundation.

To me, anything offered in this specific measure, and anything which will be added as time goes on are way stations on a long road we have to travel. Ahead of us lies a great ideal.

THE TRUE SOCIAL SECURITY OF THE FUTURE

The idea will be security of the individual from birth to death. Maternity and infant care will look after him when he is born. Social security would in every sense protect the child—protect him from sickness and want, and make every possible effort to halt both sickness and want should they emerge. It would provide immediate hospitalization for crippled children, curing those who could be cured, and leading those who are physically handicapped into avenues of usefulness. Vocational training, the use of arts and crafts—these would be available.

Health insurance would protect individuals and families in periods of extended illness, and proper care would be forthcoming immediately in sickness, now so often neglected because of lack of financial resources.

And finally, there would be true protection against the hazards of unemployment, and the misery and uncertainty of insecure old age.

I will not conclude by saying that these are Utopian wishes. I believe that such a program is but the minimum for a decent and secure economic existence, and it would be tragic to contend that the wealthiest and most powerful Nation on earth cannot achieve it.

My belief is firm that such a program will be established in this country. And it will come within our time.

THE CRITICAL ISSUES OF TODAY

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, with all the confused and contradictory thinking that exists at the moment, and the still greater confused and contradictory action with respect to that thinking, it takes a considerable amount of conviction to say anything about anything. On the other hand, I feel that there rests a distinct duty—a definite responsibility on each of us to contribute what we can, based upon our individual sphere of experience and outlook to the forum of public opinion. For the more our people discuss and debate the issues of the day, the surer and wiser will be the conduct and guidance of our national affairs.

The dangers confronting the American people today, the obstacles still retarding our recovery, arise within our borders. We are faced with the absolute necessity of ending certain evils and weaknesses in our methods of making money and of governing ourselves. The vast majority know that this job must be done, but they do not know how to do it. They must trust to leadership in business and in politics.

There are three classes of leaders who offer their programs for public support, who may be roughly classified as the Old Guard, the Progressives, and the Destroyers.

The Old Guard believe we should go back to that system of unrestrained self-seeking under which a few people could accumulate unjustified wealth and control the lives of a multitude without acknowledging or fulfilling their responsibility to the general welfare. The Old Guard prospered under that system, and they simply do not understand that such a system, under which millions of people have been, and are still, denied employment and are destitute in the midst of plenty, can no longer be tolerated.

The Destroyers, despairing of any improvement in a system deeply rooted in special privilege and controlled by legally entrenched money power, wish to destroy it utterly. They have suffered under the system. They have no stake in its preservation, and they are ready to smash it by any means.

The Progressives, seeking to improve the system, arouse the bitter opposition of both the Old Guard, who fear any change, and the Destroyers, who want everything changed.

If America had only a simple choice between these three programs there would be little cause to fear the future. The Old Guard with all its economic power can only swing a few million voters to its support. The Destroyers, stirring the passions of the unemployed, the discouraged and the zealots, cannot unite even all the victims of social injustice in a revolutionary campaign that would ruin the lives of at least two-thirds of our population who are now enjoying a fairly decent standard of living. The overwhelming majority of our citizens would support a unified, Progressive leadership of those who call themselves Democrats or Republicans, but who, under any political banner, are loyal to American institutions and have faith in the principles and processes of self-government.

But the grave danger of the present time lies in the failure of the Progressive leaders of business, of agriculture, and of politics to stand together in a common opposition to the Old Guard who, by doing nothing except to obstruct progress, would wreck recovery, and to the Destroyers who, by fomenting class conflicts, would drive us into civil war.

No mere exhortations to sink selfish ambitions and personal gain in a devotion to the general welfare will change this situation. When a business man or a politician feels that he can safely advance his selfish interests by refusing to cooperate, he is not easily persuaded to sacrifice a personal gain for the public interest. If, however, he should be convinced that we are menaced by a dangerous common enemy, and that we must either stand together or we shall be separately destroyed, then the sweet virtue of self-sacrifice may become a practical necessity of self-preservation. That is the appeal for cooperation which today should transform the hard-headed but intelligent business man or politician into a soldier for the common good.

It should be possible to prove today to at least 4 out of every 5 voters, to at least 4 out of every 5 fathers and mothers in this land, that they and their leaders must stand together against the Old Guard and the Destroyers for the protection of everything which they hold dear. And if the voters and the fathers and mothers of this Nation really knew the facts and the dangers confronting them, they would make their demands heard in one great shouting that would drive the sensible, Progressive leadership of this Nation into common action, and into common opposition to those who are playing upon the prejudices of either the fortunate rich or the unfortunate poor, and who, either blindly or intentionally, are enlisting their followers to engage in civil warfare.

If these three classes continue to assail President Roosevelt, there soon may be nobody in favor of the new deal—except the people.

I do not think that the American will disagree with me when I say that among the things which doubtless have helped to strengthen the President's position, are:

The vicious assault by utility holding companies, Old Guard politicians, and press against the administration's bill to reform a system which robbed both utility consumers and investors.

The Securities Act, which met with so much opposition, has proved its worth in protecting the investing public from fraudulent and deceitful sales of securities.

Unrestrained speculation contributed as much as any other one cause to the depression which began in 1929. It withdrew immense funds from all banks for gambling purposes. It withdrew money needed to carry on legitimate business. It resulted in the breaking down of credit institutions.

Through the regulation of security exchanges such unrestrained speculation is prohibited, and investors are given access to information, which is essential to the intelligent purchase and sale of securities. Is not this worth while?

The holding-company bill is directed toward the same general objectives—the protection of the investor and stockholder from excessive and unwarranted fees and charges, pyramided profits, and the exploitation of local solvent utility companies.

This administration has no apologies to make for its sincere and fearless efforts to curb greed, gambling speculations, fraud, and the exploitation of an uninformed and unsuspecting investing public in the matter of the purchase and sale of securities and the management of public-utility corporations.

Still the blind and bitter attacks of the reactionary interests continue on the administration banking bill which transferred part control of the people's money and credit from private bankers to the Government.

When Franklin D. Roosevelt and Herbert Hoover rode together down Pennsylvania Avenue, March 4, 1933, we thought an era in history had ended—an era in which the Republican Party had claimed the copyright on prosperity. But political memories are short, and of the making of claims there is no end. Out of the political grave rises Walter H. Newton, President Hoover's patronage secretary. He shakes his shroud and proclaims that the panic which closed the banks before Mr. Hoover left the job was all Mr. Roosevelt's fault.

When Mr. Roosevelt took the oath every bank in the Nation was closed or closing. Even the money temples in New York, the citadel of the Nation's finances, were locked and barred. New York had not even been able to hold out until after Inauguration Day. Millions of despairing Americans, even though they possessed bank passbooks, could not get their hands on enough cash to pay the grocer.

It seemed then that those who left their seats of power said such economic desolation would never again assert kinship to omnipotence, yet Mr. Newton and his literary associate, William Starr Myers, inform us that the depression had hit the bottom in June 1932, and that the peerless Mr. Hoover was leading the Nation back to sound recovery until that fatal day in November, when the people made the mistake of electing Mr. Roosevelt.

Thereafter, they say, came doubt and darkness; not because the people lacked confidence in Mr. Hoover, but because they distrusted Mr. Roosevelt.

Let us look at the record.

In the 12 years ending the last of December 1932, 10,816 banks closed their doors. The number up to November 1, 1932, a few days before the people voted to end Republican rule, was 10,562.

In 1929, Mr. Hoover's first year, 659 banks closed. In 1930, 1,352 banks closed. In 1931, 2,294 banks closed. In 1932, 1,456 banks closed.

The tempo of clicking bank doors continued to mount early in 1933. On February 14, 1933, the first bank holiday was declared in Michigan. It is, perhaps, too cruel to recall what happened from that date to the hour Mr. Hoover evacuated the White House on March 4.

So we will just skip from the middle of February to the middle of March, when President Roosevelt licensed the banks to reopen. During the rest of 1933, 179 banks had to close again. In 1934, 56 banks closed. And, in the first 4 months of 1935, 9 banks closed.

Now, having looked at the record, let us rise and pay tribute to Mr. Newton and Mr. Myers as the holders of the all-time, all-American high in political claiming.

To these blunders of the reactionaries the United States Chamber of Commerce added the finishing touches when it condemned N. R. A. and the President's social-security, utility, and banking-reform program, without adequate substitutes.

The enemies of the new deal rejoice in the decision of the Supreme Court when it outlawed the N. R. A. Perhaps even some of its weary friends will conclude that it was not worth the effort. I do not feel that way about it.

When this administration assumed power, between ten and fifteen million workingmen were tramping the streets of our cities and towns in search of employment.

Something had to be done, and done quickly, to relieve this condition.

Our efforts resulted in the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act. The objectives of this act were the spreading of employment by reduction in the hours of work, the elimination of child labor, the prohibition of unfair-trade practices and competition, and the creation of greater purchasing power.

One of the weaknesses in the administration of the act was the fact that it attempted to take in too much territory. But whatever weakness it may have developed, the ultimate results were wholesome.

Children who labored in sweatshops for 3 or 4 cents an hour were taken out of such industrial cesspools and restored to the playgrounds and schoolrooms of America.

Jobs were created for nearly 4,000,000 unemployed workmen. The annual volume of wages was increased by more than $600,000,000. Labor was assured the right of collective bargaining. And, above all else, the morale of the American workman was restored by knowledge of the fact that after all he was not just another forgotten man.

That business itself was not injured is best evidenced by the fact that in Indiana scores of industrial enterprises got out of the red and into the black for the first time in 2 or 3 years. Statistics show that the earnings of 1,435 representative industrial and trading establishments rose from $640,000,000 in 1933 to $1,071,000,000 in 1934—an increase of more than 66 percent.

As further evidence of the beneficial effects of the N. I. R. A. to business, I call your attention to the fact that many classes of industry today are voluntarily continuing their codes to the benefit of themselves and their employees.

As for the future, I am still convinced that the old dog-eat-dog competition between business and business and between employer and employee is the way of destruction.

That system has produced many depressions in the past, and progressively worse and longer depressions. If human experience is any guide, that old system, if allowed to continue, will produce even worse havoc in the future. It will destroy itself, as it almost destroyed itself last time.

Historically, economic and political systems survive only if they have within themselves the power of adaptation, the capacity for change. This is not only a moral issue; it is a problem of efficiency. Sweatshops, child labor, low wages, unemployment—and other evils which N. R. A. tried to eliminate—pull mass purchasing power and the consumer market so low that American business in the machine age simply cannot function. This is not a theory; it is a hard fact, proved year by year and month by month in bankruptcy and breadlines since 1929. The American business system cannot survive unless it has the will and the skill to adapt itself to the inexorable necessity of these new conditions.

That, as I understand it, was the thought behind N. R. A., not the thought of ultraradicals and ultraconservatives, who have always opposed N. R. A., but the purpose of the sober business and labor representatives who planned and supported N. R. A.

It is important for the Nation to realize that the industrial problem remains. The Supreme Court by throwing out an attempted solution has not thereby thrown out the problem. It would be very nice if we could throw out the problem, or if we could run away from it. But we cannot.

Having failed in one solution—or rather having had one attempted solution suddenly snatched away from us—the Nation will blunder along seeking another solution. If the Government can contribute to the solution with guidance and aid, so much the better. But maybe the Supreme Court decision eliminates the Government from all such effort—that will have to be determined by the legal experts. If the Government is eliminated, then the only alternative is for capital and labor to try to work out the solution themselves.

Meanwhile I salute President Roosevelt and Members of Congress who did their part in the battle against the tooth-and-claw system. It was a gallant effort. And if it transformed sweatshops, if it saved child laborers, if it put unemployed men back to work, if it did these things only for a short time, it was worth while.

Comes now, Herbert Hoover, and joins in the alarm about amending the Constitution, adding his name to that of Hearst, the young Republicans, and the already long list of those who are out to save the document, as is. By inference, in each of these alarms President Roosevelt and his advisers are treading toward the edge of treason in even mentioning the idea of a change.

What, for the life of me, I cannot understand is why the cry of sacrilege, when the document itself contains the machinery for amendment.

Article 5 provides two distinct means of initiating, and two means of making effective amendments.

In practice, the Constitution has been amended 21 times, 9 times since the antislavery amendment of 1865 and 6 times within the last 26 years.

Of these last 6 amendments, 3 were proposed and put through under Republican leadership and 3 under Democratic leadership.

The three amendments to carry out Civil War objectives were, of course, Republican achievements, it being with a frank Constitution-amending program that the Republican Party became an important factor in American life.

With what good grace, then, and upon what precedent do these self-styled patriots speak who shudder at the mere idea of any sort of constitutional change and impute lack of patriotism to a President who so far is only vaguely reported as wanting to do what other Presidents have done?

If and when President Roosevelt does present a specific suggested constitutional amendment or amendments, then the American people will take a proper interest in all phases and implications of what is proposed.

In the meantime, the purely-political, patently insincere, and largely blatherskite smoke screen now being laid down by administration opponents against any constitutional amendments at all is so utterly transparent as to be nothing more than stupid.

Our opponents are seemingly very much concerned about the credit of the United States.

Look, cry the breast-beating politicians, at our public debt, now greater than the debt left by the Great War! Look at the Federal deficit now, breaking all peacetime records.

But these are not peacetimes. We are fighting a war now, just as we did in 1917 and 1918.

A fiscal year has just ended. Let us compare our Budget and debt today with those of 16 years ago.

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, we spent about eighteen and one-half billions, ran up a deficit of more than thirteen billions, and ended with a public debt of nearly twenty-five and one-half billions.

In the fiscal year just ended we spent about seven billions, ran a deficit of about three and one-half billions, and left the public debt standing at about twenty-eight and one-half billions.

Our current borrowings and spendings are large. But wars are costly things.

The 1919 red-ink figures were budgetary reflections of our 19 months' overseas adventure, which left a harvest of graves, bad foreign debts, trade-destroying tariffs, and other economic ills that still wrack the Nation. President Coolidge once estimated that the cost of our participations in the World War ultimately would come to no less than $100,000,000,000.

The 1935 red-ink figures help tell the story of a 6-year battle against the depression. We still are waging this war to conquer hunger, unemployment, insecurity, sickness, inflated farm and home debts, bank and business failures, economic disorder, discontent, and discouragement. In addition we have been harassed by droughts and floods.

This is a baffling war to wage, because the foes are within. It has been costly because we have maintained the slow and cumbersome processes of democracy.

But when this war is won it will be a real victory and will leave a saner, richer, better-ordered Republic. And that will be worth the heavy costs.

May I call attention to the fact that on July 15 the Treasury borrowed $500,000,000 at 1⅜ percent and the subscriptions received amounted to $2,975,000,000? On July 22 bids were asked on $100,000,000 of Treasury bonds. Subscriptions amounted to $511,000,000. On July 29 bids were asked on $100,000,000 of Treasury bonds. Subscriptions amounted to $320,000,000. On August 2 a $50,000,000 issue of Treasury bills was offered. Subscriptions amounted to $150,119,000.

All Treasury bonds are now selling above par, ranging from 101 to 117.

I ask you, Does this indicate that the credit of the United States is even impaired, much less threatened by destruction?

Our political opponents, who are searching so frantically for an issue upon which they may ride back into power, must find one better fortified by facts than their unwarranted protest that the Roosevelt administration threatens to destroy the credit of the United States. The credit of the United States is sound and will be maintained.

The Republicans, scratching about for issues, have found one that coincides with what looks like packers' propaganda from Chicago. It is designed to get the housewife vote. It is pigs—the ghosts of some six and a third million shotes and sows "plowed under" by a cruel triple A in the fall of 1933.

Pork is high, say the critics. Why? Because of a pig shortage due to the criminal slaughter of the porcine innocents.

Unfortunately, it is not so simple.

Primarily the pork shortage is due to the last year's drought. That calamity reduced the 1934 corn crop by nearly 1,000,000,000 bushels. By taking the surplus baby and mamma pigs out of circulation (practically all of the usable pork was fed to relief families or turned into fertilizer), the Government's program not only prevented a disastrous oversupply but acted as a stabilizer by saving for the drought year some 70,000,000 bushels of corn that the pigs would have consumed if they had lived. Even after the reduction was made, the 1934 slaughter was 68,000,000 head, or slightly less than in either 1933 or 1932. It was equal to that of 1925, when we exported 6.7 percent of our pork and 32 percent of our lard. Last year we exported 1.8 percent of our pork and 21.1 percent of our lard.

If the packers and processors are spreading this tearful story of the lost pig generation, one wonders at their logic. How can they claim in their hundreds of recovery suits that they have borne the burden of triple A, and at the same time weep for the housewives who must bear it?

I do not like to see food destroyed. But when, as in this case, it helps to restore purchasing power to farmers, it is less of an economic sin. At any rate, pigs is pigs, and not much of a campaign issue.

American farmers may squeeze a bit of grim humor out of the righteous howl going up from the processors against the A. A. A. Particularly, they will smile over the tears being shed by the Liberty League and similar subsidized critics in behalf of the downtrodden consumers of the land.

American farmers have been collecting benefits under the A. A. A.'s processing taxes for 2 years. Industry has been collecting its toll from the consumers since the first tariff act was passed on July 4, 1789.

The farmers are getting benefits from processing taxes on eight basic commodities. Industry, including the processors, collects benefits from hundreds of tariff-protected commodities.

The farmers have reaped benefits under A. A. A.'s processing taxes of $866,000,000 since 1933. Industry has reaped billions.

Through the years since Alexander Hamilton's time the farmers have been forced to sell their products on an open market and to buy finished goods on a protected market. For the first time now the farmers are getting a bit of protection on the things they sell.

How ironic is the processors' attack on A. A. A. may be seen by comparing the farmers' new benefits with those the processors have enjoyed for years. The processing tax on wheat is 30 cents a bushel. But the Hawley-Smoot tariff on flour is $1.04 per 100 pounds and 30 percent on white bread. The processing tax on hogs is 2¼ cents a pound; the tariff on smoked bacon is 3¼ cents a pound. The processing tax is 4.2 cents on raw cotton. But the tariff on the farmers' work shirts and overalls and on his wife's gingham and muslin goods is 37½ percent ad valorem.

There is no processing tax on milk, but there is a tariff of 14 cents a pound on butter. Tariffs are collected on nearly everything the farmer buys—on work shoes, at 20 percent; wool shirts, 45 percent; steel posts, 50 percent; on tractors, cream separators, horse collars, windmill pumps, and so on ad lib.

A tariff of 50 percent also rests on women's silk hose. Thanks to the A. A. A., this item begins to interest the farmer's wife.

I very briefly have summarized some of the major problems with which this administration has been confronted during the past 2½ years.

Attendant upon the proper solution of these problems, numberless affiliated questions had to be solved and legislated upon.

It is palpable that this administration has been compelled to meet this devastating depression upon scores of battle-fronts. It has been one of the most stupendous undertakings ever demanded in the peace-time history of our country.

Proud and happy are we that the Democratic administration now in control has had the courage, the ability, and the desire to accept this responsibility. And proud and happy are we that, irrespective of partisan politics, the overwhelming majority of the citizens of this country have cooperated in a patriotic endeavor to be of service in this crucial test. As evidence of that fact, may we never forget that over 2,300,000 employers voluntarily signed agreements extending benefits to over 16,000,000 employees to help the President in his appeal for reemployment.

Some mistakes may have been made. That was inevitable. But such mistakes are of little concern compared to the aggregate wholesome contributions to the general welfare and the health, happiness, and prosperity of the masses of the American people.

The morale of our people has been preserved. They have more confidence, more optimism, renewed incentive for the exercises of a more vigorous and loyal American citizenship.

Despite the most vicious propaganda ever directed at a Chief Executive, they know that in Franklin D. Roosevelt they have a friend. They know that as President he will not be turned aside in his determination to secure the greatest economic and social good to the greatest number.

They know that he is possessed of the courage, the sincerity, the vision which are necessary to lift America and American institutions from the depths into which they had fallen and to guide and direct them in keeping with the sacred ideals and traditions of our glorious American Republic.

Our course plainly is marked—set down by the founders of this Republic under the guiding hand of that lover of man, Thomas Jefferson.

I maintain that President Franklin Delano Roosevelt is the greatest humanitarian who ever sat in the executive seat in the White House.

I maintain that he is one of the greatest executive officers in the history of our country.

I maintain that the far-reaching efforts of his administration to relieve distress, to feed the hungry, to save homes from foreclosure, and to increase the national wealth by great projects, giving employment to many armies of men, is rapidly developing into the most colossal success in world history.

I maintain that no such efforts as he has put forth can be brought to fruition within 3 years, and hence it is entirely too early for the wolf pack now barking at his heels to frighten either him or any of his friends.

I maintain that he saved the banks, that he saved the railways, that he saved thousands of homes for the owners, that he saved millions of men, women, and children from stark destitution and starvation.

I maintain that he has prevented inflation, kept the dollar sound, and when Europe was planning a gold raid on the country withdrew that precious metal from circulation and put eight billions of it in vaults, where it is safe, until the world has recovered its sanity.

I maintain that the powerful financial interests which are fighting him, and which refuse to cooperate with him in his titanic efforts to abolish the depression, will never be able to head off either his renomination or his reelection.

I maintain further that before his second term expires we will have a perfectly balanced Budget, and economists will be able to show that under the administration many billions of wealth were added to the country, and that his great social-justice program will be so far advanced that no responsible statesman will ever attempt to impede its onward march.

CONGRESS AND THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that Congress is wasting a great deal of time and effort in discussing extraneous matters and matters that do not properly concern us. I allude to long, loud, and, I might say, acrimonious discussions on the Constitution. As I understand it, the duty of this body is to pass such legislation as it deems wise and in accord with the mandate of the people and let another department of the Government decide the constitutionality of its acts.

I know of no authority lodged in the legislative branch of the Government giving it the right to interpret its own acts. I know of no authority giving it the right to decide the constitutionality of its own acts. I have always and still do believe that the interpretation of the law and the deciding of its constitutionality are powers vested in the judiciary and in the judiciary alone. The functions of each of the three branches of the Government are clearly defined in the Constitution, and whether the legislation passed by this body is constitutional or not is not to be determined by this body.

From almost every Member on the Republican side, and I regret to state a few on the Democratic side, I have listened to wails of anguish concerning the alleged usurpation by the Executive of the powers of the legislature. I now witness the peculiar spectacle of the legislature endeavoring to usurp the functions of the judiciary, and the President attacked because, animated by a high sense of duty, he called attention in his letter to my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Washington, to the fact that doubts concerning the constitutionality of proposed legislation should not concern the law-making body.

It might be well to remember that during the administration of President Cleveland a bill was introduced in this body proposing an income tax. Its constitutionality was discussed for weeks and there was a great difference of opinion among the lawyers in the House. It was finally passed and the question of its constitutionality was brought to the Supreme Court. By a vote of 5 to 4 it was declared constitutional. Then it might be said relatively overnight Justice Shiras changed his mind and he reversed his vote and by a vote of 5 to 4 it was declared unconstitutional. And this body still wastes time in the discussion of the constitutionality of proposed legislation.

I think I am correct in stating that when the bill concerning the gold-payment clause in contracts was under discussion in this House, the entire Republican side were greatly alarmed and rent high heaven with their protests that the bill was unconstitutional. The bill passed and the United States Supreme Court declared that it was constitutional and God still reigns in Heaven and the American Government still exists.

I have observed that when my colleagues on the other side of the aisle cannot successfully attack the merits of a bill they attack the President. Well, Mr. Speaker, there are always pigmies who, in their littleness and smallness, try to drag some giant down; and when the history of these times is written, the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt, like Abou ben Adhem of poetic fancy, will lead all the rest on the list of those who loved his fellow men, and who gave his all to help, aid, and assist them. His courage and fortitude will stand out like milestones on the road of progress, while his detractors, if remembered at all, will only remind us of the fly on the chariot wheel, who said, "Oh, what a noise I do make", as a cloud of dust swept him into obscurity.

When these sordid, mean, little attacks and the despicable whispering campaigns fail they then drag out the Constitution.

Some noted Englishman one time said that patriotism was the recourse of scoundrels, and I am constrained to think that the Constitution is the recourse of marplots, hypocrites, defamers of character, who truly illustrate the fact that into high office sometimes comes those who, sent by a misguided constituency, rattle around like a pea in a can and perform no mission save to run up toy balloons in the hope that Presidential lightning will strike them.

May I appeal to those who are endeavoring to usurp the functions of the judicial branch of the Government to spend a quiet hour in their office, read the Constitution, learn the duties and the limitations of a Congressman, and then return to the floor of this Chamber, perform their duties in accordance with the provisions of their oath of office, and enact legislation that will be in accordance with the desires of the people and will be of benefit to the whole people?

A REPUBLICAN'S VIEWPOINT ON THE STATE OF THE UNION

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address I delivered last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I insert the following radio address delivered by me over Columbia Broadcasting System on August 18:

As the present session of Congress draws to a close the people are beginning more and more to wonder where the administration's extravagant spending program is getting them, when it is going to stop, and how it is going to be paid for.

During the Presidential campaign of 1932 the people were given to understand that Mr. Roosevelt was a twentieth century Moses who would lead them out of the depths of depression into the sunshine of recovery. No President since the days of Washington ever came into office with the support behind him which President Roosevelt had, and a subservient Congress has virtually allowed him to write his own ticket so far as legislation has been concerned. He has not been hampered or restricted in any way in putting into effect not only his own ideas but those of his "brain trust" as well.

Yet in spite of all the laws that have been passed and all the borrowed money that has been spent, there are still more than 10,000,000 men out of work, some 20,000,000 of our people are on relief, industry is in the doldrums, and agriculture, sadder but wiser, is reaping the whirlwind of the administration's program of scarcity.

No one can deny that the new-deal bubble has burst. A disillusioned people views with disappointment and despair the record of the Democratic Party since it came into office. The result of the recent election in the First Congressional District of Rhode Island, in which there was a turn-over of 34,400 votes since last November, is more than ample proof of this fact. There are indications that a similar turn-over will take place next year throughout the country, which will mean the election of a Republican President and a Republican Congress.

Instead of promoting recovery, most of the policies and legislative enactments of the present administration have placed stumbling blocks in its way. There has been too much emphasis on reform, and not enough emphasis on putting people back to work at their old jobs.

Too much attention has been given to the planks in the Socialist platform and not enough to the planks in the Democratic platform.

In his inaugural address, President Roosevelt stated that "the only thing we have to fear is fear itself", but I cannot agree with him. The President's own policies and lack of policies have done more to engender fear and destroy confidence than everything else put together.

If the administration would get back to fundamentals and would adopt definite and unwavering monetary and sound fiscal policies, one of the greatest impediments standing in the way of recovery would be removed.

During the 1932 Presidential campaign, Mr. Roosevelt accused the last Republican administration of being the "greatest spending administration in peace times in all our history."

Of course, that was before his own administration came into office, and the Democratic Party now has that dubious distinction.

The actual expenditures of the Government have been increased from $5,100,000,000 in 1933 to $7,100,000,000 in 1934, and $7,300,000,000 in 1935. The estimate of expenditures for 1936, according to the official Budget, is $8,500,000,000.

This administration has not only spent money extravagantly, but it has done so wantonly, recklessly, and wastefully.

The first month and a half of the fiscal year 1936 has already passed. As of August 14, which marked the forty-fifth day of the current fiscal year, the expenditures of the Government totaled $1,032,000,000, which is at the rate of $23,000,000 every 24 hours. Treasury receipts during the same period were $520,000,000, which shows that the Government is spending $2 for every dollar it takes in.

In the Presidential campaign of 1932, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"It is my pledge * * * that rigid governmental economy shall be forced by a stern and unrelenting administration policy of living within our income."

The President's pledge was made before election. The President's failure to keep this pledge came after election. Instead of rigid economy as promised, his administration has kept piling up the national debt.

In his forgotten economy message of March 10, 1933, delivered just before he began his wild spending spree, President Roosevelt warned the country that it was on the "road to bankruptcy", by reason of the continued deficits of 1931, 1932, and 1933. He said that these deficits had contributed to the collapse of the banking structure, increased the stagnation of the economic life of our people, and added to the ranks of the unemployed. In spite of this, President Roosevelt, by his continued extravagance and increase in the public debt, is continuing at breakneck speed on the same road to bankruptcy to which he pointed with alarm.

I do not suppose there is anybody who does not realize that this spending program and this piling up of debts cannot go on indefinitely. We will either have to increase taxes to meet expenditures or we will have to reduce the expenditures to meet our income. Even when this is done, we will still have the enormous national debt, which now stands at 29 billions, and which is constantly increasing by several billions each year.

Every citizen must face this problem squarely, because it cannot be avoided.

This brings us to the question of taxes. Since coming into power the present Democratic administration has not had the courage to bring in a tax bill which would raise sufficient revenue to pay for its extravagant spending program.

The tax bill now before Congress, which has been drawn up in response to the President's share-the-wealth message of June 19, is only a political gesture. It is not intended to raise revenue. It carries the euphonious title of Social Reform. This certainly is a new designation for the hard burden of taxation. The new name, however, will not lighten the distress of the already overburdened taxpayers.

The measure is important, however, for what it indicates in the way of future burdens on the people. In this connection I should like to read a brief extract from the report which my Republican colleagues and I submitted in opposition to this bill as the minority report of the Ways and Means Committee.

We said:

"If this bill serves no other purpose, it will at least demonstrate to the country that the extravagant and wasteful expenditures of the Democratic administration cannot be met merely by soaking the rich.

"Although it imposes rates of taxation which border on the point of actual confiscation, its proponents estimate that it will produce only 207 millions of revenue. This amount would pay the running expenses of the Government for less than 2 weeks, and it falls $3,300,000,000 short of meeting the deficit for the last fiscal year. Even as a redistribution-of-wealth measure, it would provide but $2.25 for each of our 120,000,000 people.

"The bill makes it perfectly obvious to the great masses of our people that in the last analysis they, and not the rich, are going to be required to assume the greater portion of the cost of the administration's profligate expenditures. As they become painfully aware of the fact that a part of every dollar the administration spends is eventually going to be collected from them in burdensome and oppressive taxes, we believe they will insist with us that this orgy of expenditure be speedily terminated.

"In opposing this bill we are not taking a stand inconsistent with our previously expressed attitude in favor of a balanced Budget, which we still favor, but it should be balanced by reducing expenditures and not wholly by increasing taxes. The administration has no right to increase the tax burden on either rich or poor until it has first adopted a sane spending program."

The Brookings Institute, a purely scientific and analytic body, recently informed the President that a billion and a half dollars could be cut from Federal expenditures without the least reduction in efficiency of government. The President's failure to heed such a message indicates his willingness to overburden the people with an enormous debt.

A very significant article appeared in yesterday's press stating that the Roper council, composed of about 40 business leaders, has urged the President to defer the pending tax bill until the next session of Congress in order that a well-considered tax program may be submitted rather than the conglomeration now before Congress, which can well be designated a "crazy-quilt hodge-podge." To write a tax bill in a few days under the stress of congressional adjournment and the spur of the President's insistence can lead to nothing but confusion, inconsistencies, unfairness, and inequalities.

One of the most harmful policies of the present administration has been that with respect to the tariff. In spite of all the abuse which our Democratic friends have heaped upon the protective-tariff policy, it stands as the only bulwark between the American standard of living and that of the rest of the world. The home market is certainly the birthright of our own people, and the tariff seeks to protect industry, agriculture, and labor from unfair and destructive competition in that market.

As a result of the Democratic reciprocal tariff law no domestic producer, whether he be a farmer, manufacturer, or a miner, can be certain from one day to the next that his business will not be sacrificed to foreign competition by the administration's star-chamber committee on foreign-trade agreements in its effort to secure foreign concessions for certain domestic export industries.

What net gain is accomplished by destroying one industry for the benefit of another? The present policy has been sponsored by the present Secretary of State, who is an avowed free trader and who believes that we should not produce anything in this country which can be produced cheaper elsewhere. Think of it! That we should not produce anything in this country which can be produced cheaper elsewhere. If this policy were carried out fully we would not have a single industry left.

The damage which the reciprocal-trade policy can do to our people is well illustrated by the agreement entered into with Cuba last September. These agreements are supposed to be mutually beneficial to each country, but I wish to point out that in order to sell Cuba an additional $12,000,000 worth of goods over a 9-month period before and after the agreement was signed we have had to purchase from that country an additional forty millions' worth of stuff which we should have produced at home. I defy anyone to show where there is an advantage to this country in that kind of dealing.

It is somewhat galling to us Americans to see our President's photograph taken with a group of Cubans here to express their good will for the additional business Cuba has secured at the expense of our own producers through the reciprocal trade agreement which was negotiated by our own Secretary of State with that country.

Similar agreements have also been entered into with Belgium, Haiti, Brazil, and Sweden, and negotiations are under way with a dozen other countries. In all cases except Cuba the concessions made to one country are extended to all other countries. This is entirely detrimental to our interests, because we throw our markets open to all countries in exchange for a concession from one country.

The delegation of congressional authority to the President as exemplified by his power to enter into those foreign-trade agreements has been one of the most destructive features of all the new-deal legislation. Another unfortunate feature of such legislation has been the encroachment upon the jurisdiction of the States. Both are directly contrary to the express provisions of the Constitution of the United States. Both, however, are in line with the obvious intention of the President and the "brain trust" to concentrate authority of government within the confines of the Capital and within the President's own autocratic power.

The attitude of the President toward the Constitution was made plain in his recent letter to the chairman of the subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, which had the pending Guffey-Snyder coal bill in charge. He said:

"I hope that your committee will not permit doubts as to the constitutionality, however reasonable, to block the suggested legislation."

In practically all the major legislation which has been enacted since the present administration has come into power, the President has shown an utter disregard for constitutional limitations. In his zeal to institute fundamental changes in our governmental system, he has failed to heed the wise words of his illustrious predecessor, George Washington, who in his Farewell Address said:

"If in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates.

"But let there be no change by usurpation, for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

WILL ROGERS AND WILEY POST

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker be authorized to appoint a select committee of seven Members to draft resolutions of sympathy to be extended to the families of the late Will Rogers and the late Wiley Post; also that the committee be authorized to consider the matter of naming highway 66, an international highway 66 for Will Rogers.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, ought not this request be in writing and should it not be printed so we will know just what we are doing?

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I have simply requested that the Speaker be authorized to appoint a committee to draft appropriate resolutions. It seems to me it is not necessary that the resolution be in writing.

Mr. SNELL. It is rather unusual procedure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the Speaker be authorized to appoint a committee of seven to draft resolutions of sympathy to be extended to the families of the late Will Rogers and the late Wiley Post, and also to consider the naming of Highway 66 for Will Rogers.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think this resolution ought to be put in writing. We ought to know what we are doing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma will reduce it to writing.

THE LATE SPEAKER RAINEY

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on the occasion of the anniversary of the death of the late Speaker, Mr. Rainey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOBBINS. Mr. Speaker, this day marks the first anniversary of the passing of a great American. It was on August 19, 1934, when the Nation at large, and especially the Members of Congress, were shocked to learn that what we had all hoped might be a mere transient illness of our Speaker, Henry T. Rainey, had terminated fatally.

His death ended a career of distinguished public service such as it has seldom fallen to the lot of one man to render. Contributing to the laudatory comment on his life work, which appeared in the press of the Nation on the following day, I said at that time:

> For many years to come there will be an increasingly grateful realization of the vital part that Speaker Rainey played in the tremendous legislative program of the new-deal Congress. His zealous interest in the welfare of the farmer and the common people had the quality of religious devotion.
> He was steadfast in his friendships, but gave little time to recreation. There are very few men who gave so large a proportion of their time to public service.
>
> His life on a farm, which he managed till his death, gave him an ability to understand farm problems and to work for their solution, which it is probable no other man in his position ever possessed.
> We people of Illinois will always be better off because Henry T. Rainey lived long enough beyond the allotted three score years and ten to serve as Speaker of the present Congress.

As I read again the sentences that opened and closed my comment on that occasion, I am conscious of the feeling that it was a very moderate estimate of Speaker Rainey's accomplishments, and of the place that he deserved in the public esteem.

Good fortune did not bring to me the opportunity of knowing Mr. Rainey well until during the latter years of his life; but prior to that I had shared with millions of citizens of my State and of the Nation a pride in his vigorous statesmanship and in his great accomplishments as a Member of this legislative body.

It will always be a source of satisfaction to me that I was privileged to witness at very close range, and under unusual conditions, the public service of Speaker Rainey as the presiding officer of this branch of the Congress, crowning his illustrious record as an American statesman. The years that whitened his hair had taken nothing from the erectness of his stature, nor from the bright and friendly gleam of his eye.

It is pleasant to read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the report of the last remarks that he uttered from the floor of this Chamber. It was on the 18th of June in 1934. The memorable Seventy-third Congress was soon to adjourn sine die. The distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who was occupying the chair as Speaker pro tempore, had just delivered a most gracious tribute to Mr. Rainey's character. The Speaker's appreciative acknowledgment of that tribute concluded with these words:

> An historic Congress is about to end its second and its last session. In this Congress we have enacted more legislation, we have done more work, and we have talked less than in any other Congress in the history of this Republic.
> I wish you all now, as you leave for your vacations, a pleasant summer. I wish you all good health, much happiness, prosperity, and a safe return.

With that thought, characteristic of his solicitude for the welfare of others, Henry Rainey ended his long years of devoted service on this floor. Two months later the inevitable summons came, and his soul took its departure, as a great ship sails forth at eventide past twinkling lights that mark the end of a long and perfect day.

LONG AND SHORT HAUL

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the long- and short-haul bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, the so-called "Pettengill bill" for the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause of the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act has been favorably reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee. Application is now pending for a rule before the Rules Committee, and I trust the House will be given an opportunity to vote on the bill before this session closes.

I think it may be of interest to the House to have a cross-section of public opinion on this bill.

At their own suggestion the Conference of Western Owners of Property and Investments, through their chairman, Robert E. Smith, has just submitted a questionnaire to each advisory member of that conference. The conference is composed of 1,200 heads of luncheon, service, and commercial organizations in States west of the Mississippi River.

The organization is wholly nonpartisan. It takes no stand on matters of national legislation without first submitting the question to their advisory committee.

The questionnaire was mailed out only 10 days ago, but a substantial response has already been received. Only two "no" votes have been returned. The rest are all affirmative. This is particularly illuminating of a changed public opinion on this matter in the intermountain territory where formerly the opposition was considerable.

The following are typical of the comments which have been received. The originals and many other replies are in my possession where they may be examined.

TEXAS

This bill is, in our opinion, the first and best step toward support for the backbone of our transportation system of the United States of America. This bill, along with all others that are tending toward strengthening the rail lines and not loosening the rail of control, should be supported in full.

WISCONSIN

Save the railroads and you will save the country. It is pitiful to see the tremendous investment tied up in railroads and then see the enormous amount of merchandise moved by truck over the public roads at danger to the traveling public.

This should have been taken care of 3 years ago.

CALIFORNIA

I am violently opposed to any means of transportation which will pound our paved highways to pieces and, secondly, which would unjustly take away freight or passenger business from the railroads. At present great caravans of trucks are hauling all kinds of freight on our new California concrete highways, most of which are not paid for. If this is allowed to continue, highway bonds will be outstanding by the millions, unmatured and without funds to meet their maturity, long after the highways have been pounded to pieces by obnoxious freight trucks and gigantic passenger busses.

I believe there should be some elasticity in railroad-rate schedules to permit the roads to follow changing conditions or meet destructive competition.

OREGON

Trucks are now hauling water-borne shipments from coast cities back to Boise and Spokane territory, with consequent loss to railroads, and no advantage accrues to interior distributors.

ARKANSAS

For as far ahead as I can see the railroads must carry the greater part of our inland freight, even though it finally is water borne. Trucks will carry a very considerable part of our freights, especially such commodities as are or can be divided into easily handled units. Airplanes will handle an increasing amount of the lighter and more costly commodities. Busses and airplanes will get a large percentage of the passenger business. To bring stone, sand, iron ore and steel, grain, cotton, and livestock to market at a fair cost for transportation, we need and must keep our trunk-line railroads. Regulate them all but leave them in private hands.

I am 100 percent behind this bill.

NEBRASKA

I feel that the railroads made this western country and need all consideration possible. They are hurt in this State. Have lost the short hauls, and labor feels the effect.

MISSOURI

It is self-evident that the railroads of our country should be permitted to secure, through rate meeting, the large volume of transporation now going to truck and boat transporation companies; they should be put in position to at least make a fair bid for the business now being done by competing transporation companies who by reason of cheaper equipment and overhead are now in position to offer lower transportation costs to the shipper. Give the railroads a break; they already have brakes.

While I am not familiar with the full text of the law, I have been and I will continue to be in favor of Mr. PETTENGILL's proposed amendment. Until such action is taken I do not see how the railroads can ever come back. I have been a member of the Missouri Legislature and have given no little study to rates. I hope the amendment prevails.

I favor the bill because the railroads are a necessity to our country. Helping them is helping our country.

I favor legislation that will place all carriers in a position to work unhampered with its competition. Fixed railroad taxes should be offset by fixed truck taxes so the local community would receive taxes from use of highways through its borders as the railroad now pays on its lines through the Nation. The same applies to water transporation.

MONTANA

Railroads should be entitled to consideration in legislation permitting them to revise rates. The investment in railroads is so great they are entitled to more consideration. In this country they have kept schools open for several years with their tax payments. They have been discriminated against and legislated against.

OKLAHOMA

If busses and trucks are to be permitted to enter unlimited competition with the railroads, they should be compelled to purchase their own rights-of-way and construct their own special highways, and not wear down State and Federal highways, even if they do pay a small per-mile tax. Also a Federal licensing system should be devised for these.

Very essential to future of railroads that they be given every opportunity to rightfully compete with other forms of transportation. Think this long-and-short-haul clause should be abolished without further controversy or delay.

A very sensible step in the right direction.

IOWA

I favor H. R. 3263. Something must be done to relieve carriers of obsolete legislation, remove them from referees in bankruptcy, and assist them to pay interest and principal for the sake of life-insurance policyholders as well as other investors.

Railroads must be maintained, and it is only fair that they should be allowed to meet competition. Very few truckers make more than a living.

ILLINOIS

We favor giving the railroads as free a hand as possible to meet present-day competition.

We as manufacturers in the Central States are losing out to our competitors on east coast and need this favorable legislation to offset the Panama Canal. We need the railroads, and any lower rates would encourage business and increase the tonnage carried. More cars and engines, more work.

MINNESOTA

I favor same for the reason that it is logical and if passed would give the railroads a chance to secure business now lost to them.

THE UTILITY INDUSTRY NEEDS REGULATION—THE COUNTRY NEEDS A REST FROM AGITATION—THE FUNDAMENTAL ERROR IN TITLE I OF THE UTILITY BILL

Mr. PETTINGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to the utilities bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I attach copy of my letter to President Roosevelt of August 17:

In re: The utility bill.

AUGUST 17, 1935.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: This letter is written to you as the final arbiter of the fate of the utility bill. It is written in the hope that Senator WHEELER will respect your judgment as to whether we are to have a bill or a political issue, whether we are to have regulation or agitation.

I am appealing for a bill.

In order to have a bill it is apparent that some concessions must be made to honest differences of opinion.

No correct appraisement of the situation can be made by you unless you clearly recognize that those members of your party (with few exceptions) who voted against section 11 of the Senate bill are as sincere as you are yourself, in the desire that a decent bill be enacted into law.

If this letter represented my own views only you might be justified in not reading further.

I assure you, however, that it represents the views of many beside myself.

Let me state a fundamental point of disagreement:

Title 1 of the utility bill is written around an assumption. That assumption is that the public interest will be served by requiring geographic integration of utility systems.

I have never been sold on this assumption. Further reflection convinces me that this assumption is entirely unsound and that it is the originating cause of all the difficulties in which the bill finds itself today.

In a final effort to be constructively helpful, I beg you to reexamine this hypothesis. I am certain that it is full of vice; that its enactment into law will not only not accomplish the abolition of the evils referred to in your message of March, but, on the contrary, will actually promote them. All through the hearings and executive sessions on this bill those who disagreed with this hypothesis were up against the iron barricade of the idea that it was written on Mount Sinai, and official ears were closed to any argument against it.

Throughout the hearings and consideration of the bill this assumption has never been subjected to a cool and critical analysis.

For illustration, let us assume a simple case. Let us assume that two utility systems, A and B, are operating in Michigan. The same two companies are also operating in New England.

The hypothesis is that system A shall not operate both in New England and Michigan. The same assumption prevails with reference to system B. The bill, therefore, is designed to force system A to sell its properties in Michigan to system B, and in New England to force system B to sell its properties to system A. When this is done A will alone operate in New England and B will alone operate in Michigan.

The result is that you have created a monopoly and a further concentration of economic power in both of these territories. In neither territory will the surviving utility be subject to the competition of another system.

It is true that with rates fixed by State commissions there is today no competition in the charge per kilowatt to the consumer. There is, however, competition for the extension and improvement of service, for engineering, and technical advance, for reduction of costs, the struggle for markets, and the good will of the public.

The hypothesis upon which this bill is written destroys all of this. It substitutes monopoly for competition and creates a rotten borough in the utility field in the territory served by the surviving system, as hostile to the public interest, in my judgment, as any rotten borough system in the field of politics. Freed from competitive stresses, with a stranglehold upon the territory served protected by law, the surviving system will rapidly degenerate in its service to the public.

This concentration of economic power in territory safeguarded by law will be followed by political domination in the territory as complete as formerly existed in the transportation field in States whose freight and passenger service was dependent upon the monopoly of a single railroad system.

In the same way that it has been a good thing for the public for the railroads to be forced to meet new competitive factors in the transportation field, in my judgment it is a good thing for the public to prevent monopolization by a single utility system in an integrated geographical territory.

It seems to me, therefore, that title 1 is designed to promote the things you and I are determined to fight.

The sum up, the assumption of geographical integration is—

(1) Fictitious, arbitrary, and unnatural.

(2) It invites the principal constitutional difficulty underlying the bill. The supposed social objective of geographical integration is too remote from interstate commerce to have a constitutional basis.

(3) It is the chief political embarrassment in the situation. It requires the divestment by legislative fiat of property interests heretofore lawfully acquired. Against such divestment there is a deep-seated popular resentment.

(4) It promotes monopoly in the geographical units and ultimately, in my judgment, in the entire Nation. Why do I say this? With geographical territory fenced off by law to one system, that system is free from competition. It is therefore in a better position to cooperate with other systems for financial and political domination. While competing with each other such cooperation is difficult. Destroy all competition, guarantee to each prince his satrapy, and you make cooperation easy. History is too full of such instances to be overlooked by realists in politics.

(5) The bill will not only promote economic, financial, and political concentration, but will leave unimpaired enormous aggregations of capital which the bill will probably not affect. The aggregation of capital in the Consolidated Gas of New York City, I understand, is as great as the Electric Bond & Share. The bill will destroy the one and leave the other untouched. When the public eventually realize this the much advertised brave effort to break up economic concentration will assume a very jaundiced appearance.

The latter point is worthy of a more detailed analysis. According to the figures in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 26, 1935, page 10233, under extension of remarks of Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi, and prepared, no doubt, by the ghost writers of the bill, existing holding-company systems are classified into three groups of nearly equal capitalization. It will be noted that section 11 of the Senate bill leaves the first group practically undisturbed, the second partially disturbed, and the third group subject to compulsory reorganization under section 11.

In breaking down these figures, I get the following result:

Capital	Average investment per system	Average investment for State
(1) $5,219,933,921	$274,712,311	$237,251,541
(2) $5,338,580,699	410,660,053	75,191,277
(3) $5,115,437,545	465,039,776	34,798,894

The second column shows the average investment per holding-company system regardless of the territory it occupies.

The third column represents the average investment in each State where the holding-company system operates.

You will observe the marked contrast between the capitalization in the States of the systems permitted to continue under section 11 and the investment per State of the systems that would be required to reorganize.

The average investment per State of the systems that will not be interfered with under section 11 is $237,000,000, or seven times the average investment of the companies that will be required to reorganize or find new owners.

This analysis of what the Senate bill does and does not do affords little comfort to the rabble rousers. And in passing, the Democratic Party cannot afford to join the pied pipers of prejudice. Our party has helped to build this Nation. It will retain confidence only if it continues to do so.

The above analysis shows that even if the fundamental assumption of the bill were sound rather than unsound it leaves enormous aggregations of capital wholly untouched and selects a few holding-company systems for legislative slaughter, while others with much larger aggregations of capital in the States served by them will go scotfree.

No defense of the superstructure holding company will ever be written by me. A system like the Associated Gas & Electric, with a concentration of control and a minimum of investment in the top holding company, 10 degrees removed, cannot be defended. In my supplemental report as a member of the committee I described such a system as an "economic dinosaur."

These structures are, however, in my judgment, already rapidly going out of the picture, and with wise and courageous administration of the Security Act of 1933 they will die of financial malnutrition. The Security Act, plus a carefully written tax on intercorporate dividends and the control of intercompany profits and other regulating provisions written in the pending bill, will, in my judgment, in a few years accomplish all of the primary objectives in the public interest.

The existing deadlock on this bill, in my judgment, arises from the false hypothesis with which title 1 is saturated. The removal of this hypothesis by the rewriting of the pertinent sections of the pending bill would, I believe, result in the kind of legislation that ought to become law at this session of Congress.

Against such a bill I doubt if 100, even 50, votes would be cast by the House of Representatives. It would be a magnificent victory.

There is so much in the pending bill that ought to become law now that even if section 11 were blessed by all the saints of politics it ought not to be permitted to strangle the rest of the bill in legislative childbirth.

"We must do the best we can with what we have, where we are, now."

The industry and the country needs regulation, not agitation.

Faithfully yours,

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL, M. C.

JOE CROSSON

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point, concerning the death of Wiley Post and Will Rogers, and more particularly concerning the air hero of Alaska, Joe Crosson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, shocked and stunned as we are at the untimely deaths of Wiley Post and Will Rogers, men not only famous for their many accomplishments but respected and admired from one end of the country to the other, and, indeed, over much of the civilized world, may I suggest that this is a fitting time to pay tribute to an airman not so famous, but one of outstanding accomplishments and one who in character and in flying skill is probably the equal of any on earth.

I refer to my dear friend Joe Crosson, who advised Post and Rogers not to make the trip to Barrow at this time of year on account of dangers involved, but, who, nevertheless, when he received news that his friends had met with disaster, unhesitatingly took to the air himself and flew north to Barrow in order to bring back the bodies of those who had so died. It was not an easy journey. While in midsummer the air trip to Barrow is comparatively safe owing to the continuous daylight above the Arctic Circle, with the shortening days and the increase in fog along the Arctic coast very considerable danger is involved in making such a journey at this time of the year.

And we know from the newspaper reports what a struggle Joe Crosson had, particularly on his way from Barrow to Fairbanks. In places half blinded by fog and with the hazard of the Endicott Range to cross, when snow is encountered in the passes at this season of the year, it was with a feeling of relief that many of us who understood the conditions learned that Crosson had arrived safely at Fairbanks with the dead bodies of his two friends.

The actions of Joe Crosson in this connection are not at all unique in his life. He is daring and yet careful, fearless and yet wise. He takes no risks carelessly or from foolhardiness. Like a good general he tries to map out everything in advance so that there will be a minimum of hazard and so that success will be certain. He has flown into practically every part of Alaska under all conditions, under all circumstances, in all kinds of weather, and indeed he has done much for the development of aviation in that vast region where there is no other adequate means of transportation. Never has Joe Crosson hesitated or refused to give aid or succor to those in need; never has he failed to answer a distress signal and bring a sick or injured person from the remote wilderness to a place where medical aid could be obtained. Of course, Joe is not alone in this. His acts are characteristic of the pilots of Alaska.

I am proud of them, and we all can be proud of them. But Joe is better known than any of the others. While he would not make the claim and while comparisons are always invidious, Joe Crosson has that indefinable something which sets him somewhat apart from and somewhat above the average man. You will remember that when Wiley Post flew around the world the second time he lost his course in Alaska and finally was obliged to land his ship at least 200 miles off the route at a settlement called "Flat." The field was small and rough and, while Post brought the Winnie Mae down safely so far as he was personally concerned, his landing gear was injured and his propeller was bent. It looked to him then as though the race were over although victory until that time had been almost in sight—he had come so far and had so little distance still to go. He was discouraged and tired and went to bed, and while he slept Joe Crosson and his companions, having learned of the crack-up, flew from Fairbanks with spare parts, including a spare propeller, so that Wiley Post, on awaking the next morning, found his ship fully repaired and ready to take to the air. Surely, I think, that under these circumstances and in view of the latest service so bravely and generously rendered by Joe Crosson, we ought to show him how much we appreciate what he has done and how sensible we are of his accomplishments which reflect credit on all men who fly, and indeed on all Americans.

I therefore suggest, Mr. Speaker, the award of the Distinguished Flying Cross to Joe Crosson. He has certainly earned it over and over again if the cross should go, as it does, to those who have distinguished themselves above and beyond ordinary duty. I can think of no man in the United States who deserves this distinction more richly; and while Joe has not been consulted about this and would be the last one to suggest it, I feel that it is my duty to bring the matter to the attention of those within whose discretion lies the making of such an award. In honoring Joe Crosson in this fashion we shall honor ourselves, and, of course, I am not insensible to the fact that such an award to Mr. Crosson will bring a little reflected glory upon the great Territory which I have the honor to represent in Congress and which Joe Crosson has served—many times at the risk of his life—so faithfully and well.

APPROPRIATE CELEBRATION OF FOUR HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE EXPEDITION OF HERNANDO DE SOTO

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House Joint Resolution 265, pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando de Soto, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. KELLER, Mr. SECREST, and Mr. TREADWAY.

HOW CAN OUR PEOPLE BENEFIT FROM ANY RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS WITH GERMANY

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a radio speech which I made on the 8th of August.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address which I delivered over the radio on August 8, 1935:

I desire to direct your attention to the important question of reciprocal trade agreements, but it is my purpose to limit my discussion this evening to certain factors which should be seriously considered in connection with the pending negotiations for one of these agreements between Germany and the United States.

After unanimous consent was given me recently to address the House of Representatives, I rose on the floor and voiced the indignation that many American citizens feel toward certain conditions now prevailing in Germany, and I also expressed the opinion that as a condition precedent to any such reciprocal-trade agreement the United States Government should first require the present German dictator to accept the principle of guaranty of human rights, religious freedom, and racial tolerance to the people of Germany and to American citizens living in Germany.

At the conclusion of my speech, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] secured the floor and proceeded to charge me with making "improper" remarks asserting that I had spoken without proper authority, and concluded with "Let us attend to our business."

As a Member of Congress, I spoke with the same full authority to say what I did on that occasion as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] claims for himself whenever he discusses public problems on the floor of the House. When did it become "improper" for a Member of Congress to discuss vital public affairs which concern the welfare of the American people? When did it become "improper" for a Member of Congress or an American citizen to criticize Government officials, either of this country when they commit errors, or of other countries when they seek to meddle with internal affairs in the United States in such a manner as to be detrimental to our citizens? I think you will later agree with me that I have complied with Mr. BLANTON'S demand, "Let us attend to our business."

I now state to you that any reciprocal-trade agreement between Germany and the United States is impossible, insofar as any benefits to the people of the United States are concerned, unless this Government is able to get from the present head of the German Government the guaranties suggested.

The fundamental laws of the United States assure to the people of this country human rights among which are religious freedom and tolerances as to racial ancestry. These rights apply alike without discriminations to Christians, Catholics, Jews, Mormons, Sun-Worshipers, Mohammedans, Atheists, or to adherents of other religions and creeds, as well as to peoples from countries of Europe, Asia, Africa, the islands of the sea, and the American continents.

Therefore, commercial or financial transactions carried on in the United States by the people or Government of Germany under the provisions of any reciprocal-trade agreement, if the benefits are in fact to be reciprocal, would of necessity involve business intercourse with American citizens of every religious faith and of every racial origin, and the element of "mutual benefits" could not enter into these transactions unless the German Government and the German people expressed, both in writing and by voice, respect for the religious and racial freedom in business transactions, without any intolerances toward the American citizens involved.

The necessity for requiring the present dictator of Germany to accept the principle of these required guaranties, is clearly shown by a review of the present conditions within Germany.

The present dictator of Germany and his primary subordinates have shown they have no conception of the value of the human rights, religious, and racial freedom which our American citizens call their inalienable rights. They have imposed upon the German people all manner of inhuman and brutal laws and committed barbarous acts against native-born people of Germany, although Hitler himself is not a native of Germany.

They have robbed native-born Germans of their rights, they have placed certain persons outside the class of German citizens, they have set up their own god and issued orders as to how this god may be worshiped, and have waged internal war upon all groups of German people who do not agree to worship their new god in the way Hitler demands, they are about to write into German laws the principle of anti-Semitism and are attacking the practice of the Catholic religion, and they are now disfranchising all German people who do not blindly adhere to the almost insane Nazi theories of government as advocated by their dictator, Adolph Hitler.

How Hitler runs Germany and her internal affairs is outside the primary concern of the United States and our people, but when their methods attack the business of this country and the welfare of American citizens in the United States, it becomes our business and the business of every Member of Congress, including the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in his official capacity as your Representative from the great State of Texas.

Information has been given through the public press that German officials have ordered out of Germany an official of the Catholic Church, who, though born in Germany, is now an American citizen, and who by his church has been assigned to duty in Germany. He must go to another alien country—Poland—and so here is the case of an American citizen discriminated against because of his religious work and duty in Germany.

Evidence is available to show that the agents of the Hitler government have attempted, and are continuing to attempt, to direct propaganda into the United States so as to affect the financial and business transactions of American citizens of German ancestry and to influence the concepts of Government in the United States among these German-American citizens of the United States. This criticism of activity certainly is "our business."

The recent investigation by the special committee of the House into Nazi propaganda activities clearly established the fact that Hitler and his agents have been sending into the United States the most vicious and revolting propaganda designed to array American against American, brother against brother, and to persistently arouse our citizens to accept Hitler's theory that "once a German, always a German", even though these United States citizens had taken a solemn oath of allegiance to this country. This activity should concern every Member of Congress, including the gentleman from Texas.

I understand about 700,000 American citizens and others have been duped into purchasing German securities under the persuasive methods used by the agents of the Hitler government, and that on these securities neither the principal nor the interest can be secured at this time. I do not know how much money is involved in these questionable transactions, but I venture to say that it will run into a great many millions of our dollars. It is common knowledge that American citizens and American banks with funds on deposit in Germany are prevented, under the Hitler regime, from removing their own money from Germany and that they can only use their own funds in Germany for German goods and German services. Such things are "our business", in that personal funds and affairs of American citizens are jeopardized in Germany.

Facts establish that the Government in Germany at the present time cannot be relied upon to voluntarily respect the rights of human beings in their exercise of inalienable rights of religious freedom and tolerance among the German people, and it is only reasonable to assume that these human rights of religious freedom and racial tolerances will not be voluntarily respected and granted by the Germans to American citizens in the United States unless our reciprocal-trade agreement contains definite requirements to guarantee these things.

These definite guaranties from the representatives of the German Government are essential to the proper protection of American citizens who may be affected by the operations under this proposed reciprocal-trade agreement. This is our business, and it is the business of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] just as it is the business of every other Member of Congress.

Information given us in the public press indicates that German internal affairs may have reached such a financial situation that a new trade agreement with the United States would be most desirable for German business in an effort to save that country from utter financial ruin in the near future.

Under all these circumstances, I am convinced that the Government of the United States has now a most unusual opportunity to take to itself the leadership of the world in the advancement of human rights as a result of the negotiations for this reciprocal-trade agreement. I am of the opinion, that because of the paramount mutual desire to secure reciprocal measures to increase international trade and business, presumably for the benefit of the people of both Germany and the United States, the question of human rights can be much advanced if our Secretary of State and his technical assistants definitely require as a basic condition of this agreement a guaranty that Adolph Hitler, on behalf of the German Government will recognize the principle of individual and religious and racial freedom of American citizens and other foreign nationals who may be in Germany for the transaction of business, trade, or study, or for travel and pleasure, and will accept the principle of nondiscrimination by officials and the Government of Germany of German-born people living in Germany regardless of religion and of racial ancestry. I hope the proper official of our Government will seize this wonderful opportunity to use our influence to thus improve international peace and good will and trade.

If you agree with the principle I have stated this evening and think these matters are the business of American citizens and their representatives in Congress, may I suggest that you write your Congressman, whether that be the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] or another Congressman, and by your letter urge him to lend his support to this effort to establish human rights, religious freedom, and racial tolerances as the primary conditional principles in the proposed agreement between this country and Germany.

In conclusion, may I ask you to write me and let me know just what you think about this suggestion. I will appreciate your letters whether they agree with my proposals or they disagree with me. I would like to learn from you whether these matters are considered as proper business of your representatives in Congress.

There was no objection.

The certificate herein prescribed shall be issued to the Corporation by the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of such national member bank, or by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in the case of such State member bank: Provided, That in the case of an insured bank which is admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System or an insured State bank which is converted into a national member bank, such certificate shall not be required, and the bank shall continue as an insured bank. The semiannual assessment for each insured bank shall be in the amount of the product of one-half the annual assessment rate multiplied by an assessment base which shall be the average for six months of the differences at the end of each calendar day between the total amount of liability of the bank for deposits (according to the definition of the term "deposit" in and pursuant to paragraph (12) of subsection (c) of this section, without any deduction for indebtedness of depositors) and the total of such uncollected items as are included in such deposits and credited subject to final payment: Provided, however, That the daily total of such uncollected items shall be determined according to regulations prescribed by the board of directors upon a consideration of the factors of general usage and ordinary time of availability, and for the purposes of such deduction no item shall be regarded as uncollected for longer periods than those prescribed by such regulations. Each insured bank shall, as a condition to the right to deduct any specific uncollected item in determining its assessment base, maintain such records as will readily permit verification of the correctness of the particular deduction claimed. The certified statements required to be filed with the Corporation under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection shall be in such form and set forth such supporting information as the board of directors shall prescribe. The assessment payments required from insured banks under paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection shall be made in such manner and at such time or times as the board of directors shall prescribe, provided the time or times so prescribed shall not be later than sixty days after filing the certified statement setting forth the amount of the assessment. In the event that a separate Fund For Mutuals is established as provided in subsection (1), the board of directors from time to time may fix a lower assessment rate operative for such period as the board may determine which shall be applicable to insured mutual savings banks only, and the remainder of this paragraph shall not be applicable to such banks.

"'(2) On or before the 15th day of July of each year, each insured bank shall file with the Corporation a certified statement under oath showing for the six months ending on the preceding June 30 the amount of the assessment base and the amount of the semiannual assessment due to the Corporation, determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection. Each insured bank shall pay to the Corporation the amount of the semiannual assessment it is required to certify. On or before the 15th day of January of each year after 1936 each insured bank shall file with the Corporation a similar certified statement for the six months ending on the preceding December 31 and shall pay to the Corporation the amount of the semiannual assessment it is required to certify.

"'(3) Each bank which becomes an insured bank according to the provisions of subsection (e) or (f) of this section shall, on or before the 15th day of November 1935, file with the Corporation a certified statement under oath showing the amount of the assessment due to the Corporation for the period ending December 31, 1935, which shall be an amount equal to the product of one-third the annual assessment rate multiplied by the assessment base determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, except that the assessment base shall be the average for the 31 days in the month of October 1935, and payment shall be made to the Corporation of the amount of the assessment so required to be certified. Each such bank shall, on or before the 15th day of January 1936, file with the Corporation a certified statement under oath showing the amount of the semiannual assessment due to the Corporation for the period ending June 30, 1936, which shall be an amount equal to the product of one-half the annual assessment rate multiplied by the assessment base determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, except that the assessment base shall be the average for the days of the months of October, November and December of 1935, and payment shall be made to the Corporation of the amount of the assessment so required to be certified.

"'(4) Each bank which becomes an insured bank after the effective date shall be relieved from complying with the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection until it has operated as an insured bank for a full semiannual period ending on June 30 or December 31 as the case may be. Each such bank, on or before the forty-fifth day after its first day of operation as an insured bank, shall file with the Corporation its first certified statement which shall be under oath and shall show the amount of the assessment base determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, except that the assessment base shall be the average for the first thirty-one calendar days it operates as an insured bank. Each such certified statement shall also show as the amount of the first assessment due to the Corporation the prorated portion (for the period between its first day of operation as an insured bank and the next succeeding last day of June or December, as the case may be) of an amount equal to the product of one-half the annual assessment rate multiplied by the base required to be set forth on its first certified statement. Each bank which becomes an insured bank after the effective date which has not operated as an insured bank for a full semiannual period ending on June 30 or December 31, as the case may be, shall, on or before the 15th day of the first month thereafter (except that banks becoming insured in June or December shall have thirty-one additional days) file with the Corporation its second certified statement under oath showing the amount of the assessment base and the amount of the semiannual assessment due to the Corporation. Such assessment base and amount shall be determined in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, except that if the bank became an insured bank in the month of December or June the assessment base shall be the average for the first thirty-one calendar days it operates as an insured bank, and except that if it became an insured bank in any other month than December or June the assessment base shall be the average for the days between its first day of operation as an insured bank and the next succeeding last day of June or December, as the case may be. Each bank required to file a certified statement under this paragraph shall pay to the Corporation the amount of the assessment the bank is required to certify.

"'(5) Each bank which shall be and continue without application or approval an insured bank in accordance with the provisions of subsection (e) or (f) of this section, shall, in lieu of all right to refund (except as authorized in paragraph (3) of subsection (1)), be credited with any balance to which such bank shall become entitled upon the termination of the said Temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund or the Fund for Mutuals. The credit shall be applied by the Corporation toward the payment of the assessment next becoming due from such bank and upon succeeding assessments until the credit is exhausted.

"'(6) Any insured bank which fails to file any certified statement required to be filed by it in connection with determining the amount of any assessment payable by the bank to the Corporation may be compelled to file such statement by mandatory injunction or other appropriate remedy in a suit brought for such purpose by the Corporation against the bank and any officer or officers thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district or territory in which such bank is located.

"'(7) The Corporation, in a suit brought at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be entitled to recover from any insured bank the amount of any unpaid assessment lawfully payable by such insured bank to the Corporation, whether or not such bank shall have filed any such certified statement and whether or not suit shall have been brought to compel the bank to file any such statement.

"'(8) Should any national member bank or any insured national nonmember bank fail to file any certified statement required to be filed by such bank under any provision of this subsection, or fail to pay any assessment required to be paid by such bank under any provision of this section, and should the bank not correct such failure within thirty days after written notice has been given by the Corporation to an officer of the bank, citing this paragraph, and stating that the bank has failed to file or pay as required by law, all the rights, privileges, and franchises of the bank granted to it under the National Bank Act or under the provisions of this Act, as amended, shall be thereby forfeited. Whether or not the penalty provided in this paragraph has been incurred shall be determined and adjudged in the manner provided in the sixth paragraph of section 2 of this Act, as amended. The remedies provided in this paragraph and in the two preceding paragraphs shall not be construed as limiting any other remedies against any insured bank, but shall be in addition thereto.

"'(9) Trust funds held by an insured bank in a fiduciary capacity whether held in its trust or deposited in any other department or in another bank shall be insured in an amount not to exceed $5,000 for each trust estate, and when deposited by the fiduciary bank in another insured bank such trust funds shall be similarly insured to the fiduciary bank according to the trust estates represented. Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, such insurance shall be separate from and additional to that covering other deposits of the owners of such trust funds or the beneficiaries of such trust estates: Provided, That where the fiduciary bank deposits any of such trust funds in other insured banks, the amount so held by other insured banks on deposit shall not for the purpose of any certified statement required under paragraph (2), (3), or (4) of this subsection be considered to be a deposit liability of the fiduciary bank, but shall be considered to be a deposit liability of the bank in which such funds are so deposited by such fiduciary bank. The board of directors shall have power by regulation to prescribe the manner of reporting and of depositing such trust funds.

"'(i) (1) Any insured bank (except a national member bank or State member bank) may, upon not less than ninety days' written notice to the Corporation, and to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if it owns or holds as pledgee any preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures of such bank, terminate its status as an insured bank. Whenever the board of directors shall find that an insured bank or its directors or trustees have continued unsafe or unsound practices in conducting the business of such bank, or have knowingly or negligently permitted any of its officers or agents to violate any provision of any law or regulation to which the insured bank is subject, the board of directors shall first give to the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of a national bank or a District bank, to the authority having supervision of the bank in the case of a State bank or to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in the case of a State member bank, a statement with respect to such practices or violations for the purpose of securing the correction thereof. Unless such correction shall be made within one hundred and twenty days or such shorter period of time as the Comptroller of the Currency, the State authority, or Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, as the case may be, shall require, the board of directors, if it shall determine to proceed further, shall give to the bank not less than thirty days' written notice of intention to terminate the status of the bank as an insured bank, and shall fix a time and place for a hearing before the board of directors or before a person designated by it to conduct such hearing, at which evidence may be produced, and upon such evidence the board of directors shall make written findings which shall be conclusive. Unless the bank shall appear at the hearing by a duly authorized representative, it shall be deemed to have consented to the termination of its status as an insured bank. If the board of directors shall find that any violation specified in such notice has been established, the board of directors may order that the insured status of the bank be terminated on a date subsequent to such finding and to the expiration of the time specified in such notice of intention. The Corporation may publish notice of such termination and the bank shall give notice of such termination to each of its depositors at his last address of record on the books of the bank, in such manner and at such time as the board of directors may find to be necessary and may order for the protection of depositors. After the termination of the insured status of any bank under the provisions of this paragraph, the insured deposits of each depositor in the bank on the date of such termination, less all subsequent withdrawals from any deposits of such depositor, shall continue for a period of two years to be insured, and the bank shall continue to pay to the Corporation assessments as in the case of an insured bank during such period. No additions to any such deposits and no new deposits in such bank made after the date of such termination shall be insured by the Corporation, and the bank shall not advertise or hold itself out as having insured deposits unless in the same connection it shall also state with equal prominence that such additions to deposits and new deposits made after such date are not so insured. Such bank shall, in all other respects, be subject to the duties and obligations of an insured bank for the period of two years from the date of such termination, and in the event that such bank shall be closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors within such period of two years, the Corporation shall have the same powers and rights with respect to such bank as in case of an insured bank.

"'(2) Whenever the insured status of a State member bank shall be terminated by action of the board of directors, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall terminate its membership in the Federal Reserve System in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of this Act, and whenever the insured status of a national member bank shall be so terminated the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint a receiver for the bank, which shall be the Corporation whenever the bank shall be unable to meet the demands of its depositors. Whenever a member bank shall cease to be a member of the Federal Reserve System, its status as an insured bank shall, without notice or other action by the board of directors, terminate on the date the bank shall cease to be a member of the Federal Reserve System, with like effect as if its insured status had been terminated on said date by the board of directors after proceedings under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"'(3) If any nonmember bank which becomes an insured bank under the provisions of paragraph (1) of subsection (f) of this section shall elect, within thirty days after the effective date, not to continue as an insured bank, and shall within such period give written notice to the Corporation of its election, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the board of directors, and to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if it owns or holds as pledgee any preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures of such bank, it shall cease to be an insured bank and cease to be subject to the provisions of this section and the rights of the bank (including its right to any refund) shall be as provided by law existing prior to the effective date. The board of directors shall cause notice of termination of insurance to be given to the depositors of such bank by publication or otherwise as the board of directors may determine, and the deposits in such bank shall continue to be insured for twenty days beyond such thirty day period.

"'(4) Whenever the liabilities of an insured bank for deposits shall have been assumed by another insured bank or banks, the insured status of the bank whose liabilities are so assumed shall terminate on the date of receipt by the Corporation of satisfactory evidence of such assumption with like effect as if its insured status had been terminated on said date by the board of directors after proceedings under paragraph (1) of this subsection: Provided, That if the bank whose liabilities are so assumed gives to its depositors notice of such assumption within thirty days after such assumption takes effect, by publication or by any reasonable means, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the board of directors, the insurance of its deposits shall terminate at the end of six months from the date such assumption takes effect, and such bank shall thereupon be relieved of all future obligations to the Corporation, including the obligation to pay future assessments.

"'(j) Upon the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, the Corporation shall become a body corporate and as such shall have power—

"'First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"'Second. To have succession until dissolved by an Act of Congress.

"'Third. To make contracts.

"'Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, State or Federal. All suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity to which the Corporation shall be a party shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States: Provided, That any such suit to which the Corporation is a party in its capacity as receiver of a State bank and which involves only the rights or obligations of depositors, creditors, stockholders and such State bank under State law shall not be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States. No attachment or execution shall be issued against the Corporation or its property before final judgment in any suit, action, or proceeding in any State, county, municipal, or United States court. The board of directors shall designate an agent upon whom service of process may be made in any State, Territory, or jurisdiction in which any insured bank is located.

"'Fifth. To appoint by its board of directors such officers and employees as are not otherwise provided for in this section, to define their duties, fix their compensation, require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers or employees. Nothing in this or any other Act shall be construed to prevent the appointment and compensation as an officer or employee of the Corporation of any officer or employee of the United States in any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department thereof.

"'Sixth. To prescribe by its board of directors, bylaws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed.

"'Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers or agents, all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this section and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted.

"'Eighth. To make examinations of and to require information and reports from banks, as provided in this section.

"'Ninth. To act as receiver.

"'Tenth. To prescribe by its board of directors such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"'(k) (1) The board of directors shall administer the affairs of the Corporation fairly and impartially and without discrimination. The board of directors of the Corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government. The Corporation with the consent of any Federal Reserve bank or of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, and facilities thereof in carrying out the provisions of this section.

"'(2) The board of directors shall appoint examiners who shall have power, on behalf of the Corporation, to examine any insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank), any State nonmember bank making application to become an insured bank, and any closed insured bank, whenever in the judgment of the board of directors an examination of the bank is necessary. Such examiners shall have like power to examine, with the written consent of the Comptroller of the Currency, any national bank or District bank, and, with the written consent of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, any State member bank. Each such examiner shall have power to make a thorough examination of all the affairs of the bank and in doing so he shall have power to administer oaths and to examine and take and preserve the testimony of any of the officers and agents thereof, and shall make a full and detailed report of the condition of the bank to the Corporation. The board of directors in like manner shall appoint claim agents who shall have power to investigate and examine all claims for insured deposits and transferred deposits. Each claim agent shall have power to administer oaths and to examine under oath and take and preserve the testimony of any persons relating to such claims. The provisions of sections 184 to 186 (both inclusive) of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 94 to 96) are hereby extended to examinations and investigations authorized by this paragraph.

"'(3) Each insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank) shall make to the Corporation reports of condition in such form and at such times as the board of directors may require. The board of directors may require such reports to be published in such manner, not inconsistent with any applicable law, as it may direct. Every such bank which fails to make or publish any such report within such time, not less than five days, as the board of directors may require, shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100 for each day of such failure recoverable by the Corporation for its use.

"'(4) The Corporation shall have access to reports of examinations made by, and reports of conditions made to, the Comptroller of the Currency or any Federal Reserve bank, may accept any report made by or to any commission, board, or authority having supervision of a State nonmember bank (except a District bank), and may furnish to the Comptroller of the Currency, to any Federal Reserve bank, and to any such commission, board, or authority, reports of examinations made on behalf of, and reports of condition made to, the Corporation.

"'(l) (1) The Temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund and the Fund For Mutuals heretofore created pursuant to the provisions of this section are hereby consolidated into a Permanent Insurance Fund for insuring deposits, and the assets therein shall be held by the Corporation for the uses and purposes of the Corporation: Provided, That the obligations to and rights of the Corporation, depositors, banks, and other persons arising out of any event or transaction prior to the effective date shall remain unimpaired. On and after the effective date, the Corporation shall insure the deposits of all insured banks as provided in this section: Provided, That the insurance shall apply only to deposits of insured banks which have been made available since March 10, 1933, for withdrawal in the usual course of the banking business: Provided further, That if any insured bank shall, without the consent of the Corporation, release or modify restrictions on or deferments of deposits which had not been made available for withdrawal in the usual course of the banking business on or before the effective date, such deposits shall not be insured. The maximum amount of the insured deposit of any depositor shall be $5,000. The Corporation, in the discretion of the board of directors, may open on its books solely for the benefit of mutual savings banks and depositors therein a separate Fund For Mutuals. If such Fund is opened, all assessments upon mutual savings banks shall be paid into such Fund and the Permanent Insurance Fund of the Corporation shall cease to be liable for insurance losses sustained in mutual savings banks: Provided, That the capital assets of the Corporation shall be so liable and all expenses of operation of the Corporation shall be allocated between such Funds on an equitable basis.

"'(2) For the purposes of this section, an insured bank shall be deemed to have been closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors in any case in which it has been closed for the purpose of liquidation without adequate provision being made for payment of its depositors.

"'(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever any insured national bank or insured District bank shall have been closed by action of its board of directors, or by the Comptroller of the Currency, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint the Corporation receiver for such closed bank, and no other person shall be appointed as receiver of such closed bank.

"'(4) It shall be the duty of the Corporation as such receiver to realize upon the assets of such closed bank, having due regard to the condition of credit in the locality; to enforce the individual liability of the stockholders and directors thereof; and to wind up the affairs of such closed bank in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the liquidation of closed national banks, except as herein otherwise provided. The Corporation shall retain for its own account such portion of the amounts realized from such liquidation as it shall be entitled to receive on account of its subrogation to the claims of depositors, and it shall pay to depositors and other creditors the net amounts available for distribution to them. With respect to any such closed bank, the Corporation as such receiver shall have all the rights, powers, and privileges now possessed by or hereafter granted by law to a receiver of an insolvent national bank.

"'(5) Whenever any insured State bank (except a District bank) shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the authority having supervision of such bank, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, the Corporation shall accept appointment as receiver thereof, if such appointment is tendered by the authority having supervision of such bank and is authorized or permitted by State law. With respect to any such insured State bank, the Corporation as such receivers shall possess all the rights, powers and privileges granted by State law to a receiver of a State bank.

"'(6) Whenever an insured bank shall have been closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, payment of the insured deposits in such bank shall be made by the Corporation as soon as possible, subject to the provisions of paragraph (7) of this subsection, either (A) by making available to each depositor a transferred deposit in a new bank in the same community or in another insured bank in an amount equal to the insured deposit of such depositor and subject to withdrawal on demand, or (B) in such other manner as the board of directors may prescribe: Provided, That the Corporation, in its discretion, may require proof of claims to be filed before paying the insured deposits, and that in any case where the Corporation is not satisfied as to the validity of a claim for an insured deposit, it may require the final determination of a court of competent jurisdiction before paying such claim.

"'(7) In the case of a closed national bank or District bank, the Corporation, upon the payment of any depositor as provided in paragraph (6) of this subsection, shall be subrogated to all rights of the depositor against the closed bank to the extent of such payment. In the case of any other closed insured bank, the Corporation shall not make any payment to any depositor until the right of the Corporation to be subrogated to the rights of such depositor on the same basis as provided in the case of a closed national bank under this section shall have been recognized either by express provision of State law, by allowance of claims by the authority having supervision of such bank, by assignment of claims by depositors, or by any other effective method. In the case of any closed insured bank, such subrogation shall include the right on the part of the Corporation to receive the same dividends from the proceeds of the assets of such closed bank and recoveries on account of stockholders' liability as would have been payable to the depositor on a claim for the insured deposit, but such depositor shall retain his claim for any uninsured portion of his deposit: Provided, That the rights of depositors and other creditors of any State bank shall be determined in accordance with the applicable provisions of State law.

"'(8) As soon as possible after the closing of an insured bank, the Corporation, if it finds that it is advisable and in the interest of the depositors of the closed bank or the public, shall organize a new national bank to assume the insured deposits of such closed bank and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions hereinafter provided for. The new bank shall have its place of business in the same community as the closed bank.

"'(9) The articles of association and the organization certificate of the new bank shall be executed by representatives designated by the Corporation. No capital stock need be paid in by the Corporation. The new bank shall not have a board of directors, but shall be managed by an executive officer appointed by the board of directors of the Corporation who shall be subject to its directions. In all other respects the new bank shall be organized in accordance with the then existing provisions of law relating to the organization of national banking associations. The new bank may, with the approval of the Corporation, accept new deposits which shall be subject to withdrawal on demand and which, except where the new bank is the only bank in the community, shall not exceed $5,000 from any depositor. The new bank, without application to or approval by the Corporation, shall be an insured bank and shall maintain on deposit with the Federal Reserve bank of its district reserves in the amount required by law for member banks, but it shall not be required to subscribe for stock of the Federal Reserve bank. Funds of the new bank shall be kept on hand in cash, invested in obligations of the United States, or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, or deposited with the Corporation, with a Federal Reserve bank, or, to the extent of the insurance coverage thereon, with an insured bank. The new bank, unless otherwise authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency, shall transact no business except that authorized by this section and as may be incidental to its organization. Notwithstanding any other provision of law the new bank, its franchise, property, and income shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

"'(10) Upon the organization of a new bank, the Corporation shall promptly make available to it an amount equal to the estimated insured deposits of such closed bank plus the estimated amount of the expenses of operating the new bank, and shall determine as soon as possible the amount due each depositor for his insured deposit in the closed bank, and the total expenses of operation of the new bank. Upon such determination, the amounts so estimated and made available shall be adjusted to conform to the amounts so determined. Earnings of the new bank shall be paid over or credited to the Corporation in such adjustment. If any new bank, during the period it continues its status as such, sustains any losses with respect to which it is not effectively protected except by reason of being an insured bank, the Corporation shall furnish to it additional funds in the amount of such losses. The new bank shall assume as transferred deposits the payment of the insured deposits of such closed bank to each of its depositors. Of the amounts so made available, the Corporation shall transfer to the new bank, in cash, such sums as may be necessary to enable it to meet its expenses of operation and immediate cash demands on such transferred deposits, and the remainder of such amounts shall be subject to withdrawal by the new bank on demand.

"'(11) Whenever in the judgment of the board of directors it is desirable to do so, the Corporation shall cause capital stock of the new bank to be offered for sale on such terms and conditions as the board of directors shall deem advisable in an amount sufficient, in the opinion of the board of directors, to make possible the conduct of the business of the new bank on a sound basis, but in no event less than required by section 5138 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 51), for the organization of a national bank in the place where such new bank is located. The stockholders of the closed insured bank shall be given the first opportunity to purchase any shares of common stock so offered. Upon proof that an adequate amount of capital stock in the new bank has been subscribed and paid for in cash, the Comptroller of the Currency shall require the articles of association and the organization certificate to be amended to conform to the requirements for the organization of a national bank, and thereafter, when the requirements of law with respect to the organization of a national bank have been complied with, he shall issue to the bank a certificate of authority to commence business, and thereupon the bank shall cease to have the status of a new bank, shall be managed by directors elected by its own shareholders and may exercise all the powers granted by law, and it shall be subject to all the provisions of law relating to national banks. Such bank shall thereafter be an insured national bank, without certification to or approval by the Corporation.

"'(12) If the capital stock of the new bank is not offered for sale, or if an adequate amount of capital for such new bank is not subscribed and paid for, the board of directors may offer to transfer its business to any insured bank in the same community which will take over its assets, assume its liabilities, and pay to the Corporation for such business such amount as the board of directors may deem adequate; or the board of directors in its discretion may change the location of the new bank to the office of the Corporation or to some other place or may at any time wind up its affairs as herein provided. Unless the capital stock of the new bank is sold or its assets are taken over and its liabilities are assumed by an insured bank as above provided within two years from the date of its organization, the Corporation shall wind up the affairs of such bank, after giving such notice, if any, as the Comptroller of the Currency may require, and shall certify to the Comptroller of the Currency the termination of the new bank. Thereafter the Corporation shall be liable for the obligations of such bank and shall be the owner of its assets. The provisions of sections 5220 and 5221 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 181, and 182) shall not apply to such new banks.

"'(m) (1) The Corporation as receiver of a closed national bank or District bank shall not be required to furnish bond and shall have the right to appoint an agent or agents to assist it in its duties as such receiver, and all fees, compensation, and expenses of liquidation and administration thereof shall be fixed by the Corporation, subject to the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, and may be paid by it out of funds coming into its possession as such receiver. The Comptroller of the Currency is authorized and empowered to waive and relieve the Corporation from complying with any regulations of the Comptroller of the Currency with respect to receiverships where in his discretion such action is deemed advisable to simplify administration.

"'(2) Payment of an insured deposit to any person by the Corporation shall discharge the Corporation, and payment of a transferred deposit to any person by the new bank or by an insured bank in which a transferred deposit has been made available shall discharge the Corporation and such new bank or other insured bank, to the same extent that payment to such person by the closed bank would have discharged it from liability for the insured deposit.

"'(3) Except as otherwise prescribed by the board of directors, neither the Corporation nor such new bank or other insured bank shall be required to recognize as the owner of any portion of a deposit appearing on the records of the closed bank under a name other than that of the claimant, any person whose name or interest as such owner is not disclosed on the records of such closed bank as part owner of said deposit, if such recognition would increase the aggregate amount of the insured deposits in such closed bank.

"'(4) The Corporation may withhold payment of such portion of the insured deposit of any depositor in a closed bank as may be required to provide for the payment of any liability of such depositor as a stockholder of the closed bank, or of any liability of such depositor to the closed bank or its receiver, which is not offset against a claim due from such bank, pending the determination and payment of such liability by such depositor or any other person liable therefor.

"'(5) If, after the Corporation shall have given at least three months' notice to the depositor by mailing a copy thereof to his last known address appearing on the records of the closed bank, any depositor in the closed bank shall fail to claim his insured deposit from the Corporation within eighteen months after the appointment of the receiver for the closed bank, or shall fail within such period to claim or arrange to continue the transferred deposit with the new bank or with the other insured bank which assumes liability therefor, all rights of the depositor against the Corporation with respect to the insured deposit, and against the new bank and such other insured bank with respect to the transferred deposit, shall be barred, and all rights of the depositor against the closed bank and its shareholders, or the receivership estate to which the Corporation may have become subrogated, shall thereupon revert to the depositor. The amount of any transferred deposits not claimed within such eighteen months' period, shall be refunded to the Corporation.

"'(n) (1) Money of the Corporation not otherwise employed shall be invested in obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, except that for temporary periods, in the discretion of the board of directors, funds of the Corporation may be deposited in any Federal Reserve bank or with the Treasurer of the United States. When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall be a depositary of public moneys, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the said Secretary, and may also be employed as a financial agent of the Government. It shall perform all such reasonable duties as depositary of public moneys and financial agent of the Government as may be required of it.

"'(2) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from making loans to national banks closed by action of the Comptroller of the Currency, or by vote of their directors, or to State member banks closed by action of the appropriate State authorities, or by vote of their directors, or from entering into negotiations to secure the reopening of such banks.

"'(3) Receivers or liquidators of insured banks closed on account of inability to meet the demands of their depositors shall be entitled to offer the assets of such banks for sale to the Corporation or as security for loans from the Corporation, upon receiving permission from the appropriate State authority in accordance with express provisions of State law in the case of insured State banks, or from the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of national banks or District banks. The proceeds of every such sale or loan shall be utilized for the same purposes and in the same manner as other funds realized from the liquidation of the assets of such banks. The Comptroller of the Currency may, in his discretion, pay dividends on proved claims at any time after the expiration of the period of advertisement made pursuant to section 5235 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 193), and no liability shall attach to the Comptroller of the Currency or to the receiver of any national bank by reason of any such payment for failure to pay dividends to a claimant whose claim is not proved at the time of any such payment. The Corporation, in its discretion, may make loans on the security of or may purchase and liquidate or sell any part of the assets of an insured bank which is now or may hereafter be closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, but in any case in which the Corporation is acting as receiver of a closed insured bank, no such loan or purchase shall be made without the approval of a court of competent jurisdiction.

"'(4) Until July 1, 1936, whenever in the judgment of the board of directors such action will reduce the risk or avert a threatened loss to the Corporation and will facilitate a merger or consolidation of an insured bank with another insured bank, or will facilitate the sale of the assets of an open or closed insured bank to and assumption of its liabilities by another insured bank, the Corporation may, upon such terms and conditions as it may determine, make loans secured in whole or in part by assets of an open or closed insured bank, which loans may be in subordination to the rights of depositors and other creditors, or the Corporation may purchase any such assets or may guarantee any other insured bank against loss by reason of its assuming the liabilities and purchasing the assets of an open or closed insured bank. Any insured national bank or District bank, or, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, any receiver thereof, is authorized to contract for such sales or loans and to pledge any assets of the bank to secure such loans.

"'(o) (1) The Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding its notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations, in a par amount aggregating not more than three times the amount received by the Corporation in payment of its capital stock and in payment of the assessments upon insured banks for the year 1936. The notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations issued under this subsection shall be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations, and shall bear such rate or rates of interest, and shall mature at such time or times, as may be determined by the Corporation: Provided, That the Corporation may sell on a discount basis short-term obligations payable at maturity without interest. The notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations of the Corporation may be secured by assets of the Corporation in such manner as shall be prescribed by its board of directors. Such obligations may be offered for sale at such price or prices as the Corporation may determine.

"'(2) The Secretary of the Treasury, in its discretion, is authorized to purchase any obligations of the Corporation to be issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds of the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include such purchases: Provided, That if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation fails for any reason to purchase any of the obligations of the Corporation as provided in subsection (b) of section 5e of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase such obligations in an amount equal to the amount of such obligations the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so fails to purchase: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, whenever in the judgment of the board of directors of the Corporation additional funds are required for insurance purposes, to purchase obligations of the Corporation in an additional amount of not to exceed $250,000,000 par value: Provided further, That the proceeds derived from the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury of any such obligations shall be used by the Corporation solely in carrying out its functions with respect to such insurance. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the obligations of the Corporation acquired by him under this subsection. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the obligations of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States.

"'(p) All notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by the Corporation shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

"'(q) In order that the Corporation may be supplied with such forms of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations as it may need for issuance under this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prepare such forms as shall be suitable and approved by the Corporation, to be held in the Treasury subject to delivery, upon order of the Corporation. The engraved plates, dies, bed pieces, and other material executed in connection therewith shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Corporation shall reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury for any expenses incurred in the preparation, custody, and delivery of such notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations.

"'(r) The Corporation shall annually make a report of its operations to the Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of January in each year.

"'(s) Whoever, for the purpose of obtaining any loan from the Corporation, or any extension or renewal thereof, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, or for the purpose of inducing the Corporation to purchase any assets, or for the purpose of obtaining the payment of any insured deposit or transferred deposit or the allowance, approval, or payment of any claim, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Corporation under this section, makes any statement, knowing it to be false, or willfully overvalues any security, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both.

"'(t) Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any obligation or coupon, in imitation of or purporting to be an obligation or coupon issued by the Corporation, or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited obligation or coupon purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, or (3) falsely alters any obligation or coupon issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, or (4) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any falsely altered or spurious obligation or coupon, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"'(u) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to it or pledged, or otherwise entrusted to it, or (2) with intent to defraud the Corporation or any other body, politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiner of the Corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the Corporation, or without being duly authorized draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other such obligation, or draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

"'(v) (1) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words "Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation", or a combination of any three of these four words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do business. No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall advertise or otherwise represent falsely by any device whatsoever that his or its deposit liabilities are insured or in any wise guaranteed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation or by the United States or any instrumentality thereof; and no insured bank shall advertise or otherwise represent falsely by any device whatsoever the extent to which or the manner in which its deposit liabilities are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this subsection shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

"'(2) Every insured bank shall display at each place of business maintained by it a sign or signs, and shall include in advertisements relating to deposits a statement to the effect that its deposits are insured by the Corporation. The board of directors shall prescribe by regulation the forms of such signs and the manner of display and the substance of such statements and the manner of use. For each day an insured bank continues to violate any provision of this paragraph or any lawful provision of said regulations, it shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100, recoverable by the Corporation for its use.

"'(3) No insured bank shall pay any dividends on its capital stock or interest on its capital notes or debentures (if such interest is required to be paid only out of net profits) while it remains in default in the payment of any assessment due to the Corporation; and any director or officer of any insured bank who participates in the declaration or payment of any such dividend shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both: Provided, That if such default is due to a dispute between the insured bank and the Corporation over the amount of such assessment, this paragraph shall not apply, if such bank shall deposit security satisfactory to the Corporation for payment upon final determination of the issue.

"'(4) Unless, in addition to compliance with other provisions of law, it shall have the prior written consent of the Corporation, no insured bank shall enter into any consolidation or merger with any noninsured bank, or assume liability to pay any deposits made in any noninsured bank, or transfer assets to any noninsured bank in consideration of the assumption of liability for any portion of the deposits made in such insured bank, and no insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank) without such consent shall reduce the amount or retire any part of its common or preferred capital stock, or retire any part of its capital notes or debentures.

"'(5) No State nonmember insured bank (except a District bank) shall establish and operate any new branch after thirty days after the effective date unless it shall have the prior written consent of the Corporation, and no branch of any State nonmember insured bank shall be moved from one location to another after thirty days after the effective date without such consent. The factors to be considered in granting or withholding the consent of the Corporation under this paragraph shall be those enumerated in subsection (g) of this section.

"'(6) the Corporation may require any insured bank to provide protection and indemnity against burglarly, defalcation, and other similar insurable losses. Whenever any insured bank refuses to comply with any such requirement the Corporation may contract for such protection and indemnity and add the cost thereof to the assessment otherwise payable by such bank.

"'(7) Whenever any insured bank (except a national bank or a District bank), after written notice of the recommendations of the Corporation based on a report of examination of such bank by an examiner of the Corporation, shall fail to comply with such recommendations within one hundred and twenty days after such notice, the Corporation shall have the power, and is hereby authorized, to publish only such part of such report of examination as relates to any recommendation not complied with: Provided, That notice of intention to make such publication shall be given to the bank at least ninety days before such publication is made.

"'(8) The board of directors shall by regulation prohibit the payment of interest on demand deposits in insured nonmember banks and for such purpose it may define the term "demand deposits"; but such exceptions from this prohibition shall be made as are now or may hereafter be prescribed with respect to deposits payable on demand in member banks by section 19 of this Act, as amended, or by regulation of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. The board of directors shall from time to time limit by regulation the rates of interest or dividends which may be paid by insured nonmember banks on time and savings deposits, but such regulations shall be consistent with the contractual obligations of such banks to their depositors. For the purpose of fixing such rates of interest or dividends, the board of directors shall by regulation prescribe different rates for such payment on time and savings deposits having different maturities, or subject to different conditions respecting withdrawal or repayment, or subject to different conditions by reason of different locations, or according to the varying discount rates of member banks in the several Federal Reserve districts. The board of directors shall by regulation define what constitutes time and savings deposits in an insured nonmember bank. Such regulations shall prohibit any insured nonmember bank from paying any time deposit before its maturity except upon such conditions and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the board of directors, and from waiving any requirement of notice before payment of any savings deposit except as to all savings deposits having the same requirement. For each violation of any provision of this paragraph or any lawful provision of such regulations relating to the payment of interest or dividends on deposits or to withdrawal of deposits, the offending bank shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100, recoverable by the Corporation for its use.

"'(w) The provisions of sections 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U. S. C., title 18, ch. 5, secs. 202 to 207, inclusive), insofar as applicable, are extended to apply to contracts or agreements with the Corporation under this section, which for the purposes hereof shall be held to include loans, advances, extensions, and renewals thereof, and acceptances, releases, and substitutions of security therefor, purchases or sales of assets, and all contracts and agreements pertaining to the same.

"'(x) The Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department is authorized to detect, arrest, and deliver into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction any person committing any of the offenses punishable under this section.

"'(y) (1) No State bank which during the calendar year 1941 or any succeeding calendar year shall have average deposits of $1,000,000 or more shall be an insured bank or continue to have any part of its deposits insured after July 1 of the year following any such calendar year during which it shall have had such amount of average deposits, unless such bank shall be a member of the Federal Reserve System: Provided, That for the purposes of this paragraph the term "State bank" shall not include a savings bank, a mutual savings bank, a Morris Plan bank or other incorporated banking institution engaged only in a business similar to that transacted by Morris Plan banks, a State trust company doing no commercial banking business, or a bank located in Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands.

"'(2) It is not the purpose of this section to discriminate, in any manner, against State nonmember, and in favor of, national or member banks; but the purpose is to provide all banks with the same opportunity to obtain and enjoy the benefits of this section. No bank shall be discriminated against because its capital stock is less than the amount required for eligibility for admission into the Federal Reserve System.

"'(z) The provisions of this section limiting the insurance of the deposits of any depositor to a maximum less than the full amount shall be independent and separable from each and all of the provisions of this section.'

"TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

"SECTION 201. Paragraph 'Fifth' of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended, effective March 1, 1936, to read as follows:

"'Fifth. To appoint by its board of directors a president, vice presidents, and such officers and employees as are not otherwise provided for in this Act, to define their duties, require bonds for them and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers or employees. The president shall be the chief executive officer of the bank and shall be appointed by the board of directors, with the approval of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, for a term of five years; and all other executive officers and all employees of the bank shall be directly responsible to him. The first vice president of the bank shall be appointed in the same manner and for the same term as the president, and shall, in the absence or disability of the president or during a vacancy in the office of president, serve as chief executive officer of the bank. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the president or the first vice president, it shall be filled in the manner provided for original appointments; and the person so appointed shall hold office until the expiration of the term of his predecessor.'

"SEC. 202. Section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the tenth paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

"'In order to facilitate the admission to membership in the Federal Reserve System of any State bank which is required under subsection (y) of section 12B of this Act to become a member of the Federal Reserve System in order to be an insured bank or continue to have any part of its deposits insured under such section 12B, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may waive in whole or in part the requirements of this section relating to the admission of such bank to membership: Provided, That, if such bank is admitted with a capital less than that required for the organization of a national bank in the same place and its capital and surplus are not, in the judgment of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, adequate in relation to its liabilities to depositors and other creditors, the said Board may, in its discretion, require such bank to increase its capital and surplus to such amount as the Board may deem necessary within such period prescribed by the Board as in its judgment shall be reasonable in view of all the circumstances: Provided, however, That no such bank shall be required to increase its capital to an amount in excess of that required for the organization of a national bank in the same place.'

"SEC. 203. (a) Hereafter the Federal Reserve Board shall be known as the 'Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System', and the governor and the vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board shall be known as the 'chairman' and the 'vice chairman', respectively, of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

In selecting the members of the Board, not more than one of whom shall be selected from any one Federal Reserve district, the President shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests, and geographical divisions of the country. The members of the Board shall devote their entire time to the business of the Board and shall each receive an annual salary of $15,000, payable monthly, together with actual necessary traveling expenses.

"'The members of the Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed. Upon the expiration of the term of any appointive member of the Federal Reserve Board in office on the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1935, the President shall fix the term of the successor to such member at not to exceed fourteen years, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, but in such manner as to provide for the expiration of the term of not more than one member in any two-year period, and thereafter each member shall hold office for a term of fourteen years from the expiration of the term of his predecessor, unless sooner removed for cause by the President. Of the persons thus appointed, one shall be designated by the President as chairman and one as vice chairman of the Board, to serve as such for a term of four years. The chairman of the Board, subject to its supervision, shall be its active executive officer. Each member of the Board shall within fifteen days after notice of appointment make and subscribe to the oath of office. Upon the expiration of their terms of office, members of the Board shall continue to serve until their successors are appointed and have qualified. Any person appointed as a member of the Board after the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1935 shall not be eligible for reappointment as such member after he shall have served a full term of fourteen years.'

"(c) The fourth paragraph of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the second, third, and fourth sentences thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'At meetings of the Board the chairman shall preside, and, in his absence, the vice chairman shall preside. In the absence of the chairman and the vice chairman, the Board shall elect a member to act as chairman pro tempore.'

"(d) Section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

The Board shall keep a similar record with respect to all questions of policy determined by the Board, and shall include in its annual report to the Congress a full account of the action so taken during the preceding year with respect to open-market policies and operations and with respect to the policies determined by it and shall include in such report a copy of the records required to be kept under the provisions of this paragraph.'

An alternate to serve in the absence of each such representative shall be elected annually in the same manner. The meetings of said Committee shall be held at Washington, District of Columbia, at least four times each year upon the call of the chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System or at the request of any three members of the Committee.

"'(b) No Federal Reserve bank shall engage or decline to engage in open-market operations under section 14 of this Act except in accordance with the direction of and regulations adopted by the Committee. Shareholders may vote by proxies duly authorized in writing; but no officer, clerk, teller, or bookkeeper of such bank shall act as proxy; and no shareholder whose liability is

Section 8 of the Act entitled 'An Act to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes', approved June 25, 1910, as amended (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 758; Supp. VII, title 39, sec. 758), is amended by striking out the first sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'Notwithstanding any other provision of law, (1) each deposit in a postal savings depository office shall be a savings deposit, and interest thereon shall be allowed and entered to the credit of the depositor once for each quarter beginning with the first day of the month following the date of such deposit, but no interest shall be allowed to any such depositor with respect to the whole or any part of the funds to his or her credit for any period of less than three months; (2) no interest shall be paid on any such deposit at a rate in excess of that which may lawfully be paid on savings deposits under regulations prescribed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System pursuant to the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, for member banks of the Federal Reserve System located in or nearest to the place where such depository office is situated; and (3) postal savings depositories may deposit funds on time in member banks of the Federal Reserve System subject to the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, and the regulations of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, with respect to the payment of time deposits and interest thereon.'

"SEC. 342. The last sentence of the third paragraph of subsection (k) of section 11 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 248 (k)), is amended to read as follows: 'The State banking authorities may have access to reports of examination made by the Comptroller of the Currency insofar as such reports relate to the trust department of such bank, but nothing in this Act shall be construed as authorizing the State banking authorities to examine the books, records, and assets of such bank.'

"SEC. 343. The first sentence after the third proviso of section 5240 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, secs. 481 and 482) is amended by striking out the word 'is' after the words 'whose compensation' and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: 'including retirement annuities to be fixed by the Comptroller of the Currency, is and shall be'; and such section 5240 is further amended by striking out 'The Federal Reserve Board, upon the recommendation of the Comptroller of the Currency,' and inserting in lieu thereof 'The Comptroller of the Currency'.

"SEC. 344. (a) Section 1 of the National Housing Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'The Administrator shall, in carrying out the provisions of this title and titles II and III, be authorized, in his official capacity, to sue and be sued in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal.'

"(b) The first sentence of section 2 of the National Housing Act, as amended, is further amended by striking out the words 'including the installation of equipment and machinery' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'and the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery on real property'.

"(c) Subsection (a) of section 203 of the National Housing Act is amended by inserting the words 'property and' before the word 'projects' in clause (1) of such subsection.

"(d) The last sentence of section 207 of the National Housing Act is amended by inserting the words 'property or' before the word 'project'.

"SEC. 345. If any part of the capital of a national bank, State member bank, or bank applying for membership in the Federal Reserve System consists of preferred stock, the determination of whether or not the capital of such bank is impaired and the amount of such impairment shall be based upon the par value of its stock even though the amount which the holders of such preferred stock shall be entitled to receive in the event of retirement or liquidation shall be in excess of the par value of such preferred stock. If any such bank or trust company shall have outstanding any capital notes or debentures of the type which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized to purchase pursuant to the provisions of section 304 of the Emergency Banking and Bank Conservation Act, approved March 9, 1933, as amended, the capital of such bank may be deemed to be unimpaired if the sound value of its assets is not less than its total liabilities, including capital stock, but excluding such capital notes or debentures and any obligations of the bank expressly subordinated thereto. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the holders of preferred stock issued by a national banking association pursuant to the provisions of the Emergency Banking and Bank Conservation Act, approved March 9, 1933, as amended, shall be entitled to receive such cumulative dividends at a rate not exceeding six per centum per annum on the purchase price received by the association for such stock and, in the event of the retirement of such stock, to receive such retirement price, not in excess of such purchase price plus all accumulated dividends, as may be provided in the articles of association with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency. If the association is placed in voluntary liquidation, or if a conservator or a receiver is appointed therefor, no payment shall be made to the holders of common stock until the holders of preferred stock shall have been paid in full such amount as may be provided in the articles of association with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, not in excess of such purchase price of such preferred stock plus all accumulated dividends.

"SEC. 346. If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide for the sound, effective, and uninterrupted operation of the banking system, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Title I—Federal deposit insurance

The provisions of title I of the House bill, which amended various subsections of section 12 (B) of the Federal Reserve Act (relating to the subject of Federal deposit insurance), did not differ in many respects from those contained in title I of the Senate amendment. However, the Senate amendment rewrote such section 12 (B) so as to include the provisions of existing law which were not affected by the specific amendments made by title I of the House bill in order that all the provisions of the amended section might be found in one place when the amended section takes effect. The conference agreement retains the form of the Senate amendment, and the material differences in substance between its provisions and those of the House bill, and the conference action with respect thereto, are indicated below. Certain formal and clarifying amendments of a minor nature have also been made in other parts of title I which are not specifically mentioned.

The House bill contained a provision which was omitted in the Senate amendment authorizing a Deputy Comptroller of the Currency to serve as a member of the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in the absence of the Comptroller. The conference agreement provides that the Acting Comptroller of the Currency may serve as a member of the board of directors of the Corporation during the absence of the Comptroller from Washington as well as in the case of a vacancy in the office of the Comptroller as was provided for by both the House bill and the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment extended the benefits of deposit insurance to banks in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

The House bill prohibited insured savings banks from withdrawing deposits by checking except from specific accounts totaling not more than 15 percent of the bank's total deposits. The Senate amendment limited this exception to cases where such withdrawal is permitted by law on the date of enactment of the act. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment permitted any insured bank with a branch in Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, or the Virgin Islands to exclude from insurance deposits payable only at such branch. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

The House bill permitted the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to further define terms used in connection with the definition of the word "deposit." The Senate amendment omitted this provision, and the conference agreement also omits it.

The House bill permitted nonmember banks to terminate their insured status on June 30, 1935, but this was extended to August 31, 1935, by the Senate amendment since the Temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund was extended to that date by S. J. Res. No. 152, approved June 28, 1935. The conference agreement permits such banks to terminate their insured status within 30 days after the effective date by giving written notice to the Corporation. In such event, the directors of the Corporation are required to give notice to the depositors, and the insurance of the deposits continues for 20 days beyond such 30-day period.

The House bill provided that the factors to be considered by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in connection with the admission of banks to the benefits of deposit insurance should be their financial condition and adequacy of capital structure. The Senate amendment added to these factors, the financial history of the banks, their future earning prospects, the general character of their management, the convenience and needs of the community, and whether or not their corporate powers were consistent with the act. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

The House bill provided for assessments upon insured banks at the rate of one-eighth of 1 percent upon their average deposit liability as determined on 1 day of each of 3 or more months preceding July and January of each year. Payments were required to be made semiannually. The Senate amendment provided for assessments at the rate of one-twelfth of 1 percent on the average deposit liability of insured banks over a 6 months' period and payments were also to be made semiannually. The Senate amendment added a provision under which assessments would be terminated when the assets of the Corporation exceeded $500,000,000, with an automatic restoration of assessments when the excess was reduced to $425,000,000. The conference agreement retains the assessment rate and base provided for in the Senate amendment, eliminates the provision relating to the termination of assessments, and provides for adjusting the first assessment according to the period remaining between the effective date of the act and the first of next year.

The Senate amendment provided for the termination of the insured status of member banks when their membership in the Federal Reserve System was terminated. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the Senate amendment.

The House bill provided that insured banks "may" be subject to a penalty of $100 for each day they fail to make or publish reports or to display signs indicating that their deposits are insured. The Senate amendment provided that in such cases a penalty "shall" be imposed but the amount was fixed at "not more than $100." The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment provided for limiting the insurance coverage to deposits which have been made available since March 10, 1933, for withdrawal in the usual course of the banking business, and prohibited insurance of deposits which had not been so made available for withdrawal by the date of enactment of the act and with respect to which the insured bank had released or modified restrictions or deferments without the consent of the Corporation. There was no similar provision in the House bill, but the temporary insurance was so limited under the existing law. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

The House bill provided for the guaranty by the United States of obligations issued by the Corporation. This provision was omitted in the Senate amendment, and the conference agreement also omits it.

The House bill authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase the guaranteed obligations of the Corporation. The Senate amendment authorized the Secretary to purchase any of the obligations of the Corporation and provided that if the Reconstruction Finance Corporation failed for any reason to purchase such obligations as required by section 5e of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Secretary should purchase such obligations in an amount equal to the amount the Reconstruction Finance Corporation so failed to purchase. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment and adds a provision requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase an additional $250,000,000 of the obligations of the Corporation.

The House bill also authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to market the guaranteed obligations of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. This provision was omitted in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement also omits it.

The Senate amendment restored the penalty of existing law applicable to directors of insured banks who participated in the declaration of dividends while their banks were in default in the payment of assessments to the Corporation. This provision was not included in the House bill. The conference agreement retains this provision.

The Senate amendment prohibited State nonmember insured banks from establishing and operating new branches, and from moving branches from one location to another, after 30 days after the date of enactment of the act, without the consent of the Corporation. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

The House bill authorized the board of directors of the Corporation to limit by regulation the rates of interest or dividends payable by insured nonmember banks on deposits other than demand deposits, and directed the board to prohibit the payment of interest on demand deposits except to the extent that exceptions are prescribed under section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, or by regulation of the Federal Reserve Board, in the case of demand deposits in member banks. The board of directors was authorized to define demand and savings deposits and in fixing rates it was empowered but not directed to classify deposits according to maturities, conditions respecting receipt, withdrawal, or repayment, and to classify banks according to locations or kinds of banking business chiefly done as the board might deem necessary in the public interest. The board was also authorized to prescribe different rates for different classes of deposits or different classes of banks, provided the different rates were reasonable when the bases for the classifications were considered. Payment of deposits prior to maturity was to be prohibited by regulations of the board of directors, as well as the waiving of any notice requirement with respect to withdrawal of deposits, but the prohibitions with respect to such withdrawals were not to apply to savings banks and exceptions might be made when by reason of special circumstances such prohibitions would cause unnecessary hardship to depositors. For each violation of any of these provisions or of the Corporation's regulations the offending bank was subject to a penalty of $100. The Senate amendment subjected insured State nonmember banks (other than savings banks, mutual savings banks, and Morris Plan banks) to the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act and regulations thereunder relating to the withdrawal and payment of deposits, and the payment of interest thereon, which are applicable to insured member banks. For each violation the offending bank was to be subject to a penalty of "not more than" $100. The conference agreement provides that the regulation of these matters in the case of insured State nonmember banks is to be left to the board of directors of the Corporation, as in the House bill, rather than to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, as would have been the case under the Senate amendment. The board is directed to consider the same factors in fixing rates as are applicable when the Board of Governors acts under section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act with respect to member banks, and the board is authorized to define what constitutes demand, time, and savings deposits in insured nonmember banks. The provisions with respect to the payment of deposits before maturity and the waiving of notice requirements before payment of savings deposits are also made to correspond to the provisions of such section 19. The penalty provision corresponds to that in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment included a provision not contained in the House bill which required every State bank organized after the date of enactment of the act, and every State bank which has average deposits of $1,000,000 or more during 1936 or any subsequent calendar year, to become a member of the Federal Reserve System in order to get the benefit of insurance after July 1, 1937. Exceptions were made, however, in the case of savings banks, mutual savings banks, Morris Plan banks, State trust companies doing no commercial business, and banks in Hawaii, Alaska, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. The conference agreement limits the requirement of the Senate amendment to State nonmember banks having average deposits of $1,000,000 or more and extends to July 1, 1942, the date upon which such banks are required to become members of the Federal Reserve System. The effect of the provision agreed to is to liberalize the provisions of existing law so that more than 6,500 State nonmember banks having average deposits of less than $1,000,000 will not be required to join the Federal Reserve System in order to continue their insured status.

The Senate amendment included a separability provision especially applicable to the provisions relating to the maximum limitation upon the amount of insurance payable to each depositor.

There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains this provision.

Title II—Amendments to the Federal Reserve Act

Section 201 of the House bill amended section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act so as to combine the offices of chairman of the board of directors and Governor of the Federal Reserve banks and to provide for the appointment of the Governor to be made annually by the directors of each bank subject to approval every 3 years by the Federal Reserve Board. The Governor would be the chief executive officer of the bank, chairman of its board of directors, and a class C director. The Vice Governor would be Governor in his absence. It was also provided that the offices of Federal Reserve agent and assistant Federal Reserve agent would be abolished and that all duties prescribed by law for the Federal Reserve agent would be performed by the Governor of the bank or such person as he might designate. This section of the bill was not included in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement omits this section.

Section 201 of the Senate amendment amended the provisions of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act relating to appointment of officers and employees of the Federal Reserve banks so as to provide for the appointment of a president and vice president for each such bank. It was provided that the president shall be the chief executive officer of the bank and shall be appointed by the board of directors with the approval of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (which, under section 202 of the Senate amendment, is the new name for the Federal Reserve Board) for a term of 5 years, and all other executive officers and all employees of the bank are to be directly responsible to him. The vice president of the bank is to be appointed in the same manner and for the same term as the president and is to serve as chief executive officer of the bank in the absence or disability of the president or during a vacancy in the office of president. Whenever a vacancy occurs in either office it is to be filled in the same manner as provided for in the case of original appointments and the person so appointed is to hold office until the expiration of the term of his predecessor. This provision was not included in the House bill. The conference agreement allows for the appointment of more than one vice president for each bank and provides that the first vice president shall be appointed in the same manner as the president. It is also provided that the section shall take effect March 1, 1936.

Section 202 of the House bill contained a provision authorizing the Federal Reserve Board to waive in whole or in part the requirements of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act relating to admission to membership of any nonmember bank which at the time of its application for membership is insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act. The conference agreement restores the provision of section 202 of the House bill but limits its application to State banks which are required under subsection (y) of section 12B to become members of the Federal Reserve System in order to have their deposits insured after July 1, 1942.

Section 203 of the House bill changed the qualifications of members of the Federal Reserve Board by striking out the requirement of existing law that in selecting such members the President shall have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests and geographical divisions of the country, and substituting a requirement that they should be well qualified by education or experience, or both, to participate in the formulation of national economic and monetary policies. The requirement of existing law that not more than one member of the Board should be selected from any one Federal Reserve district was preserved for all appointive members of the Board except the governor. It was also provided that the governor and vice governor of the Board should serve as such until the further order of the President, and that if the governor's designation as such be terminated he might continue to serve as a member of the Board for the remainder of his term. This section of the bill was eliminated from the Senate amendment in view of the changes in the organization and membership of the Board provided for in section 202. The conference agreement also eliminates this section.

Section 202 of the Senate amendment provided for changing the name of the Federal Reserve Board to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and for changing the name of the Governor and Vice Governor of the Federal Reserve Board to chairman and vice chairman, respectively. It was provided that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall be composed of seven members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, after the date of enactment of the act, for terms of 14 years, but that the present appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency may continue to serve as such members for not longer than 90 days after such date. The provision of existing law with respect to qualifications of members of the new Board were retained, namely, that the President shall have due regard for a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial, and commercial interests, and geographical divisions of the country, and a further requirement was added that at least two of such members shall be persons of tested banking experience. The annual salary of members of the Board was fixed at $15,000, and it was provided that not more than four of the members of the Board shall be members of the same political party. The successors to the present members of the Board were to be appointed in such manner that the term of not more than one member will expire in any 2-year period, and their successors will hold office for a term of 14 years, unless sooner removed for cause by the President. The President was also to designate the chairman and vice chairman of the Board to serve as such for terms of 4 years. It was also provided that any person appointed as a member of the Board after the date of enactment of the act shall not be eligible for reappointment as such member after he shall have served a full term of 14 years. A provision was also included in this section providing that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall keep a complete record of the action taken by the Board and the Federal Open Market Committee upon all questions of policy relating to open-market operations, together with the votes taken and the reasons underlying the action of the Board and the committee in each instance. Similar records were required to be kept by the Board with respect to all questions of policy determined by it, and a copy of such records was to be included in the annual report of the Board to the Congress. The conference agreement modifies the provisions of the Senate amendment by eliminating the requirement that two members of the Board shall be persons of tested banking experience and also the provision relating to the political affiliations of the members of the Board. The date upon which the change in the organization of the Board is to take effect is extended to February 1, 1936.

Section 203 of the Senate amendment reenacted and made permanent law the provisions of section 10 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act, which expired on March 3, 1935, and under which any member bank that had no eligible and acceptable assets to enable it to obtain adequate credit accommodations through rediscounting at a Federal Reserve bank, or any other method provided by the Federal Reserve Act (other than that provided by sec. 10 (a)), might apply to the Federal Reserve bank, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board, for advances on its time or demand notes secured to the satisfaction of the bank. The provision that each such note shall bear interest at a rate not less than 1 percent per annum higher than the highest discount rate in effect at the Federal Reserve bank on the date of the note was also retained, but the limitation of existing law that such advances may be made only "in exceptional and exigent circumstances" was eliminated. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill, but section 206 provided that upon the endorsement of any member bank, subject to such regulations as to maturities and other matters as the Federal Reserve Board might prescribe, any Federal Reserve bank might discount any commercial, agricultural, or industrial paper and make advances to such member bank on its promissory notes secured by any sound assets of the bank. This section was eliminated from the Senate amendment. The conference agreement eliminates from the Senate amendment the provision requiring the exhausting of eligible and acceptable assets before securing advances, changes the 1-percent rate to one-half of 1 percent, and adds a provision that the notes of the member banks shall have maturities of not more than 4 months.

Section 204 of the House bill authorized the Federal Reserve Board to assign to designated members of the Board or its representatives under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board the performance of specific duties and functions, not including, however, the determination of any national or System policies, or any power to make rules and regulations, or any power which is required to be exercised by specified members of the Board. There was also a provision in this section stating that it shall be the duty of the Board to exercise its powers "in such manner as to promote conditions conducive to business stability and to mitigate by its influence unstabilizing fluctuations in the general level of production, trade, prices, and employment, so far as may be possible within the scope of monetary action and credit administration." These provisions were omitted from the Senate amendment. The conference agreement also omits them.

Section 205 of the House bill provided for an Open Market Advisory Committee, consisting of five representatives of the Federal Reserve banks, to take the place of the Federal Open Market Committee provided for in existing law. The advisory committee was authorized to consult and advise with and make recommendations to the Federal Reserve Board. It had no vote in determining open-market policies, but the Board was required to consult the committee before making any changes on its own initiative in open-market policies, in rates of interest and discount to be charged by Federal Reserve banks, or in the reserve balances required to be maintained by member banks. It was also provided that all transactions of the Federal Reserve banks under section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act should be subject to such regulations, limitations, and restrictions as the Federal Reserve Board might prescribe. In lieu of this section, the Senate amendment in section 204 amended existing law so as to provide for a Federal Open Market Committee, consisting of the members of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and five representatives of the Federal Reserve banks to be selected annually. Four of such representatives were to be elected by the boards of directors of the Federal Reserve banks by regions; that is to say, 1 to represent the Boston, New York, and Philadelphia banks; 1 to represent the Cleveland, Chicago, and St. Louis banks; 1 to represent the Richmond, Atlanta, and Dallas banks; and 1 to represent the Minneapolis, Kansas City, and San Francisco banks. The fifth representative, who was to be chosen from the country at large, was to be elected annually by the presidents of the 12 Federal Reserve banks. An alternate to serve in the absence of each such representative was to be elected annually in the same manner. It was also provided that no Federal Reserve bank shall engage or decline to engage in open-market operations under section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act except in accordance with regulations adopted by the committee and that the committee should make regulations relating to the open-market transactions of the Federal Reserve banks and the relations of the Federal Reserve System with foreign central or other foreign banks. The provision of existing law which allowed a Federal Reserve bank to decline to participate in open-market operations recommended and approved by the committee, upon filing a notice of its decision within 30 days, was eliminated, but the provision of existing law was retained which states that the time, character, and volume of all purchases and sales of paper described in section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act as eligible for open-market operations, shall be governed with a view to accommodating commerce and business and with regard to their bearing upon the general credit situation of the country. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment in substance as section 205, but instead of providing for a representative-at-large of the banks, it provides for 5 representatives to be elected as follows: 1 by the board of directors of the Boston and New York banks; 1 by the board of directors of the Philadelphia and Cleveland banks; 1 by the board of directors of the Chicago and St. Louis banks; 1 by the board of directors of the Richmond, Atlanta, and Dallas banks; and 1 by the board of directors of the Kansas City, Minneapolis, and San Francisco banks. The conference agreement also eliminates the power of the committee to make regulations with respect to the relations of the Federal Reserve System with foreign central or other foreign banks since this would be in conflict with the general authority over such matters which is granted to the Federal Reserve Board under existing law. This provision becomes effective March 1, 1936.

Section 207 of the House bill amended section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act so as to make eligible for purchase by Federal Reserve banks, without regard to maturities, direct obligations of the United States or obligations which are fully guaranteed by the United States as to principal and interest. This provision was modified by section 205 of the Senate amendment so as to provide that direct obligations of the United States and such guaranteed obligations may be purchased only in the open market. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment as section 208.

Section 205 of the Senate amendment also amended existing law with respect to rates of discount to be established by the Federal Reserve banks by providing that such rates shall be established every 14 days, or oftener if deemed necessary by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment as section 206.

Section 208 of the House bill amended section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act so as to repeal the requirements that Federal Reserve notes be secured at all times by the specific pledge of collateral, and it also eliminated the provision of existing law prohibiting a Federal Reserve bank from paying out the notes of any such bank and made certain technical changes with respect to issue, redemption, and retirement of Federal Reserve notes. It was provided that such notes should be obligations of the United States and legal tender for all purposes, should be secured by a first and paramount lien on all the assets of the issuing bank, and should be issued and retired under such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board might prescribe. This provision of the bill was not included in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement omits this provision.

Section 209 of the House bill authorized the Federal Reserve Board, in order to prevent injurious credit expansion or contraction, to change by regulation the requirements as to reserves to be maintained against demand or time deposits or both by member banks in reserve and central reserve cities or by member banks not in reserve or central reserve cities or by all member banks. This provision was modified by section 206 of the Senate amendment so as to provide that the power to change the requirements as to reserves be conditioned upon an affirmative vote of not less than five members of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and a limitation was added that the amount of the statutory reserves required to be maintained under existing law may not be decreased, nor increased to more than twice such amount. The conference agreement modifies the Senate amendment so as to require the affirmative vote of not more than four members of the Board.

Section 210 of the House bill amended section 24 of the Federal Reserve Act so as to provide that the conditions under which real-estate loans might be made by national banks would be prescribed by regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, with the limitations that the amount of any such loan hereafter made should not exceed 60 percent of the appraised value of the real estate at the time the loan is made and that the aggregate amount of such loans by any such bank should not exceed the capital and surplus of the bank, or 60 percent of its time and savings deposits, whichever is the greater. Section 207 of the Senate amendment retained the limitation of existing law that real-estate loans by national banks should be limited to those upon properties situated within the Federal Reserve district of such bank or within a radius of 100 miles of the place in which the bank is located, irrespective of district lines, and it also retained the requirement that a real-estate loan should be in the form of an obligation secured by a mortgage or similar instrument when the entire amount of the obligation was made or sold to the bank. It was further provided that any such loan hereafter made should not exceed 50 percent of the appraised value of the real estate offered as security and that no such loan should be made for a longer term than 5 years, except that any such loan might be made in an amount not to exceed 60 percent of the appraised value of the real estate and for a term not longer than 10 years if the loan was secured by an amortized mortgage under the terms of which the installment payments were sufficient to amortize 50 percent or more of the principal of the loan within a period of not more than 10 years. Renewals or extensions of loans heretofore made and real-estate loans which are insured under the provisions of title II of the National Housing Act were exempted under both the House and Senate provisions. The provisions authorizing the Federal Reserve Board to prescribe the conditions under which such loans might be made were eliminated in the Senate amendment, but the provision of the House bill with respect to the aggregate amount of real-estate loans which might be made by any such bank was retained in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement retains the provisions of section 207 of the Senate amendment, except that the territorial limitation upon loans is eliminated and the requirement as to the form of the loans when the entire amount of the obligations securing them are made or sold to the banks is modified so as to permit more than one such bank to participate in making real-estate loans but to permit any such bank to purchase obligations secured by mortgages only when the entire amount of the obligations are sold to the bank. The amortization requirement is also reduced from 50 to 40 percent. A provision of existing law is also restored relating to the receipt of time and savings deposits by such banks and the payment of interest thereon.

Section 208 of the Senate amendment provided for fixing the salary of the Comptroller of the Currency at $12,000 a year and removed the provision of existing law which provides that his appointment be made upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the Senate provision but fixes the salary of the Comptroller at $15,000 to correspond to the salaries provided for members of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Title III—Technical amendments to the banking laws

In this title many of the sections are identical both in form and in substance in the House bill and in the Senate amendment. Other sections of the Senate amendment, which are the same in substance as the corresponding sections of the House bill, contain formal and clarifying changes which are retained in the conference agreement. Many of the alterations thus made are the result of changing the name of the Federal Reserve Board to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Certain clerical and typographical errors are also corrected. The sections in these two general groups are not specifically referred to but those in which there are material differences between the House and Senate provisions and which contain matter not included in the House bill, together with the conference action with respect thereto, are indicated below.

Section 303 (b) of the House bill repealed section 21 (a) (2) of the Banking Act of 1933 which prohibits any person or organization not subject to examination and regulation under State or Federal law from engaging in the business of receiving deposits unless such person or organization submits to the examination by the Comptroller of the Currency or by a Federal Reserve bank. Instead of repealing this paragraph, the Senate amendment amended it so as to prohibit any person or organization from engaging in the business of receiving deposits with others than his or its own officers, agents, or employees unless such person or organization is incorporated under and authorized to engage in such business by Federal or State law, or is permitted to engage in such business by any State, Territory, or District, and is subject under the laws thereof to examination and regulation, or submits to examination by the banking authorities of the State, Territory, or District where the business is conducted and makes and publishes periodic reports of condition under the same conditions as required by local law of an incorporated banking institution. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

Section 308 (a) of the Senate amendment contained a provision which was not included in the House bill amending paragraph seventh of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes so as to permit national banks under regulations by the Comptroller of the Currency and with other restrictions to underwrite and sell bonds, debentures, and notes. The conference agreement eliminates this provision.

Section 308 (c) of the Senate amendment provided for including within the group of securities that may be dealt in by member banks free from the restrictions of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, obligations insured by the Federal Housing Administrator if debentures guaranteed by the United States as to principal and interest are to be issued in payment of such insured obligations. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

Section 309 of the House bill amended section 5138 of the Revised Statutes to require a newly organized national bank to have a paid-in surplus equal to 20 percent of its capital, thus expressly providing by law a condition which has long been imposed by the Comptroller of the Currency. This requirement may be waived by the Comptroller as to a State bank converting into a national bank. An additional condition not included in the House bill was added by the Senate amendment to the effect that any such converting State bank shall carry not less than one-half of its net profits for the preceding half year to its surplus fund before declaring dividends, until its surplus equals 20 percent of its capital. Further provision was also made for giving any such bank credit as surplus for amounts paid into a preferred stock retirement fund. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

Section 310 (a) of the Senate amendment amended the provisions of section 5139 of the Revised Statutes which provide that stock certificates of national banks may not represent the stock of any other corporation except a member bank or a corporation engaged solely in holding the bank premises of the association, so as to provide that such certificate may not bear any statement purporting to represent the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank or a corporation engaged on June 16, 1934, in holding the bank premises. This amendment differs from the provision in the House bill in that it exempts corporations engaged in holding the bank premises on June 16, 1934, whereas the House provision limited the exception to a corporation primarily engaged in holding such premises. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 310 (b) of the Senate amendment added a provision not incorporated in the House bill which amends section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act and makes the same changes in the law relative to stock certificates of State member banks as was made by section 310 (a) as to stock certificates of national banks. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 311 (c) of the Senate amendment was not included in the House bill. It amends section 5144 of the Revised Statutes by relieving a holding company affiliate, to the extent that the shares of bank stock owned by it are not subject to statutory liability, from the requirements of subsection (b) of section 5144 which requires a holding company affiliate to maintain and possess readily marketable assets other than bank stock in an amount not less than 12 percent of the aggregate par value of all such stock controlled by the affiliate, and requires it to increase such amount by 2 percent per annum until such amount equals 25 percent of the par value of such bank stock. In lieu of the foregoing requirement, any such holding company affiliate, to the extent that the shares of bank stock held by it are not subject to statutory liability, is only required to maintain a reserve out of net earnings above 6 percent of such readily marketable assets in an amount equal to 12 percent of the par value of bank stocks controlled by it. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 315 of the House bill amended section 5199 of the Revised Statutes to provide that national banks shall carry not less than one-tenth part of their net profits of the preceding half year to surplus before the declaration of a dividend until the surplus is built up to equal the amount of the common capital. The Senate amendment added a provision which was not contained in the House bill which would allow a national bank to treat as an addition to its surplus fund amounts paid into its preferred-stock retirement fund. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

Section 316 extends the criminal provisions of section 5209 of the Revised Statutes as to embezzlement, false entries, etc., so as to apply to officers, directors, and employees of insured nonmember banks. The conference agreement adds a provision to make certain that nonmember national banks in the Territories are included within the terms of the section whether or not they are insured.

Section 321 (a) of the Senate amendment amended section 11 (m) of the Federal Reserve Act to extend to State member banks the provisions applicable to national banks which enlarge the maximum limitation on loans to one individual from 10 percent of the bank's unimpaired capital and surplus to 25 percent thereof where such loans are secured by bonds, notes, certificates, or Treasury bills of the United States, or secured by obligations fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States. The provisions with respect to such guaranteed obligations were not included in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 321 (b) of the Senate amendment amended paragraph 8 of section 5200 of the Revised Statutes so as to provide a maximum limit of 25 percent instead of 10 percent of the bank's capital and surplus on loans secured by various obligations of the United States. The amendment adds to such obligations, Treasury bills of the United States and obligations fully guaranteed both as to principal and interest by the United States. The provisions with respect to such guaranteed obligations were not included in the House bill. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 324 (c) of the Senate amendment amended section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act to add to the classes of deposits exempted from the prohibition against the payment of interest on demand deposits, deposit contracts existing when a bank joins the Federal Reserve System. It was also provided that deposits payable outside the States of the United States and the District of Columbia shall likewise be exempt, rather than "those payable in foreign countries" as is provided in the existing law. A provision not included in the House bill prohibited payment of interest after the expiration of 2 years from the date of enactment of the act, on demand deposits made by savings banks as defined in section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, and by mutual savings banks, demand deposits of public funds made by or on behalf of any State, county, school district, or any subdivision or municipality, and demand deposits of trust funds, upon which interest is required to be paid by State law. The House provision, permitting payment of interest on demand deposits made by any such savings bank or mutual savings bank, by the United States or any Territory, district, or possession thereof, including the Philippine Islands, or any public instrumentality or agency thereof with respect to which interest is required by law, or by any State, etc., and on demand deposits of trust funds, was eliminated. A new provision was also added repealing so much of existing law as requires payment of interest on deposits of public funds made by the United States, etc. In conformity with the House provision, the Senate amendment made more flexible the power of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to classify time and savings deposits and prescribe the rates of interest to be paid thereon. The absolute prohibition against payment of time deposits before maturity may be relaxed under conditions to be prescribed by the Board, and deposits payable only at offices of member banks located outside of the United States and the District of Columbia are exempted from the restrictions on interest rates and the prohibitions on payment before maturity. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 327 of the House bill amended section 23A of the Federal Reserve Act, which limits loans to affiliates, and loans on and investments in securities of affiliates, and prescribed certain conditions by way of collateral requirements to such loans. It also enumerated certain types of affiliates which are to be exempt from such conditions and requirements. The Senate amendment made a change in the provision exempting an affiliate engaged "primarily" in holding bank premises so that the exemption would apply only to an affiliate engaged "on June 16, 1934" in holding such premises. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate amendment.

Section 329 of the Senate amendment repealed section 8A of the Clayton Act relating to interlocking relationships between banks and institutions making loans secured by stock or bond collateral, and repealed the provisions of sections 25 and 25 (a) of the Federal Reserve Act which relates to interlocking relationships. The first three paragraphs of section 8 of the Clayton Act were also amended, but the provision in the Senate amendment was materially different from that in the House bill. The House bill prohibited any director, officer, or employee of a member bank from being at the same time a private banker or a director, officer, or employee of another banking institution (other than a mutual savings bank) except in limited classes of cases in which the Federal Reserve Board might allow such service by general regulation when in its judgment such classes of institutions were not in substantial competition. The provision in the Senate amendment prohibited a director, officer, or employee of a member bank or branch thereof from being at the same time a private banker, or a director, officer, or employee of more than one other bank or trust company or branch thereof, except in the following cases:

(1) Where such other bank is more than 90 percent controlled by the United States or a corporation in which the United States owns more than 90 percent of the stock.

(2) Where such other bank has been placed in liquidation or is in the hands of a receiver or conservator.

(3) Where such other bank is principally engaged in international or foreign banking in a possession of the United States and has entered into an agreement with the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System as provided by section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act.

(4) A bank more than 50 percent of the common stock of which is owned by persons owning more than 50 percent of the common stock of a member bank.

(5) A bank not located and having no branch in the same place in which a member bank or a branch thereof is located or in a place contiguous thereto.

(6) A bank not engaged in a class of business in which a member bank is engaged.

(7) A mutual-savings bank having no capital stock.

A further provision not contained in the House bill suspended the operation of the amendment until February 1, 1939, insofar as it affects interlocking relationships of any director, officer, or employee of a member bank or branch thereof lawfully existing on the date the act takes affect.

The conference agreement amends section 8 of the Clayton Act so as to provide that no private banker or director, officer, or employee of any member bank or any branch thereof shall be at the same time a director, officer, or employee of any other bank or branch thereof, except that the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may by regulation permit such service as a director, officer, or employee of not more than one other such institution or branch thereof. The prohibitions are not to apply however, to the cases excepted under the provisions of the Senate amendment, and the remaining provisions of the Senate amendment are also retained.

Section 337 of the House bill provided for terminating the liability of shareholders of banks and trust companies in the District of Columbia on July 1, 1937, under the same conditions as are applicable under section 304 of the bill in the case of national banks. Each such institution is required to carry one tenth part of its net profits of the preceding half year to surplus before declaring a dividend and to continue to do so until the surplus equals the amount of its common stock, and under the Senate amendment it is allowed to treat as surplus any amounts paid into a fund for retiring its preferred stock or debentures. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 341 of the House bill, which amended the provisions of section 8 of the Postal Savings Depository Act of June 25, 1910, relating to the withdrawal of and interest on Postal Savings deposits, was eliminated by the Senate amendment. Under this provision of the House bill any depositor was allowed to withdraw the whole or any part of his deposit with accrued interest after giving 60 days' written notice but subject to regulations of the Postmaster General. It was further provided that in the absence of such notice a withdrawal would be permitted only on condition that not less than 3 months' interest be deducted. Provisions were also included requiring that the interest rate paid on any such deposit should not exceed that which might lawfully be paid on savings deposits in member banks located in or nearest to the place where the depository office is located and authorizing such depositories to deposit funds on time in member banks subject to the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act with respect to payment and interest. The conference agreement restores the last two provisions referred to, and provides that Postal Savings deposits shall be savings deposits, that interest shall be allowed and credited quarterly, and that no interest shall be allowed to any depositor for any period of less than 3 months.

Section 341 of the Senate amendment amended section 11 (k) of the Federal Reserve Act to provide that State banking authorities may have access to the reports of examination of trust departments of national banks made by the Comptroller of the Currency. This provision was not included in the House bill. The conference agreement retains this provision as section 342.

Section 342 of the Senate amendment amended section 5240 of the Revised Statutes, relating to payment of compensation of employees of the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency by means of assessments on banks, so as to include the payment of retirement annuities for such employees. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains it as section 343.

Section 343 of the Senate amendment, which was not included in the House bill, amends the National Housing Act in several respects. Subsection (a) authorizes the Federal Housing Administrator, in carrying out the provisions of titles I, II, and III of such act, to sue and be sued in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal. Subsection (b) is intended merely to clarify and not to extend the provisions of existing law relating to insured loans for financing alterations, repairs, and improvements on real property so that the purchase and installation of equipment and machinery on real property may be included. Subsections (c) and (d) also clarify existing law with respect to mortgage insurance in connection with low-cost housing projects and property. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment as section 344.

Section 344 of the Senate amendment added a provision which was not contained in the House bill relating to preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures of member banks of the Federal Reserve System and the consideration to be given to such securities in determining whether the capital stock of any such bank is impaired. It was also provided that the dividends on preferred stock of national banks shall not exceed 6 percent of the original purchase price of such stock, and that in the event of the retirement of such stock or the liquidation of the bank the holders of the stock shall be entitled to receive not more than the original purchase price plus accumulative dividends. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment with clarifying amendments.

Section 345 of the Senate amendment contains the usual provision relating to separability in the event any part of the act should be held unconstitutional. There was no corresponding provision in the House bill. The conference agreement retains it.

HENRY B. STEAGALL,
T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
JOHN B. HOLLISTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to review in detail, in the short time allowed, the three titles of the bill upon which this report is founded. It will be remembered that title I of the bill as it passed the House provides for the permanent insurance of bank deposits up to the amount of $5,000 for each depositor. Under the temporary insurance plan now in force deposits are insured for a like amount, but the assessment levied upon banks for the support of insurance funds is based upon the amount of deposits insured, one-fourth of 1 percent assessment having been levied under the temporary plan for insurance for 1 year adopted in 1933 and which was extended till July 1, 1935. Under the bill as agreed upon in conference, assessments will be levied upon the total deposits of insured banks. An assessment of one-eighth of 1 percent was provided in the House bill.

In conference an agreement was reached fixing this assessment at one-twelfth of 1 percent. The assessment agreed upon raises between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 annually under normal deposits of the banks of the Nation. Small banks which have borne an undue portion of the burden of insurance down to this time will only pay one-twelfth of 1 percent, the same as paid by the larger banks, although the total deposits in many of the small banks will be insured while only a portion of the deposits in the larger banks will be protected. Banks insured under the temporary plan will be given credit for amounts heretofore paid to equalize the burden.

The Deposit Insurance Corporation has operated since its establishment on the 1st of January 1934, without loss of a dollar to its stockholders. Fully 90 percent of depositors have been insured and about 40 percent of all deposits. Every bank that has paid an assessment for the support of the fund could now be reimbursed in full if the Corporation were liquidated at this time.

Not only is that true but protection afforded at this trivial expense has brought us an experience of nearly 2 years of practical freedom from the distress that attended bank failures in the United States for many years. That is the splendid record of the Deposit Insurance Corporation administered so admirably and successfully, as it has been down to this time under the present administration.

The bill passed in 1933 embodied a requirement that all State banks should be required to join the Federal Reserve System after the 1st of July 1936 as a condition precedent to participation in the benefits of deposit insurance. This time was extended from July 1, 1936, to July 1, 1937, in the act which extended temporarily the plan of insuring banks.

The bill reported by the conference committee repeals the law requiring all State banks to become members of the Federal Reserve System in order to obtain deposit insurance. The provision of the Senate bill requiring the State banks hereafter organized to join the Federal Reserve System was also eliminated. There is in the bill, agreed upon, a provision that State banks with deposits amounting to $1,000,000 or more shall join the Federal Reserve System by the 1st of July, 1942. There are only a few hundred out of the thousands of State banks existing which have deposits amounting to $1,000,000. We have until July 1, 1942, within which to consider the matter of permitting that provision to become permanent law.

May I say in this connection, with all deference to its supporters, that if I had favored requiring these banks to become members of the Federal Reserve System I should never have favored the ridiculous provision in this bill which would bring banks in arbitrarily without consideration on the part of its officers or the officers of the Federal Reserve System as to the desirability of membership, but which would throw them into the System automatically because of a change in the amount of deposits which might happen overnight that would bring them into the Federal Reserve System any day without notice. However, when this plan is deferred until 1942, those who have opposed it are not seriously disturbed. The engagement has been entered into under duress, and the marriage ceremony will not take place, nor will the union be completed until 1942. This would be a long time in which to consummate a marriage contract.

If anybody has any consolation as a result of this provision, we welcome them to enjoy it for the time being. There will be ample time to consider what shall be done about it before July 1, 1942. We have notice of the plan and can take any action deemed wise. Of course it will never go into effect then or later.

Let me now discuss briefly the provisions of Title II of the bill. Title II relates to the powers of the Federal Reserve System.

Under the House bill a provision was incorporated setting up an open-market committee to direct and control the activities of the System in its open-market operations. Under the House plan the Federal Reserve Board, as constituted, would be given sole power to control open-market operations. Under the bill as reported by the conference committee, an open-market committee will be created, composed of the 7 members of the Federal Reserve Board, plus 5 representatives of Federal Reserve banks to be selected by the banks.

It will be remembered that the presidents of the Federal Reserve banks under the bill passed by the House and under the bill reported by the committee are to be approved by the Federal Reserve Board. Five members representing the banks will be added to the Federal Reserve Board to constitute the open-market committee.

This means that we have fought out in this House, in the Senate, and in the conference the question of Government control of the open-market operations, the rediscount rates, and the reserve requirements of the Federal Reserve banks, and as a result of this controversy we have a bill which writes into the law a safeguard that insures the investment of these powers in a Government-controlled board.

The vote would be 7 to 5 if we assume that the 5 members representing the banks would go contrary to the 7 members representing all the people of the country or the public at large. The Senate bill had in it a provision requiring the appointment of 2 members of the 7 constituting the Federal Reserve Board to be experienced bankers. This provision was stricken out in conference.

So we have written into this law the principle that the Government, the sovereign people of the United States, shall have control of the Board that dictates the vast powers of the Federal Reserve System.

Something has been said about what was done in conference being a departure from the wishes of the House as expressed in the vote of the House on the bill. Let me say to the Members of the House that the open-market committee provided in the bill reported by the conference committee goes further in insuring Government control of the operations of the Federal Reserve System than the original bill that was submitted to the committees of the House and Senate by the present Governor of the Federal Reserve Board and by the administration.

The bill submitted by the administration to the House and the Senate and introduced by the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the Senate and the Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the House, proposed an open-market committee composed of 5 members, 3 of whom were to be members of the Federal Reserve Board and 2 of whom were to be governors of Federal Reserve banks, elected by the governors of the 12 Federal Reserve banks.

Under the plan first proposed to the House, the Government would have had a majority of only one on the open-market committee, whereas under the bill embodied in the conference report the board will stand 5 to 7, giving the people of the country, as contradistinguished from private banking interests, control by a vote of 7 to 5 instead of by a vote of 3 to 2—a majority of 2 rather than a majority of 1 on the open-market committee.

I want to call attention to another thing. I dare say the Members of this House will bear me out in the statement I am about to make, because of their own experience and observation in recent years.

I know of many instances where solvent banks that were members of the Federal Reserve System went down in ruin because of the arbitrary, inelastic, strait-laced eligibility requirements of the Federal Reserve System, as a result of which solvent banks were unable to get the accommodations to which they were entitled, bringing demoralization and ruin to the communities involved. I dare say there is no Member here who is not familiar with this history. We have written into this bill a provision that the Federal Reserve banks may extend loans to any member bank upon any security regarded sound and satisfactory to officials of the Federal Reserve banks. If we had had such a provision in the law before the debacle of 1933, it would have gone a long way toward preventing the unhappy developments of that period.

We have written into this bill a provision which extends and liberalizes that law so that the credit facilities of the Nation will be available to banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System, to enable them to support every legitimate business interest within their territory.

But last, or in any event, certainly not least, is the provision in this bill, embodied in the conference report, that changes the personnel of the Federal Reserve Board. The Board is now made up of 6 appointed members, plus 2 ex-officio members—the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency. The measure reported to the House contains a provision for a new board of seven members, with the power of appointment placed in the President of the United States. The President of the United States is clothed with the power to reorganize the Federal Reserve Board.

So as to bring the System with its vast resources and powers into full harmony with the advanced policies of the present administration.

We all know that it does not matter so much what we write into the law as it does who administers the law. We have provided a practical method for employing the powers of the Federal Reserve Board. Under the law now existing the Board is without power to put into execution any policies which it may determine upon.

Under the present law policies must be originated by a committee consisting of the 12 governors of the Federal Reserve banks and approved by the Federal Reserve Board, but there is no authority to compel compliance. One bank can nullify any policy though it may have approval of the Federal Reserve Board and the other 11 banks.

Under this bill the power is fixed definitely in the Board, which represents the people of the United States, and the power of compliance is placed unreservedly in their hands.

That is what is in this bill. It is not all that I would like to see; it is not all that many Members of this House would like to see; but it represents a great reform, a great forward practical plan for the exercise of the sovereign power of the Government to control the Nation's credit and monetary policy in the interest of all the people of the United States.

Title III of the bill has not been controversial except in the matter of two amendments adopted by the Senate. One relates to interlocking directorates of banks, and the other would permit banks to resume underwriting securities. The Senate proposition as to interlocking directorates of banks was rewritten and amended so as to make it stronger than the Senate bill and stronger than the House bill. There cannot be interlocking directorates except in more than one bank, and then only when allowed by regulations of the Federal Reserve Board. The Senate amendment authorizing banks to resume underwriting of securities was opposed by the administration and by the conferees on the part of the House. That provision has been stricken from the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Is there anything in the conference report relating to the capital structure of national banks?

Mr. STEAGALL. That has not been changed.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. To ask the distinguished gentleman, Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, in view of the general statements that have been made while the measure was under consideration in the committee and out of it, whether there is in the conference report anything which will give to the small business man, the small industrialists——

Mr. STEAGALL. I was afraid the gentleman would propound that question when he rose. I know how industriously he has studied the question. He deserves much credit for his interest and labors. I wish time would permit a discussion of the matter now but it does not. I now yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I hope I shall not have to take the full amount yielded me. I do not think I shall. The report before us has the unanimous approval of the conferees. The Membership will recall that there were parts of this bill that were rather bitterly fought when we had it up for consideration. Also, they will remember that the Senate bill, as finally approved by the committee, was quite different from the House bill. It will hardly pay at the present time to go in detail into all the happenings of the conference. Everyone knows that in matters of this kind there must be giving and taking, there must be compromise, in the hopes that a good workable bill will be brought out. Notwithstanding my opposition to various parts of the House bill, this bill now has my unqualified support, and I hope it will receive the support of Members on both sides of the Chamber.

Two or three hours could be taken up in detail with each item of the report, pointing out how the House bill read and how the Senate bill read and whether the conferees favored one bill or the other. Every Member of the House who cares to do so can do that for himself. It will be hardly worth while for any one of us to take it up in detail on the floor.

Our distinguished chairman has touched on the high spots of the bill. It occurred to me that there might be questions which some Members of the House would like to ask about it, and rather than take the time myself to explain exactly what is in it and exactly what the terms provide and what the changes are, I thought I would devote what time I have to answering questions which anyone may want to ask, if I can. If I cannot answer them, I shall ask some of my colleagues to help me out.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman give us a little more information with reference to the statement made by the chairman of the committee on the point how the Reserve banks, in time of distress and a breaking market, in periods of what might be termed deflationary trends, will treat the assets of member banks?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not know what the gentleman means by "treating" the assets. Of course, the member banks deposit with Reserve banks and carry certain reserves there. At the present time there are large excess reserves. Is the gentleman referring to the complaint made that there was a compulsory provision whereby the excess reserves might be used to buy bonds?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No. Heretofore the Reserve banks have not had the privilege of expanding their service to the member banks insofar as taking into their hands certain assets for the purpose of making advances to the member banks. I understood the chairman to say a while ago that that defect in the previous banking law has been corrected, that the Reserve banks can now advance to member banks on any and all kinds of assets that the member banks may have.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is going a little bit too far. The bill does not go that far, but it does allow for the existing situation. In the House bill it is true that almost any assets could be used by the various banks with the Reserve banks. The Senate bill provided that until eligible paper was exhausted there could not be any use of the emergency provisions. A compromise was reached which will be found on page 23 of the report, section 204:

SEC. 204. Section 10 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10 (b). Any Federal Reserve bank, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, may make advances to any member bank on its time or demand notes having maturities of not more than 4 months and which are secured to the satisfaction of such Federal Reserve bank. Each such note shall bear interest at a rate not less than one-half of 1 percent per annum higher than the highest discount rate in effect at such Federal Reserve bank on the date of such note."

Note that now a bank may make a 4 months' borrowing from the Federal Reserve bank on practically any reasonable assets which under rules and regulations the Federal Reserve Board may approve. It means that you do not have first to exhaust your eligible paper before you can do that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That answers the question. Is there anything in this bill that provides that State banks to be organized hereafter must have $50,000 capital in order to get advantage of the insurance?

Mr. HOLLISTER. They may come into the insurance fund if they are under $1,000,000 deposits without any specific capital limitation, but after 1942, if they have deposits of $1,000,000 or more, they must become members of the Federal Reserve System, and have whatever capital requirements existing law demands.

Mr. BIERMANN. But there is nothing to provide that they must have $50,000 capital in order to get advantage of the insurance?

Mr. HOLLISTER. No. There is no change in existing law, except a liberalization which permits the waiver of some of the usual requirements.

Mr. BIERMANN. Is there anything in the rules that makes them more stringent for the little State banks than they are now?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not believe so. I would not want to answer that absolutely, because there are some slight changes, but I would say that the small State bank is not appreciably affected by anything in this bill. There are so many small changes here and there, giving certain authority to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and so forth, that I would not want to make any categorical answer to the gentleman, but I do not think there is anything to worry about.

Mr. BIERMANN. There was some talk, as I understand, about requiring State banks organized hereafter, to have a capital of $50,000 in order to come in under the insurance provision?

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is not in this bill.

Mr. KELLER. Is that not the law at the present time?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I mean there is no change in the law at the present time. Whether that is the law at the present time or not, I am not sure, although I do not believe that is so, but I would want to check it before giving a definite answer.

Mr. KELLER. That is certainly true as to national banks.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is true as to national banks, but I do not think it is as to State banks. There is no change in the present law. That is what we were particularly interested in.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. In the bill as it passed the House in section 204, paragraph 4, there was a provision that the Federal Reserve System should exercise this control in such manner as to promote conditions conducive to business recovery, and so on. Will the gentleman tell us what change was made in that provision?

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is no longer in the bill.

Mr. WHITE. They are not given the power to restrict and contract currency, to stabilize prices?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The provision to which the gentleman refers stated it was the duty of the Federal Reserve Board to exercise their powers toward that end. That is now not in the bill. That was not in the Senate bill.

Mr. WHITE. With reference to this provision for open-market transactions to be administered by a board of 7 from the Federal Reserve Board and 5 members appointed by the Federal Reserve bank?

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. That has to do with the expansion and contraction of the currency, does it not?

Mr. HOLLISTER. As to what expansion or contraction of the currency means is one of those disputable subjects which I do not have time to discuss now. Some say it does have to do with expansion and contraction of the currency, and some say it does not.

Mr. WHITE. When they go into the market and buy securities and put out money, that is expansion, is it not?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I would like to answer the gentleman's question as to where the bill is changed, but I do not want to get into a discussion of the question of expansion of the currency.

Mr. WHITE. That is one of the big points and one of the main objects of this bill, to give control for the issuance of currency.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is not my understanding of the proper function of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. WHITE. As a matter of fact, is not the $4,000,000,000——

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman can ask me any question about the bill, but I cannot yield for a discussion of basic principles.

Mr. WHITE. Is it not a fact that there are $4,000,000,000 Federal Reserve notes out in currency at this time, backed by the United States Government?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Something like that.

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. WITHROW. Did I understand the gentleman to say that all banks organized after 1942, in order to get the guaranty-deposit insurance, will have to be members of the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. HOLLISTER. If they have more than $1,000,000 deposits.

Mr. WITHROW. And if they have less than $1,000,000 it is not necessary to become a member of the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. HOLLISTER. There is no limitation whatever. A bank with less than $1,000,000 deposits, under this law, is not compelled to become a member of the Federal Reserve System. A bank that has more than $1,000,000 must come in by 1942 in order to get the benefit of the deposit insurance.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman answered a part of the question I was going to ask. It is this: What is the status of State banks?

Mr. HOLLISTER. A State bank with deposits under $1,000,000 does not have to become a member of the Federal Reserve System in order to get the advantages of the Federal deposit insurance. If it has deposits of more than $1,000,000, then it must become a member of the Federal Reserve System by 1942.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Between the effective date of this bill and 1942 any State bank may become a member of the Federal Reserve System by application?

Mr. HOLLISTER. If it passes the different requirements of the Federal Reserve System; yes. There is no change in that situation.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. On and after 1942, whenever a State bank's deposits reach $1,000,000, it automatically becomes a member?

Mr. HOLLISTER. It must, in order to get the advantages of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, become a member of the Federal Reserve System. There is nothing compelling it to come in otherwise. If it does not want to be insured, it does not have to come in; but if a bank with more than $1,000,000 deposits wants to come in under the Federal Deposit Insurance after 1942, then it must be a member of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It can operate without insurance, without becoming a member?

Mr. HOLLISTER. It can operate without insurance; yes. There is no way the Federal Government can compel a State bank to become a member of the Federal Reserve System. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, however, can be controlled by the Federal Government. The conference report contained a provision that 7 years from now banks with deposits of over $1,000,000 will be forced to come into the System in order to be insured. There will be seven sessions of Congress before then, however, and that may be changed in many different ways.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is to say they will be forced to become members of the System if their deposits exceed $1,000,000.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes; if they want insurance.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Considering the statement made by the chairman of the committee that the people of the United States would have control of the currency, or control of this Board, and that the Board would be responsible to the will of the people, is it not a fact that five members of the Board are appointed by the banks?

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is right.

Mr. WHITE. And that the President is required to appoint as two officers of the Board men who have had banking experience?

Mr. HOLLISTER. No, that has been taken out; that is no longer in the bill. There is no longer any requirement that any of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall be bankers.

Mr. WHITE. But that they shall have banking experience.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is not in the bill. If the gentleman will read the bill, he will see it is left out.

Mr. WHITE. I read the gentleman this paragraph from section 10.

SEC. 10 (b). Whenever any member bank has no eligible and acceptable assets available to enable it to obtain adequate credit accommodations through rediscounting at the Federal Reserve bank or any other method provided by this act other than that provided by section 10 (a), any Federal Reserve bank, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, may make advances to such member bank on its time or demand notes secured to the satisfaction of such Federal Reserve bank. Each such note shall bear interest at a rate not less than 1 percent per annum higher than the highest discount rate in effect at such Federal Reserve bank on the date of such note.

I am simply reading the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is the House bill. I am trying to save time. I will answer the gentleman's question, although I have already answered it. If the gentleman will look at page 23, section 204, of the report, he will find out what the new provision is.

I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. In the Senate bill I understand there was a limit on the total amount that could be obtained by way of assessment from banks with Federal deposit insurance.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Now there is no limitation?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The banks are assessed at the rate of one-twelfth of 1 percent regardless of how much money the Corporation may have.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes; but the amount of five hundred million set up in the Senate bill would not be reached for 15 years; before that many Congresses will be in session.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. On the question of eligibility the bank must exhaust eligible paper.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Not under the conference report; they do not have to exhaust it. That was the situation in the Senate bill, but the conference report shows the compromise that was made.

Mr. FIESINGER. If they had put up other sound assets, as required, must it be backed up by 40 percent gold, the same as eligible paper?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am talking about the borrowing of money, whereas the gentleman is talking about note coverage.

Mr. FIESINGER. I am talking about Federal Reserve currency.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is not what we are discussing. We are discussing the question of borrowing by banks from the System.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. In the gentleman's opinion, does this place more or less control in the hands of the Government of the banking system than the House bill did?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman means control by the administration?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I would say less.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Perhaps that is why Senator GLASS was pleased with it.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Perhaps it is. My answer to that would be "less", if that is a direct question.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. This bill requires a contribution of one-twelfth of 1 percent of the deposits. How is this fund invested?

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is provided by existing law. I do not know that I can answer the gentleman directly, but I think it is chiefly in Government bonds.

Mr. BIERMANN. It is invested in something that produces income.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes; because at the present time the fund, being invested in bonds, has had a large increment through income and through increase in value.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, what effect will the passage of this bill have upon the present Federal Reserve Board?

Mr. HOLLISTER. This bill changes the Federal Reserve Board from a board of 8 individuals, including the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, to a new board of 7 without the Secretary of the Treasury or the Comptroller of the Currency. The new members will be appointed for 14 years, with a step every 2 years. Every 2 years a man's term will expire.

The whole Board will go out, and by February 1, 1936, a new Board will be appointed. Under the Senate bill the terms expired at such a time as would make recess appointments necessary, but this has been changed so the Senate will be in session when the appointments are made.

Does that answer the question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I think it does. Do the present members hold office until February 1, 1936?

Mr. HOLLISTER. They do.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. But on February 1, 1936, the present Board terminates?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Yes. The new appointments are to be made when the Congress is in session next year.

Mr. DOBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DOBBINS. Is the gentleman able to tell us how much profit there has been in the operation of the Federal deposit-insurance plan?

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is a very hard question to answer. Naturally there have been some losses. A few banks are closing all the time. I think the total number has been 12 to 15. The figures are available so far as the losses are concerned, together with the figures concerning the income they have earned on the bonds, and the increment in value over what these bonds were bought at, and so forth.

Mr. DOBBINS. It may be said, however, that there has been considerable profit in the operation of the Corporation?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Considerable; yes.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman is aware of the fact that from time to time we have had expert British bankers over here advising us with reference to our banking policy. Does the gentleman recollect that not a single one of the British experts who have come over here has ever recommended the British system of a central bank?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not know whether anyone has recommended that or not, but I personally do not believe in a Government central bank. I am not sure I quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. KENNEY. My question was, when we called in these British experts they never recommended a system of banking similar to their own.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am sure I cannot tell the gentleman.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman does not know the reason for that?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not know, except, perhaps, that under the set-up in this country it is not wise to have a central banking system.

Mr. KENNEY. Does not the gentleman know that Senator Aldrich, back in 1912, advocated a central bank?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I know that.

Mr. KENNEY. And that the gentleman's party advocated a central bank at that time?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am not particularly interested in what my party recommended 20 years ago.

Mr. KENNEY. Well, that is what happened.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman please turn to section 10, on page 23, of the conference report. The language there is somewhat uncertain. Does the word "its" in line 3 refer to the notes of which the bank is the maker? Or does the word "its" refer to the notes of customers that are held and owned by the banks?

Mr. HOLLISTER. No; it refers to the notes of the banks. It is not the notes of the customers. It is not a question of rediscount; it is a question of borrowing by the member banks.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. In order to make clear as to the construction of section 10 (b), the obligations held by the bank from its customers for periods longer than 4 months would be eligible as security back of the notes of the bank?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not believe that it is necessary to say that. I think other provisions of law would absolutely govern that matter.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I do not think section 10 (b) should be construed to mean that the bank could not put up notes that had maturities of longer than 4 months as collateral to its obligation.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not think they should, either.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I think that should be clearly expressed by the gentleman.

Mr. HOLLISTER. That is my understanding, although I would not like to interfere with the language used, because when you do so at any particular place it changes the situation somewhere else.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DUFFY].

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by the Judiciary Committee to ask unanimous consent that the committee may sit this afternoon from 3 o'clock on during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, the remaining time is not very long to attempt to analyze this conference report. The conception of the Senate was that the operations of the open-market committee should be controlled by the banks. The theory of the House was that the operations of the open-market committee, involving as they do the placing of money in circulation and withdrawing it in order to prevent on the one hand inflation, and on the other deflation, was a public function and should be controlled entirely by representatives of the people.

With that in view, the members of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, and the House itself, adopted a provision that the open-market policy would be controlled exclusively by the members of the Federal Reserve Board. The Senate bill provided that the open-market policy should be controlled by the Federal Reserve Board and five representatives of the Federal Reserve banks.

It also provided that two members of the Federal Reserve Board should be experienced bankers; so that the Senate bill would have placed on the open-market committee 7 bankers and 5 nonbankers, which would have given control of the open-market policy to private banking interests.

The Senate bill also provided that of the 5 bankers 1 should have a roving commission or should be a member at large, the purpose of this being to give the New York district 2 representatives instead of 1.

The conference report says that the open-market committee shall consist of 7 members of the Federal Reserve Board and 5 members of the Federal Reserve bank, each one of whom shall represent a different Federal Reserve section of the country and shall come from a different section of the country; and the conference report also provides that the two bankers who would be on the Federal Reserve Board shall not be required by law to be there. So that, as the chairman has said, while unfortunately the policy of the House has not been carried out in toto—in other words, the undiluted principle that the public money shall be used for the purpose of the exchange of goods and commodities is not in the conference report—the conference report in a practical way protects the public, because the 7 members of the Federal Reserve Board sit here in Washington and they are a cohesive body, while the 5 bankers are scattered all over the United States and do not constitute a majority of the open-market committee.

The Senate bill said that it would require 5 out of the 7 members of the Federal Reserve Board to change the reserve requirements of the member banks. The conference report says that it only requires a majority of the members of the Federal Reserve Board to change the reserve requirements.

Under existing law the Federal Reserve banks initiate the changes in rediscount rates. To be sure, under existing law what they do has to be ratified by the Federal Reserve Board, but the Federal Reserve Board under existing law has no right to initiate changes in rediscount rates. Under the conference report the Federal Reserve Board has exclusive right to initiate and control rediscount rates, so that for the first time since the enactment of the Federal Reserve Act the Federal Reserve Board exercises an actual control over the operations of the central banks of the country.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. BURDICK. Before the gentleman finishes his remarks I should like very much to have him make a brief statement about what constitutes open-market operations.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I can only generalize, but I am sure it will be sufficiently satisfactory to say that open-market operations consist of the buying of Government bonds when the Federal Reserve Board thinks it is necessary to put more money into circulation in order to avoid a depression, and the sale of Government bonds at a time when they deem it necessary in order to prevent a period of wild speculation. This is a broadening of the powers in that respect.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I have not heard all of the gentleman's statement, and he may have touched upon one point in which I am very much interested. I wish to inquire whether this bill, as agreed upon by the conferees, requires State banks to become members of the Federal Reserve System in order to enjoy the benefits of the F. D. I. C.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Under the bill banks with deposits of less than $1,000,000 never have to come into the Federal Reserve System. Banks with $1,000,000 of deposits and over have to come into the system on July 1, 1942.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. In answer to a previous question the gentleman made a statement about the purchase of Government bonds. When they buy the bonds, do they pay for them in currency?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The Federal Reserve banks would have to pay for them in Federal Reserve notes.

Mr. PIERCE. Then the currency is increased?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman spoke about the reserve requirements, and I wish to inquire what change, if any, was made in that respect.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. A very pronounced change was made. Under the House bill the Federal Reserve Board was given unlimited control of reserve requirements. Under the conference as agreed upon the Federal Reserve Board has no right to reduce reserves. It has a right to increase the reserves 100 percent; that is, from thirteen, ten, and seven to twenty-six, twenty, and fourteen.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is on demand deposits?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And there is no change as to time deposits?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is correct.

Mr. STEAGALL. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt, I should like to state in that connection that, with absolute control of open-market operations established, the matter of controlled reserves is not as important as it would be otherwise.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman briefly give the House the benefit of his conception of the objectives of these great powers that are to be exercised by the Board?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. My colleague from North Carolina will recall that there was in the House bill an affirmative mandate. It was general in terms, but it was an affirmative mandate. The Federal Reserve Board, unfortunately, in the past has occupied a negative position. Of course, it had very little affirmative power, but it has taken the position that when credit was asked for it should see if the credit was needed, but should not occupy an affirmative position.

The gentleman will remember that there was a mandate in the House bill. I introduced an amendment, which failed to carry, which would have given the Federal Reserve Board very broad powers. When we got into conference we found that if we insisted on any sort of a mandate at all we would get no bill. We were in session 11 days, and we were in there in an unfortunate position. The House bill was a good deal better than the present law, and the Senate bill was some better than the present law, and the Senate knew that we would rather have the Senate bill than no bill at all.

However, in spite of that fact, outside of the mandate and the modification of the open-market committee, we got substantially the House bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I want to make this statement, that I think the House conferees have done a splendid job.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. COLDEN. To what extent is the conference report stronger as to the Government control over bank credit?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I do not know whether the gentleman has been in the room since I began speaking or not, but under existing law the Federal Reserve Board exercises very little more than a moral control over the Federal Reserve banks. Under the conference report they control the open-market operations. The Federal Reserve Board represents the public; the Secretary of the Treasury is off it and the Comptroller of the Currency is off it. They control the rediscount rates. They can increase the reserves in the banks over $2,000,000,000 by powers given them under this bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. The open-market committee has the power to allot these bonds to be sold by the Federal Reserve banks.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. The committee apportion so much to this bank, so much to that bank?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman has stated to the House that the conference report is infinitely better than the present law and also that the Senate bill is inferior to the House bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman made the statement that it was the conception of the Senate that bankers should control the people's money, and it was the conception of the House that the representatives of the people should control it?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is what the vote showed.

Mr. GIFFORD. I congratulate the gentleman on his yielding attitude, knowing how strongly he felt about it; but is it not fair to infer that the Senate might feel, after the last 2 years of monetary operations, they could hardly trust the present representatives of the people to carry on the monetary operations? Is it not fair to infer that?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the strength and power of the Senate conferees said that the public has got no right to be represented on the open-market committee at all; they have no stake in it. The strength of the Senate conferees was that the control of money belongs to the bankers and not to the people, and that was stated in that conference a dozen times. We had to sit there and listen to that statement. The Federal Reserve Board has no stake in this thing. The open-market committee ought not to have any stake in it. They ought to operate it in the public interest and in the public interest alone. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Then the gentleman would continue to say that the Senate preferred the bankers to handle the people's money from a matter of principle, and not from the present conditions?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. God only knows why anybody would want to say that the people's medium of exchange should be controlled by any private interests; but that is what they said at least a dozen times.

Mr. STEAGALL. Which they were not allowed to write into this bill?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They were not allowed, as the chairman says, to write any such infamous principle into the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The open-market transaction has to do with the contraction and expansion of the currency, has it not?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. By buying Government securities and issuing currency against it, money is expanded, and vice versa, by putting out money and buying, the currency is contracted?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR ACT, 1935—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I call up a conference report on the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] whether we will have permission to request certain information from him with reference to certain sections of the bill if we grant this unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MANSFIELD. There is no unanimous-consent request except as to the reading of the statement.

Mr. RICH. There are three or four items with reference to which we should like to have some information.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I will state to the gentleman I will be glad to give him any information I possess.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendment numbered 71.

The committee of conference recommends that this item be inserted at the bottom of page 25 of the bill.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Milford Harbor, Conn."; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference recommends that this item be inserted at the bottom of page 25 of the bill.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the said amendment insert the following: " : Provided further, That the prosecution of this project shall be subject to approval by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors."

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Shrewsbury River, New Jersey; House Document Numbered 157, Seventy-first Congress, and Rivers and Harbors Committee Document Numbered 31, Seventy-fourth Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Documents Numbered 11, Seventy-third Congress, and 66, Seventy-fourth Congress", and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment insert, after the word "Refuge", the following: "Broadkill River, and Inland Waterway between Rehoboth Bay and Delaware Bay,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Many of these projects are completed and nearly completed. The total estimated cost of this list is $184,529,007.30. The House also adopted a list of projects to which no allotments have as yet been made, the total estimated cost of which is $91,681,265.70. On amendment no. 38, page 16: Amendment strikes out House language in provision for the Sabine-Neches Waterway, authorizing the construction of a dike or retaining wall in Sabine Lake for the retention of dredged material deposited in the execution of the project adopted, at estimated cost of $50,000 to the United States, and substitutes therefor the following:

"That the Chief of Engineers is authorized and directed to construct all works necessary to prevent the escape into Sabine Lake of dredged material hereafter deposited on the lake frontage owned by the city of Port Arthur, and to construct suitable permanent protective works to prevent the erosion of the material so deposited at a cost not to exceed $600,000, the funds necessary for these purposes to be in addition to those provided for the project as set forth in said document."

The House provision authorized $50,000 for this purpose, which the Senate considers entirely inadequate for the improvement necessary. Dredged material from the ship channel at this place was heretofore dumped into Sabine Lake with the effect of filling the lake opposite Port Arthur with mud and slush, which has become covered with a large growth of salt grass, rendering a dangerous breeding ground for mosquitoes. A resolution recommending this proposed improvement was adopted by the Public Health Service of the State of Texas, and it was also recommended by resolution adopted by the Texas Legislature. With a retaining wall installed, a portion of the lake would be filled up and become dry land, while the remainder of the lake will be kept intact, where the fish will destroy the mosquito larvae, and thus remove a great menace to public health.

If the Government is to convey the dredged material out to sea by hopper dredges, it would result in greater cost. House conferees recede.

On amendment no. 71, page 33: "Parker Dam" on Colorado River. "Grand Coulee Dam" on the Columbia River, and dam in the Colorado River at or near Head Gate Rock, Ariz. Item adds new section authorizing the projects known as "Parker Dam", on the Colorado River; and "Grand Coulee Dam", on the Columbia River. All contracts and agreements which have been executed in connection with the construction of these projects are validated and ratified. The President is authorized to construct, operate, and maintain dams, structures, canals, and incidental works necessary to such projects, and in connection therewith to make and enter into any and all necessary contracts, including contracts amendatory of or supplemental to those hereby validated and ratified.

This amendment also authorizes the construction of a dam in and across the Colorado River at or near Head Gate Rock, Ariz., and structures, canals, and incidental works in connection therewith.

The Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation states that the Parker Dam is a diversion dam intended to lift the water up into the Metropolitan Aqueduct. It also serves as a regulating reservoir to lessen floods which may come down the stream. The site of this dam is above where the river cuts the mountain ridge. Immediately below that ridge there is an area of fine land which extends downstream below this ridge for a considerable distance. This land is an Indian Reservation and the Indians intend to put a weir across the river having a height of about 14 feet, and from this weir divert water to irrigate the Indian reservation. Reference is made to this weir on page 54 of Senate Document 142, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session, and in the hearings before the Senate committee on the Johnson bill.

In the amendment this weir is referred to as the dam at or near Head Gate Rock. The estimated cost of this dam and the structures, canals, and incidental works, is $10,000,000.

The Parker Dam is a loan and grant project, which is to be financed from the sale of bonds of the city of Los Angeles. The estimated cost of this dam is $13,000,000. There has been allotted to this project the sum of $2,000,000 by the Public Works Administration.

The Grand Coulee project is estimated to cost $63,000,000. This project has received $38,000,000 in allotments from the Public Works Administration.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendment numbered 71.

On amendment no. 72, page 34: Adds a new section (3), which adopts and authorizes all projects planned or undertaken, for the purpose of controlling floods, improving navigation, regulating stream flow, providing for storage and delivery of water, for the reclamation of public lands and Indian reservations, and other beneficial uses, and for the generation of electric energy as a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertakings, for which allotments have been made under the provisions of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, and validates all contracts and agreements which have been executed in connection therewith heretofore, and authorizes the President to construct, operate, and maintain dams, structures, canals, and incidental works necessary to such projects, and in connection therewith to make and enter into all necessary contracts including contracts amendatory of or supplemental to those hereby validated and ratified. Senate recedes.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-nine Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, we have under consideration the conference report upon the river and harbor bill. This report is printed in pamphlet form and I presume that all Members have a copy of it. In the first consideration of the report we will not take into account Senate amendment no. 71, which is in dispute, but will take up the report as to all other Senate amendments embraced in the bill, and, if necessary, from a parliamentary standpoint, I now move that the conference report be adopted as to all amendments except 71. On that I yield one-half the time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER].

I shall now consume some time myself. This river and harbor bill is the first that has been passed by Congress since 1930—5 years. During a period of more than 100 years we have never gone that long without a river and harbor bill of some kind. The nearest approach to it was the 4-year period during the Civil War, when no river and harbor measures were passed, from 1861 to 1865.

The figures embraced in this bill look rather large, but it is a 5-year accumulation, during the period when there has been more demand for river and harbor legislation than ever before in the history of the country. If gentlemen will look at the conference report, in the second paragraph it will be noted that the bill, as it originally passed the House, embraced $184,529,007.30 of projects that were being carried out under public-works appropriations. Those projects have never been authorized by Congress except indirectly, insofar that many of them were authorized in the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman does not mean that they were specifically authorized by name in the National Recovery Act.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Never specifically, except by the Public Works Administration. Some of those measures were legally authorized by the Administration of Public Works and some of them were illegally authorized by that authority, as has been shown by the decision of the Supreme Court in the Parker Dam case. The purpose of embracing them in this bill is to give them complete legal status. Many of them are finished, all of them are far advanced in work. If this conference report is adopted it will give legal status to all of those measures and to many others to which I shall call attention a little further on.

Additional to the one-hundred-and-eighty-four-million-and-odd dollars adopted by the Administration of Public Works as embraced in our original bill, last April we also authorized $91,681,265 of projects which had not at that time been carried out or adopted by the Public Works Administration. Some of those items have since been adopted by that authority, though many have not.

After the bill went to the Senate it was very materially changed. The Senate added to the public-works projects which Congress has not authorized to the amount of $236,983,000 that were being carried out by the public-works appropriations. They also added $14,974,400, which the Public Works Administration has not up to this time adopted. They may do so hereafter; they may not; we do not know. From the $14,974,400 the conferees have secured a reduction of $2,106,150.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Was the two-million-and-odd dollars taken out by reason of the reduction of what is known as the "Harsen Island" project in Lake St. Claire?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is one of the main items. Another is the Washington Channel. The Senate adopted it wholly as a Federal project, and the conferees have put $389,000 back onto the District of Columbia, and those with one or two smaller items went to make up the $2,106,150. The projects in the $14,974,400 added by the Senate, so far as we know, are all regular. They were all adopted on reports of the Army engineers in due form and would have been adopted by the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors if the reports had been before us at that time. They are nearly all in response to resolutions adopted by the House committee, but it was impossible for the engineers to act upon all of them before the bill passed the House. These reports came in thereafter and were brought before the Commerce Committee of the Senate and adopted. The House conferees have no objection to them except insofar as shown in the report.

We have agreed, subject to the approval of the House and the Senate, on all Senate amendments except no. 71, and 71 is not now under consideration.

I have been asked the question by a number of Members why it is that we have agreed to so many Senate amendments. That is partially explained in what I have just stated. We have accepted all of them that in our judgment are regular and necessary in response to the demands of commerce. Full, complete, and favorable reports from the engineers of the War Department were submitted on each of the projects adopted.

We have also agreed to 68 surveys which have been asked for by Members of the Senate and embraced in the Senate reports. They, of course, have the same right we have to ask for these surveys. They did not cut out any of the 197 embraced in our original bill, and we did not cut out any of theirs, but are willing for them to be considered by the engineers and reported upon.

Many of you may not be familiar with the course of procedure in regard to these preliminary surveys, and I want to say that they involve practically no money whatever unless the engineers should decide from their preliminary investigations that they are meritorious and should receive more complete consideration, then a detailed survey is made. Perhaps not more than 1 out of 20 will be favorably considered by the War Department for further investigation, because they have at their fingers' ends complete data on almost every waterway in the United States. They can find out in a few hours whether or not there is any probable merit in these investigations that are called for, and will answer a vast majority of them without ever going to any further cost or expense or time.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I would like to know if it has been the procedure of Congress to include in a river and harbor bill projects that have nothing to do with river and harbor work.

Mr. MANSFIELD. For many years the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors has positively refused to consider such measures in an original bill. They have frequently been put in as amendments at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I do not know to what item the gentleman refers, but if an improvement is as to navigation or flood control, is it not properly in a river and harbor bill?

Mr. DONDERO. I might ask whether or not soil erosion or reclamation would be a river and harbor project, for that certainly is in this bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Does the gentleman have reference to section 71 or to other sections of the bill? We are not considering 71 now.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Rivers and Harbors Committee does not consider reclamation projects and has had no experience with reference to the advisability or value of any particular project. Is that true?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors does not have jurisdiction of those matters. There is another Committee of the House on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. To what does the Parker Dam and the Headgate Dam refer?

Mr. MANSFIELD. They are not under consideration now; those items appear in amendment 71.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I understand; but that is what the gentleman is inquiring about.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I call attention to amendments nos. 43 and 46. No. 43 grants permission for the dredging of a 6-foot channel from Kansas City to Sioux City, Iowa, to cost $77,000,000. It also gives permission for the erection of the Fort Peck Dam on the Missouri River, to cost $86,000,000. That is in amendment no. 43. In amendment no. 46 permission is given for the dredging of the 9-foot channel in the Mississippi River from the Missouri River to Minneapolis, to cost $124,000,000. The purpose of dredging these channels, as I understand it, is to continue the Inland Waterways Corporation, which was supposed to go out of business several years ago.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yielded for a question, if the gentleman please.

Mr. RICH. Does the Committee on Rivers and Harbors approve projects of this kind?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Replying to the gentleman, I may say that the Missouri River project was adopted by Congress in the river and harbor bill of 1927. The project for the Missouri River from its mouth up to Kansas City, a distance of 398 miles, was adopted in the river and harbor bill of 1910. Many of us were not born politically at that time. This project is now nearing completion as a 6-foot project. In the river and harbor bill of 1927, on the floor of the House and on motion of the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. Sears, a 6-foot project on the Missouri River was adopted from Kansas City to Sioux City, Iowa, a distance of approximately 400 miles. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors refused to adopt that because we did not have a report from the engineers of the War Department except one that was 20 years old, but it was put in the bill on the floor of the House. I shall not call names, but several Members here present voted to put it in the bill. I voted against it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, is it not a fact this money was expended by P. W. A. and not authorized by Congress for the work?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It has been authorized by Congress to the extent of $27,000,000.

Mr. RICH. The money was allocated, however, by the P. W. A. for this work.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The P. W. A. is putting up the money for the Fort Peck Dam, and also for the section between Kansas City and Sioux City. The project for the latter section was adopted in the river and harbor bill of 1927, but this Fort Peck Dam was not contemplated at that time. It grew out of a more complete survey under Document No. 308, which was adopted at the same time.

This is work carried out by the Public Works Administration. The purpose of it is to give 6 feet at low stage to the Missouri River from Sioux City to its mouth.

Mr. RICH. Then the principal reason here for the dam is to set the Government up in business so that it may compete with the railroads in that part of the country in the form of the Inland Waterways Corporation?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman will have to form his own conclusion as to that. Every man forms his own conclusion as to that. Every man forms his own conclusion with reference to those things. However, the project below Sioux City has been authorized for many years, as I stated.

In regard to the other one which the gentleman inquired about awhile ago, the deepening of the Mississippi River to the Twin Cities, may I say, that many years ago there was a 6-foot project there. Three dams were built and the Keokuk Dam was purchased. There was one dam built at Rock Island, the Hastings Dam, and the dam at Minneapolis. Those dams have been completed for a number of years. In the bill of 1930 a provision in regard to that was agreed to in the House and amended in the Senate on a tentative and not complete report of the engineers. The tentative report on which the Senate adopted it for a 9-foot project did not give the estimate of cost, but the engineers had not completed their studies. They recommended that all dams and locks that were being installed under the old 6-foot project be installed upon the basis of a 9-foot project; so that if Congress should thereafter change it to a 9-foot project it would save many millions of dollars in expense and these dams would not then have to be changed and modified at a tremendous cost.

The Senate, however, adopted it outright as a 9-foot project. Not knowing what the cost would be, they simply put in a provision, in order to get around Mr. Coolidge trying to hold down costs, calling for only seven and one-half million dollars in appropriations. There was $6,770,000 left over from the old 6-foot project, which made a total of $13,770,000 authorized by that act. That money has been expended. The Congress has not authorized the balance required to complete, though they have adopted the project at whatever cost it might involve.

The Public Works Administration has allotted $76,495,000 for the building of the locks and dams. This work has progressed for the last 2 years and many of them are nearly completed. I have no report as to what their present condition is, however. That work has been going on under the National Industrial Recovery Act for the past 2 years, and they are going to complete it, regardless of the passage of this river and harbor bill. The Senate put that in as one of the amendments here which the House conferees agreed to, believing that the money is going to be expended and, as a matter of fact, nearly all of it has been expended. The project has been authorized by Congress and we simply agree to legalize it.

Mr. RICH. May I ask the gentleman about one or two other items? Take item 50, involving the approval of a dam on the Monongahela River for flood control, asked for by the N. R. A., and to cost $12,000,000. May I also inquire about the item on the Columbia River?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Let us take them one at a time. The Tygart Dam was requested by Pittsburgh interests primarily for control of the floods where the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers come together at the city of Pittsburgh. General Brown, then Chief of Engineers, found in his report to the Public Works Administration that he did not consider it advisable upon the ground of flood control, but he would recommend it for three purposes. The first was for navigation, to supply water to locks and dams on the Monongahela River, some 14 in number, at low stage of water; second, for industrial use for the great industries located along the river; and, third, for the purpose of putting several thousand men to work who were then unemployed.

Mr. RICH. Was that ever approved by Congress?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It has not been. It is in the same category legally that the Parker Dam was. It was called for by the Public Works Administration and not approved by Congress, though it was recommended by the Chief of Engineers at that time. The money has already been expended and the work is practically completed.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe that before projects of this kind are started they should be approved by Congress?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; that has always been my contention.

Mr. RICH. May I ask the gentleman about one more project. I refer to item 68, covering the Bonneville Dam on the Columbia River, which is going to create 430,000 kilowatt-hours and will cost $43,000,000. Has that been approved by the Congress, and, if so, when?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Here is the report of the engineers on the Bonneville Dam. The estimated cost is placed at $40,200,000. I hold in my hand the report of the Chief of Engineers which recommends this project. It is in all respects regular. The sum of $32,440,700 has already been allotted by the Public Works Administration; consequently the difference between $32,000,000 and $40,440,700 is approximately $8,000,000.

Mr. RICH. I take my figures from the report of the House committee, amendment no. 68, which calls for $43,900,000.

Mr. BOLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BOLTON. Is it not correct to state, as the Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee has already stated, that many of these projects not authorized by Congress were initiated by the P. W. A. and certain moneys allotted for the purpose of carrying out the project? Now the P. W. A. is asking the Congress to authorize the appropriation of additional money in order to complete the projects initiated by them but never passed on by the Congress?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not think they are asking for additional money. If they are legalized they have that authority.

Mr. BOLTON. As I understand it, amendments were agreed to in the Senate involving $299,000,000, many of which were not authorized by Congress and for which the P. W. A. has allotted $226,000,000. How does the P. W. A. expect those projects to be completed except by the additional appropriation of money by the Congress?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. This conference report does not include the authorization of appropriations for these projects.

Mr. BOLTON. The whole bill is an authorization for appropriations. It does not carry the appropriations, of course.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Take the Parker Dam or the Grand Coulee Dam; there is no appropriation at all.

Mr. BOLTON. I am not discussing those items.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman keeps asking the Chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee about them and then I do not get a chance to answer.

Mr. BOLTON. If the gentleman will permit, I am discussing the authorizations in general, the Fort Peck Dam, the Missouri River and the Mississippi River items, where we are asked to complete work started by the P. W. A.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I may state that under the National Recovery Act the Public Works Administration had authority to allot money on river and harbor projects, provided they were authorized by Congress or had the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. They did not expend any money except upon projects that had one or the other of these recommendations, but in the Parker Dam case, which was the case that went before the Supreme Court, the facts developed that Congress had not authorized the investigation for Parker Dam, but that the Public Works Administration, on its own initiative, had called upon the Chief of Engineers for a recommendation, and he had given it.

Now, the Court held in that case that the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers must have been in response to an investigation ordered by Congress and not an investigation ordered by the Public Works Administration, and on that ground the Parker Dam case was knocked out.

The Grand Coulee Dam is in the same situation, the Tygart Dam is in the same situation, and many of these reclamation projects are in the same situation, and if suits are brought, in all probability injunctions will be sustained in these cases the same as in the Parker Dam case. However, the Parker Dam case is the only one upon which work has been stopped because it is the only one to which the decision of the Court applied.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Are all of them included in the conference report?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; some of them, but not all of them.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I mean all the projects carried by the Public Works Administration.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; a great many of them went out under amendment 72.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has consumed 30 minutes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I must yield the floor, as the gentleman from New Jersey controls the rest of the time.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself particularly to that part of the conference report which reports in disagreement amendment numbered 71, relating to the Grand Coulee Dam.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Would it not be well to wait until we dispose of this matter? The amendment the gentleman refers to will come up separately and there will be 1 hour of debate, I am advised.

Mr. HOPE. That is perfectly agreeable to me, but the time for discussion is limited and I hope the gentleman will have no objection to my taking some time on that item now?

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; I do not object.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, whatever I may say at this time is said in defense and in support of a consistent land policy for this country. This Congress within the last 2 years, and as late as this session of Congress, has approved the policy on the part of the Government of restricting agricultural production within the limits of possible consumption, and as a result of this policy we have taken out of cultivation approximately 38,000,000 acres of land this year—38,000,000 acres of good, arable, fertile land.

The other day when we adopted the conference report on the amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, we made available a large sum of money for the purchase of marginal agricultural land. If we adopt this Senate amendment approving the construction of the Grand Coulee Dam, and we are being asked to reverse this policy and adopt one of bringing additional land into cultivation—additional marginal land, because that is what this land is. It is true that if we spend $179 an acre, as we will have to do to bring this land into cultivation, and if the farmer spends $40 or $50 or a larger amount per acre more in putting the land in shape so he can irrigate it—it is true that after all this expenditure is made it will be possible to grow abundant crops on the land, and yet we all know that on the basis of prices of agricultural products at this time, and on the basis of what prices are likely to be at any time in the future, no farmer can make money or can break even on land costing as much as this land. It is as definitely submarginal for this reason as the poorest land in the country. Nevertheless, it will produce an immense amount of farm crops, thus adding to surpluses and undoing the effects of any reduction or control programs.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How many acres are involved?

Mr. HOPE. One million two hundred thousand are to be brought under cultivation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is not the plan of the Grand Coulee Dam. That land is to cost $80 an acre.

Mr. HOPE. I am getting my figures from the report of the Bureau of Reclamation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. But the gentleman is leaving out of consideration the power which goes along with it and which will account for half the cost.

Mr. HOPE. Oh, if you sell the power and make a profit, you will take some of it to pay for the land, I suppose.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There will be the income taxes on the land on the reclamation, and the Government will get a revenue of $15,000,000 out of the power.

Mr. HOPE. The gentleman can indulge in that kind of bookkeeping if he wishes to. The report by the Bureau of Reclamation, which will have charge of this project, shows that it is going to cost $179 an acre to put the water on this land. Now, the gentleman from Washington says we are going to pay for it in this way and in that way and in another way, but that does not alter the fact that it is going to cost someone that much money.

I am telling you what this will cost. If the farmer does not pay it, we are subsidizing him and bringing additional marginal land into cultivation when we have thirty-five to thirty-eight million surplus acres now. [Applause.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to protest primarily against this amendment 71. I do this because it is a change of the policy of Congress established by unanimous consent over a period of years.

At a time when we could use additional farm products we developed, and there was an acceleration of development of, these many irrigation projects. Later we found we had too much land under cultivation and a surplus of farm products.

It was tentatively agreed in the House and in the Senate on both sides of the aisle, by those interested in irrigation and those interested in agriculture, that there would be no new irrigation developments until needed; and that as a result of the letting up of this constant effort to bring more land into cultivation, the Government would go along with the projects which were then being operated, thereby keeping the people going who lived on the farms. That policy was carried out by the consent of everybody, but along came this part of the new deal which conferred this unlimited authority on people not familiar with the situation, and as a result projects like the Grand Coulee have been started without any authority on the part of Congress. As in many other instances, bureaucratic judgment has been substituted for established congressional policy. There was to be a low dam and a high dam, and the $63,000,000, instead of being put into the low dam, as was intended, is being put into a foundation for the high dam. The purpose now is to build the high dam and not the low dam. Put the money allocated in the foundation and the nose of the camel will be under the tent. This is more coercion.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. For a brief question.

Mr. GREEN. Will not the gentleman admit that these projects which he has enumerated as having been initiated under the extraordinary power are all in the public interest?

Mr. MICHENER. No; I will not. On the contrary, each and every one of them, with one or two exceptions, have been reported against by the Board of Engineers and have been constantly reported against by the committees of this House. But along comes some bureaucrat or someone given extraordinary power and, without further investigation, he starts the project with lump-sum appropriation money and now seeks this method of completing the job and carrying out another socialistic dream. Let us stop spending money to take land out and at the same time spending more money to bring into cultivation more land.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The gentleman understands, does he not, that the matter to which he now speaks is not at present before the House. That matter comes up in the debate which is to follow, on amendment numbered 71.

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. I heard the gentleman when he started state that we would take care of everything except no. 71, but there was an extensive conversation held down near the gentleman and no one else could hear it, and we assumed that he was through with that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, the proposal contained in Senate amendment 71, to complete the Grand Coulee Dam, is not one to redeem land but one to create additional agricultural land, and to do it at a time when it is the policy of the administration and of Congress to secure a better balance between agricultural production and agricultural markets by withdrawing surplus acreage from cultivation. This is another instance in which we do not permit the right hand to know what the left hand is doing. One day we take land out of cultivation at an expense of hundreds of millions of dollars to the consumers of the country, and the next day, at a cost of hundreds of millions to the taxpayers, we put more land into cultivation. It would perhaps be an exaggeration to say that a nation that tolerates such an inconsistent and self-defeating policy is insane, but it is no exaggeration to say that any individual who followed a similar course would be booked for a hearing in a probate court.

It has been estimated that the Grand Coulee project when completed will bring 2,000,000 additional acres into cultivation. As a result of the acreage-reduction activities of the administration, there has been effected an actual reduction, not of 15 percent as was planned, but of 6 percent; 1 acre out of every 16 formerly devoted to wheat and corn has been withdrawn from cultivation. The addition of 2,000,000 acres of irrigated land will, therefore, nullify all that the administration has thus far accomplished in the matter of acreage reduction throughout an area embracing 32,000,000 acres of land already in cultivation. It will do more than nullify it, for the added 2,000,000 acres, being irrigated land, will produce more than the land which was withdrawn. Even the farmers of the general section intended to be benefited have everything to lose and nothing to gain from this project; it will only give them more competition in markets that are already glutted. The real beneficiaries will be banks, railroads, insurance companies, and land speculators, ready to profit from unearned increment.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Not now. The cost of this project will not be $63,000,000 as you may suppose; $63,000,000 is only the beginning. The ultimate cost of the completed project will be $393,000,000, an additional burden to be placed upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of America. I submit that, considering the billions we have laid upon the bent backs of the people during the last 2 years, the time has come to call a halt. In my opinion, and, I believe, in the opinion of almost every Member of the House, we must begin at last to heed the danger signal of "Stop, look, and listen." The effect of the adoption of this amendment will be virtually to surrender to Secretary Ickes a power which under the Constitution is lodged solely and exclusively in the Congress of the United States—the power to appropriate money. If we make it possible for heads of administrative departments to make unlawful expenditures and unauthorized commitments, and then to come here and, under the lash of the administration, compel us to apply the rubber stamp to those expenditures and commitments, we, in effect, surrender a power which the Constitution has given to us, and to us only.

We surrender the power for which Anglo-Saxon people have fought since the days of King John. The development of democratic institutions in English-speaking countries has centered around the battle for the control of the purse strings. I want to sound this note of warning, that if once we sacrifice that control, we sacrifice democratic government itself; we hasten the day when, after the authority of the legislative department and the powers of the representatives of the people have been curtailed, cut off one by one, there will finally be but a shadow left of the democracy vouchsafed by the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON] has expired.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If I am in order, I want to insist that the debate be confined to the matter under consideration by the House, which does not embrace the Grand Coulee Dam at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair trusts Members will speak in order and confine themselves to the matter under consideration.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the Grand Coulee Dam project is not directly involved in the motion of the gentleman from Texas now pending before the House. As I understand it, that motion is to accept the conference report, but the conference report involves a part of amendment 71 and rejects all of amendment 72. The Grand Coulee Dam project is contained in amendment 71; so that the whole subject matter is more or less involved in the motion before the House in the conference report. The debate is so limited that I understood those in charge of it have thought it wise to discuss the general subject in the debate on this motion as well as on the next one.

I had occasion sometime ago to read the hearings before the Committee on Flood Control relating to H. R. 8057, which is in substance the same as amendments 71 and 72, except the provision relating to the Head Gate Dam. I should like to say for the benefit of those Members of the House who have not had the opportunity to read those hearings that they are very enlightening. Under the cross-examination of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON], it is very apparent that those in charge of the projects have nothing but the most hazy idea of how much they are going to cost. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] asked the Assistant Solicitor of the Interior Department and the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation question after question, time after time, for some definite information about the cost of these projects, and at no time could he get any definite information whatever out of either one of them. They did promise to file with the committee, to be incorporated in the hearings at a later date, the estimated costs; but in reading the hearings very carefully, I am unable to find where they ever did that.

As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] at one point in his cross-examination said, "This bill is almost as big as the National Industrial Recovery Act, the P. W. A., or the Emergency Relief Act", in its scope, trying as it does to validate everything that had been done under the N. R. A. in the way of making improvements upon rivers, and in addition to validating what had already been done, authorizing plans which were back in the heads of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation and others who were developing these projects. That, in effect, is what Senate amendments 71 and 72 attempt to do. The Grand Coulee part of it alone, and its allied projects, have been estimated to cost $393,000,000—that one project alone. So that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] was justified in saying that the whole bill is almost as big as the National Industrial Recovery Act, the P. W. A., and the Emergency Relief Act. As the gentleman from Mississippi has well pointed out, these projects were at no time ever authorized by the Congress. The National Industrial Recovery Act, as it passed the House of Representatives, provided that they should not be undertaken until authorized by Congress or approved by the Chief of Engineers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. MAPES. In the Senate the provision which provided that they should be approved by the Congress was stricken out, so that as the bill finally became law the only provision was that they should not be undertaken or developed unless approved by the Chief of Engineers. Even that provision was not complied with. They were carried on under the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, without the approval of the Chief of Engineers, and the Supreme Court said if they were put upon navigable rivers, the improvements were invalid. Then they come in with a bill which tries to blanket them all, whether upon navigable or nonnavigable streams. So as to be sure that they would not be limited at all and would have blanket authority to go ahead as they saw fit, they come in with this proposition to validate everything that had been done, and to authorize the improvements that are contemplated, without limit; that is, those contemplated by the Bureau of Reclamation, whatever they may be. That is what this legislation proposed to do. That is the reason why it is hard to separate these two items in the consideration before the House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the Chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Mr. MANSFIELD.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had made it as clear as I knew how, but perhaps I undershot the mark. This question of reclamation, embraced in amendments nos. 71 and 72, is not now before the House for consideration. The Senate itself, through its conferees, has receded on amendment no. 72. They put it in the bill. Then they took it out. It is not before us for a vote at all.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did they not take out amendment 72 because the House conferees agreed to bring back 71 for consideration in the House; and by doing that many projects to which there was no objection at all have been excluded from being taken care of by this bill, and the only one about which there is any controversy is now before us, or will be in the consideration of amendment no. 71?

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. I understood the gentleman to say that the question of reclamation was entirely bound up in amendment no. 72, which is not before the House.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I said no. 71 and no. 72, and no. 71 will be before the House.

Mr. CULKIN. But the Grand Coulee project will be before the House.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That will come next. Then we can discuss that and have an hour's debate on it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Whatever be the reason, the fact remains that adoption of the conference report adopts the bill with amendment 72 out of it.

Mr. MANSFIELD. With amendment 72 out entirely, yes; and no. 71 not considered at all.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No. 71 will come up for further consideration.

Mr. MANSFIELD. That will come later.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. BOLTON. I understood the gentleman to say that the matter under discussion related solely to river and harbor improvement. It is true, is it not, that there are irrigation possibilities in power proposals in connection with what we are discussing now?

Mr. MANSFIELD. We have thoroughly discussed that.

Mr. BOLTON. Other irrigation projects, and so forth.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors particularly had jurisdiction over all improvements of rivers and harbors and did until the Flood Control Committee was created. Except for flood control we still have the power.

Mr. BOLTON. That is what I was trying to bring out. The Fort Peck Dam embraces power also, does it not?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Incidentally.

Mr. BOLTON. Also irrigation.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Primarily it is for navigation, according to the engineers.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. In the course of the gentleman's discussion he stated that if the conference report were adopted it would legalize all the acts of the Army engineers and the Public Works Administration, did he not?

Mr. MANSFIELD. All that are embraced in this bill.

Mr. BEITER. In that section of the report dealing with the Great Lakes-Hudson River waterway, I notice that the House has receded and has adopted the Senate amendment. The gentleman knows that the House is establishing a precedent in allotting $5,000,000 for the improvement of the Erie Canal from Three Rivers to the Hudson River.

Mr. MANSFIELD. The House is not doing that. The Public Works Administration is doing that.

Mr. BEITER. But we are legalizing that.

Mr. MANSFIELD. No; we are not.

Mr. BEITER. Earlier in his remarks the gentleman stated that if this conference report were adopted it would legalize all these acts.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not that one. I am speaking of these others that are primarily mentioned. We have nothing in the world to do with that $5,000,000. That is being put up out of the $4,800,000,000. That is entirely out of our control. We turned it over to the Public Works Administration without a string, a lock, or a latchet.

Mr. BEITER. A precedent is being established, though, by allotting $5,000,000 to a State-owned project.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We have no concern with that whatever. That comes under the Public Works Administration. That is not embraced in this bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not think I said anything that in any way reflects upon the gentleman's committee. I appreciate the splendid work the Rivers and Harbors Committee has been doing and is doing. I know that the chairman of the committee himself would not have this item in the bill if there was any way by which he could have prevented it.

I hope the gentleman will go back with the moral backing of the House and that he will be able to further improve the bill and not make a "pork barrel" committee out of the gentleman's splendid committee and ruin the work which the gentleman, as chairman, has been doing through all these years to make his a committee of real standing.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was adopted.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 71: Page 33, line 17:

"SEC. 2. That for the purpose of controlling floods, improving navigation, regulating the flow of the streams of the United States, providing for storage and for the delivery of the stored waters thereof, for the reclamation of public lands and Indian reservations, and other beneficial uses, and for the generation of electric energy as a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertakings, the projects known as "Parker Dam" on the Colorado River and "Grand Coulee Dam" on the Columbia River, are hereby authorized and adopted, and all contracts and agreements which have been executed in connection therewith are hereby validated and ratified, and the President, acting through such agents as he may designate, is hereby authorized to construct, operate, and maintain dams, structures, canals, and incidental works necessary to such projects, and in connection therewith to make and enter into any and all necessary contracts including contracts amendatory of or supplemental to those hereby validated and ratified. The construction by the Secretary of the Interior of a dam in and across the Colorado River at or near Head Gate Rock, Ariz., and structures, canals, and incidental works necessary in connection therewith is hereby authorized, and none of the waters conserved, used, or appropriated under the works hereby authorized shall be charged against the waters allocated to the upper basin by the Colorado River compact, nor shall any priority be established against such upper basin by reason of such conservation, use, or appropriation."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and concur in the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out amendment no. 71, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"71. That for the purpose of controlling floods, improving navigation, regulating the flow of the streams of the United States, providing for storage and for the delivery of the stored waters thereof, for the reclamation of public lands and Indian reservations, and other beneficial uses, and for the generation of electric energy as a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertakings, the project known as 'Parker Dam' on the Colorado River is hereby authorized and adopted, and all contracts and agreements which have been executed in connection therewith are hereby validated and ratified, and the President, acting through such agents as he may designate, is hereby authorized to construct, operate, and maintain dams, structures, canals, and incidental works necessary to this project, and in connection therewith to make and enter into any and all necessary contracts including contracts amendatory of or supplemental to those hereby validated and ratified. The construction by the Secretary of the Interior of a dam in and across the Colorado River at or near Head Gate Rock, Ariz., and structures, canals, and incidental works necessary in connection therewith, is hereby authorized, and none of the waters, conserved, used, or appropriated under the works hereby authorized shall be charged against the waters allocated to the upper basin by the Colorado River compact, nor shall any priority be established against such upper basin by reason of such conservation, use, or appropriation; nor shall said dam, structures, canals, and works, or any of them, be used as the basis of making any such charge, or establishing any such priority or right, and all contracts between the United States and the users of said water from or by means of said instrumentalities shall provide against the making of any such charge or claim or the establishment of any priority right or claim to any part or share of the water of the Colorado River allocated to the Upper Basin by the Colorado River Compact, and all use of said instrumentalities shall be in compliance with the conditions and provisions of said Colorado River Compact and the Boulder Canyon Project Act."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL moves to amend the motion as follows: In line 7 of the amendment strike out the word "is" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and Grand Coulee Dam on the Columbia River are."

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I will consume very little time. The controversy now is upon the Grand Coulee, about which we have heard so much. In the conference the Senate conferees willingly receded on amendment no. 72, but they strenuously contended for 71. We were unable to agree, in view of the fact that on the day the conferees were appointed I promised the House that if either 71 or 72 remained in the bill after conference with the Senate, I would personally use my effort to bring it back to the House for instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, amendment 71 is identical with the bill which has been reported by the Flood Control Committee and for which a rule has been reported. The bills are now on the calendar. It is known as the "Parker Dam" bill, except for the Headgate Dam. What the Senate did was to take up bodily this legislation which had no reference to rivers and harbors and place it in the rivers and harbors bill. Amendment no. 72 was section 2 of that bill, so that legislation, with which we are dealing, was placed in the rivers and harbors bill. Amendment 71 in the bill is just as offensive as 72.

The gentleman knows the attitude of the Rules Committee and many other people on that matter. Section 2 of the Parker Dam bill pending in the House is amendment no. 72 in this bill, which falls by the wayside. We propose to call up the Parker Dam bill and pass it, eliminating section 2. That can be done and is the orderly way to legislate, but 71 should not go into this bill just to take in another probably three or four dams.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentlewoman from Arizona.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Does the gentleman from New York think we can take this legislation up in an orderly way in the time remaining in this session?

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the present method of legislating had not been followed, we would have had the Parker Dam bill up for consideration before this.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman referred to the Parker Dam. Is the Grand Coulee project in there, too?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Grand Coulee project is in there also. It is identical with amendment 71 with the exception of the Headgate Dam, and section 2 is identical with amendment 72. We propose to strike out section 2, the blanket authority.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If we adopt amendment 71, it would be just the same as the Parker bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, no. It has another dam in there that was turned down by the House committee. The House committee would not report it out with that provision. When the House committee came before the Rules Committee, it was explained to the Rules Committee and we reported it out, but when it gets over to another body this other dam denied by the House committee was put in there, and the situation now is take it or leave it. The Parker Dam people and the Grand Coulee people do not suffer if they vote down amendment 71. We will call up the bill involving the Parker Dam and the Grand Coulee Dam.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman think there will be time for the passage of those bills by the Senate?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I will have to decline to yield further at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief explanation. It is immaterial to me what the House does. I do not really consider this a river and harbor project primarily, although it is a structure being placed in a navigable river and partially intended for navigation and power purposes.

When we were in conference we succeeded in reaching an agreement with the Senate conferees to this extent: We agreed to take the Parker Dam and to legalize it, together with all the contracts that had been made in connection therewith. That is the only project on which work has been suspended, and I am told that there is now involved an overhead cost amounting to $1,000 a day to the city of Los Angeles. We think it ought to be legalized. Our conferees unanimously agreed to legalize it, and we also agreed to take in the Head Gate Dam with the Taylor amendment added. The Senate conferees agreed to that, but they demanded the Grand Coulee Dam, to which our conferees did not agree.

Carrying out my promise to the House, I am bringing it back to you for instruction. It is immaterial to me whether you instruct for or against. It is a matter I have no personal interest in whatever. It is remote from my section of the country, and I want the House to use its own judgment.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BEITER. However, if the House rejects amendment 71, there is a possibility of not having a rivers and harbors bill passed at this session?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It will have to be disposed of in some way, or there will be no river and harbor bill. We have to meet the Senate on every section and on every amendment to the bill.

Mr. DONDERO. The objectionable feature in amendment 71 is the Grand Coulee Dam?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is what the conferees of the House thought was really objectionable.

Mr. DONDERO. That is the question we are going to be called upon to vote on this afternoon?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The motion which I made, and the amendment of the gentleman from Washington, enables the Members of the House to fairly and clearly understand it and vote on whether or not they want the Grand Coulee Dam.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentlewoman from Arizona.

Mrs. GREENWAY. I appreciate that what the gentleman from Texas said about its being remote is true, but the Colorado River would not be remote to a single American if he knew the real situation. If development is not allowed at once on our side of the line, and I am not speaking of Arizona, California, Nevada, or any of the other seven basin States, but on the American side of the line, Mexico will get the benefit of the regulation of the Colorado River waters by means of the Boulder Dam.

There are in Mexico thousands of acres ready to use this water which we have at vast expense to the American taxpayer regulated at Boulder Dam. We are, through failure to develop the land on either side of the Colorado River, not in a position to put these waters to immediate use. This is a national issue, and we should recognize its importance and prevent benefits going to Mexico through prior use—that are not in the allotted program—and instead develop American reclamation project at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield, so that I may ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by making the change which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL modifies his amendment by adding at the end of the Hill amendment the following: "And in line 12 of the Mansfield amendment strike out the words 'this project' and insert in lieu thereof the words 'such projects.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Now, Mr. Speaker, just one further word. My motion is offered merely for the purpose of getting the matter before the House in a parliamentary way, so that the gentleman from Washington may take it as a basis for his amendment. I simply move to adopt that portion of amendment 71 which the conferees agree to, both House and Senate, while by his amendment there will be embraced the Grand Coulee Dam, which I left out.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. As I understand, the gentleman from Washington has included in his amendment the Taylor amendment.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes; and has put Grand Coulee back in.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, a vote, then, for the Hill amendment will be a vote to put the Grand Coulee back in?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is right.

Mr. MICHENER. And a vote for the gentleman's motion is to take out the Grand Coulee?

Mr. MANSFIELD. That is the effect of it; and his amendment will be voted on first.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. Is the statement correct that the completion of the Grand Coulee will cost $393,000,000?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Not according to the engineers' reports.

Mr. BIERMANN. What is the cost?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The estimated cost of it is $63,000,000, and $38,000,000 has been allotted.

Now, what the gentleman may have in mind is that the Reclamation Bureau may hereafter, with permission of the Congress, add to it a great many reclamation projects. This has not been authorized, but this project could be used as a basis for such projects, and they would probably cost several hundred million dollars.

Mr. BIERMANN. But the work that is now contemplated, plus——

Mr. MANSFIELD. The estimated cost is $63,000,000 and $38,000,000 has already been allotted.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SEGER], to be equally divided between them.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be notified when I have used 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, you have heard this vicious attack upon the Grand Coulee. You have heard three speeches from the gentlemen from Michigan, and one other gentleman from Michigan has been diligent in asking questions indicating his hostility. I wonder what the objection of Michigan is to this Grand Coulee project.

This is not a reclamation project. This is a power dam and there is no reclamation in the program for its construction at this time. There is reclamation in the Head Gate, and they are not objecting to that, and yet they base their whole argument on the proposition that this is reclamation. I want the Head Gate Dam in here, I want the Parker Dam—they are both needed and ought to be authorized, but why do they want to cut out the Grand Coulee Dam?

Here is the situation with reference to that. There has been spent one million and a half dollars in the exploration of this great project. It has been determined to be a feasible and economic project from a power standpoint and as an aid to a reclamation project, but there is no reclamation in this particular measure at this time.

Under authority of Congress, the War Department engineers made a survey of the Columbia River system and they filed a report. This report set out how this great stream should be developed for navigation, for power, for flood control, and for irrigation. This report is available to the Members of Congress and the statement here that the War Department and the committees of this Congress and the Congress itself have turned down this project is absolutely without foundation. There has been no such report. This project has never been turned down by the War Department or by the Congress or by any committee of the Congress.

Under the Public Works bill the Public Works Administrator is constructing the dam at Grand Coulee. The contract for its construction has been let, and the contract is now being executed. The contractors have been at work on the dam for something over a year.

They spent $20,000,000, or in that neighborhood, completing the foundation. They have spent an additional sum of money to complete a railroad to haul the heavy material that goes into the structure.

We have $38,000,000 allocated for the construction of the dam, and yet these opponents, these representatives of power, come here and want you to cut Grand Coulee power dam out of this bill.

They are willing to take the other dam, the Head Gate Dam, and authorize it by Congress, but they try to cut out Grand Coulee Dam. Why? Because it is the greatest power dam that can be constructed on any stream in the United States. Mr. Hugh L. Cooper, the outstanding engineer of the United States, stated before the Irrigation and Reclamation Committee that this dam would create power at Grand Coulee at a cost of 1.2 mills per kilowatt-hour—the cheapest power on earth. We want that power.

When that dam is completed and the power installed, the Government will get all the money back in 30 years' time. It will not cost the Government a penny that it will not get back.

Not only that, but in 25 years in the future there can be reclaimed 1,200,000 acres of land that can be used and the power will be able to reduce the cost of that reclamation to settlers of the land so that it will not cost more than $80 an acre and $4 a year for maintenance.

It is the cheapest power on earth and will not cost a penny that the Government will not receive back. Another thing, the Treasury of the United States will get $15,000,000 net return per year from the proceeds of this power after it has repaid its cost of construction. Show me another power project that equals that in this country. It is not a leaf-raking project, but a construction project. Why should Michigan and New York object to this project when it would increase the purchasing power of these settlers?

These are great manufacturing States. They need purchasers of the manufactured products. The Columbia Basin area, when reclaimed, will buy from eastern manufacturers 250,000 carloads of goods a year. Some people are too blind to see their own advantage.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I agree with what the gentleman has said, and I want to say that the people of my State are with you in the development of the Grand Coulee on the Columbia River, the greatest power river in all the world.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I appreciate that. That is the issue, it is not reclamation, because there is no reclamation in it and there will not be any reclamation in this for 15 or 20 or 25 years, and the Lord knows what we will need in the way of additional land by that time; but say that it is brought into cultivation tomorrow, we could take people out of these drought-stricken areas and off of submarginal farm lands and put them where they can make a living on 10 acres of land, and have the conveniences of modern life, and develop a standard of civilization of which we would all be proud.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does not the gentleman think that the criticism coming from the Republicans at this time is to embarrass the administration, because millions of dollars have been spent, and if this project is stopped at this time it would be pointed out as a colossal blunder?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Of course that is it, there is no question about that.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. KVALE. I just want to say to the gentleman that I am in thorough sympathy with his purposes and with what the gentleman has said, but for the benefit of the conservationists I deplore the danger to the salmon fisheries, the annual run of salmon, and I hope the gentleman will discuss a little bit from that point of view and tell us about the provisions for fisheries and hatcheries which are said to be inadequate, according to their estimates.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There will be ample provision made for hatcheries below the dam. There is not going to be a depletion of the salmon resources. We do not want to deplete them; they are a great asset to our country. We would be the last people on earth to deplete that asset. That will be taken care of handsomely by adequate hatcheries which will provide a much larger spawn of young salmon to go back to the salt water and return as they do now. There is nothing to that argument at all. That is one of our natural resources that we will conserve.

Mr. FIESINGER. Is there any present use for that power? The gentleman talks about $15,000,000 revenue annually. Would not business have to be developed first before you can get that revenue?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The use of power is increasing in that country at the rate of 9½ percent per annum, and additional industries will come in the minute you have cheap power.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman should not forget that all the Bonneville power was offered to be taken by one firm.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. They pick it up like that. The trouble is not going to be in finding a market but in furnishing sufficient power for the demand. We will solve the rural electrification problem in that section.

Mr. FIESINGER. But there is no present market, is there?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Absolutely there is. These lines can be run 300 miles to the big communities, and when this power is put into the homes of the farmers at a rate that they can afford to pay, there will be electrification all through those Pacific Northwest States, and they will have power to heat and light the houses and to light the cow barns and to run machinery and every operation that goes along with domestic life—cheap power.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Yes.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is it not a fact that in interconnected lines of these power systems Spokane and Portland and Seattle and all those great cities can avail themselves of this power.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. You can go to California, Idaho, and Montana, and all through Oregon with these power lines, these power lines can be connected up to furnish power where there is a scarcity of power. There is no dearth of a market for the power. The land on which this dam is being built is being condemned by the Federal Government under the power of eminent domain, for navigation and flood control. When we get the dam finished we will have a lake 150 miles long. It will serve the interest of a great inland empire as an inland lake on which navigation can be carried on.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. And just who owns all the land in that empire?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It is owned largely by private individuals, but it is being appraised, and it will be sold at its actual value and not a speculative value.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. It is practically valueless at the present time?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Practically valueless.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The gentleman says the Government is going to take it over in the process of developing this tremendous project.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It is going to take over the land to be flooded by the reservoir back of the dam.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Not this land that will be irrigated?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. No; but we are going to keep the price down to the appraised value and there will be no speculation.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. What about the millions of acres of land owned by speculators who have been furthering this proposition for 15 years?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We are going to tell those people that they must take the appraised value of the land or they will not get water on it, and we can control that matter. That was done on the Ellensburg project, where they put appraisers on the lands and said to the people, "You take this value or you will not have any water on the land. We do not propose to let the speculators come in on it.

This is what Secretary of War Hurley said about this development:

> Consideration of the development of the Columbia River should include the major project set forth in the report of this department now before Congress for the consideration of a dam and reservoir at Grand Coulee above the mouth of the Snake River for the development of power mainly, but possibly in the future the development of irrigation.

That was the Secretary of War.

Some mention was made here that the Chief of Engineers of the War Department had condemned this proposition. That is not true. This is what the Chief of Engineers said in his letter:

> Irrigation as a part of the combined development of the Columbia River is not at the present time economical, considered alone.

Now, then, he meant if you built an irrigation project there that would cost $180 an acre, it would not be economical, but if you built it, together with this power project, so that the proceeds from the power could be applied in part payment for the reclamation of the land and reduce it to about $80 an acre, it would be economical. He made no report upon that basis. That is exactly what the plan is for the future reclamation. The present program is the development of power, so that our people can have the advantages that your people down in the Tennessee Valley have. We want to develop our country. We cannot develop it until we get this power first. Finally, along in 15 or 20 years, we do expect to reclaim that land, but you will not have any competition in the Middle West or in the East by reason of this reclaimed land. The fact is that the irrigated land today furnishes about 1 percent of the total agricultural products of the country. Last year it went down to seven-tenths of 1 percent. There is nothing to be frightened about in the reclamation of this land, even though it should be reclaimed tomorrow, but when it comes 15 or 20 years from now, certainly it is not a problem which should cause gentlemen down here at this time any concern.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

I want to appeal to the Members of this House to stand by us and save for us that great project. It is the only great project which we have in the Pacific Northwest. It is the one thing, if and when we develop it, that would make us economically equal to any other part of the country. We ask you to help us develop that great natural asset. We have the Columbia River, the greatest power river on earth. We have these arid acres of land, 1,200,000, right in the heart of the eastern part of our State. In 15 or 20 years, by virtue of this dam and the power created, if we can reclaim that land, then we will have taken the heart out of that desert and made fertile lands upon which the homes of many people who are now on the submarginal lands may build prosperous homes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. On the Columbia River there is the Bonneville Dam and reservoir. Is that a power project?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. That is a power project, way down below.

Mr. EKWALL. And I will say it is a good one, too.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. How far from this project is it? Is there any necessity for both of these power projects?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is plenty of room for both of them. We are for the Bonneville Dam, too. The Grand Coulee Dam is the key dam in the whole plan of the War Department scheme for the improvement of that river. It is this dam that equalizes the flow of all the river down below. It will deepen the channel of the Columbia River on an average 5 feet by evening the flow, so that we could have barge and boat navigation on the Columbia River below there. The plan calls for other dams between Bonneville and Grand Coulee, but they are not now being considered and probably will not be considered for many years to come. This Grand Coulee Dam is the one in the upper reaches of the river to be built, because it is an important key dam to even the flow of water and all the development below that point in the river.

Now, we appeal to you. They want to cut us out of this project. They say that after you have spent $20,000,000 already and our contractors are on the job; they want to destroy all that simply because somebody does not want power developed in this country. I want you to bear in mind this is a power dam. Ultimately we expect to reclaim land, but there is no use being exercised about that until the next generation comes on.

Mr. EKWALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I yield.

Mr. EKWALL. The gentleman mentioned Republicans. I want the gentleman to know there are two Republicans, my colleague [Mr. MOTT] and I, who are with you on this proposition.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I know that. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, we have had a most interesting discussion by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] on the Grand Coullee project. The gentleman made the statement that this was largely a power project; that there was no reclamation in it. I hold in my hand the testimony of Dr. Mead, of the Reclamation Service, who appeared before the House Committee on Flood Control.

Here is Mr. Mead's testimony appearing before the Flood Control Committee in regard to this project. I think it is enlightening, and I hope he knew what he was talking about.

Mr. MEAD. The total cost of the dam and other plants is about $180,000,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. How much has the Government allocated to that in public works?

Mr. MEAD. The allocation was $63,000,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will that complete that unit of it?

Mr. MEAD. No; it is still going on. It is expected to get more as it is needed.

This $63,000,000 you have heard about is the preliminary step in the construction of this $180,000,000 project. The gentleman from Washington states that it is a power project. It is a power project. It is a power project to put water on this arid land. There is no sale nor need for additional power in this section. They tell us this land is arid and that they will use the power to raise the water. They are going to raise the water with the electric power that is generated at this dam.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman contend that this power cannot be carried over high-tension lines to Seattle, Tacoma, and the other great industrial centers on the Pacific coast?

Mr. CARLSON. No. The power can be carried by high-tension lines to any of these cities, but that power is going to be used entirely to put this water on the land, the same as is proposed to do at the Parker Dam.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. Does not the gentleman know that with this plan for a low dam we cannot develop an acre of irrigation?

Mr. CARLSON. That is correct. This low dam will not irrigate a single acre; it is power only, and, therefore, in my opinion it is valueless at this time. There is no market for power, and it will not be of any use to this country until we get a high dam which will let them irrigate the land.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield, as I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman made a statement that is far from the facts.

Mr. CARLSON. I would ask the gentleman to get his own time, if he does not mind. A high dam is needed to put water on the land. If power were generated it would have to be sold to outlying cities, and you have other dams to take care of the power situation.

It has been stated that this is not a reclamation project. I contend that it is and I believe I have some further proof of that. Here is a piece of beautiful propaganda put out on the Grand Coulee Dam by the Spokane Chamber of Commerce. They make this statement:

The cost of the ultimate development, or high dam, will be $179,000,000.

Then they continue with this statement:

The cost of the combined high dam and the Columbia River Basin reclamation project will be $393,000,000. Land on this project will be available—to settlers at prices ranging from $5 to $15 an acre, and the cost of the water rights will be $88 an acre without interest, payable over a period of 40 years. The annual cost of maintenance will be $3.19 an acre.

Listen to this—

How can the farmers of the Middle West compete with this kind of proposition? How can the farmers meet this competition when Federal funds bring into production 1,200,000 acres of land?

This same literature states that this project will accommodate 40,000 farmers, allowing them from 10 to 80 acres per farm. In my State, according to the 1935 agricultural census, we have 175,543 farmers. It could take 22½ percent of the farmers out of our State and put them on this land at an acre cost of $3.19 a year.

Our farmers are opearting on land with interest charges of from $5 to $7 an acre. We cannot compete with that; we should not be compelled to at this time. With our Government taking land out of production to the extent of 35,000,000 acres a year, surely this Congress should not appropriate $180,000,000 to put this additional land into production.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, this discussion has taken a rather amusing trend. Some of these phases of western development—and I say this advisedly—are like the Irishman's flea; you put your thumb on him and he is not there. In this case the normal claim for locality development is abandoned and a new plea substituted.

The gentleman from Washington, who is perhaps one of the ablest and most skillful lawyers in the House, takes the position that the Grand Coulee is not reclamation. That is the first time I have heard that position assumed since the initiation of the P. W. A. The gentleman from Washington has probably been so occupied in writing the great financial measures that involve our Nation and our Nation's future that he has not paid any attention to the Grand Coulee development and is apparently very much in a fog with respect to it. I ask the gentleman from Washington to read the legislation which "Honest Harold" Ickes and Dr. Mead, of the Reclamation Bureau, wrote on this question and which is now embodied in this bill.

They called it reclamation. In the original break-down of the P. W. A. the Grand Coulee was called "power", but Honest Harold grew ashamed of that designation because there was no one in the Grand Coulee area to sell power to except rattlesnakes, coyotes, and rabbits. Everyone knows that. There is no market for power in the Northwest. This Bonneville development is going to be carried out at a cost of $63,000,000. That, with the present private power development, will suffice the Northwest for many years to come.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I think the gentleman has his figures confused.

Mr. CULKIN. I am talking about Bonneville. I say the estimate on the Bonneville project is $63,000,000, which includes the installation of the fish ladders, which are going to cost $8,500,000. The fish ladders and the elevators for the fish involve a disbursement of $8,500,000. The engineer did not know about those when he made his estimate of $43,000,000. Incidentally, may I say that I supported the Bonneville project from the very beginning. It is a sound power and navigational development.

Mr. Speaker, there is ample power in the West for a long time to come. May I say that no power group has a collar on me. During my career at the bar I was repeatedly offered substantial retainers from the power group in various legitimate forms, but I never accepted them. So when I speak about power no one has any strings on me. There was an English statesman once who said that "patriotism was the first and last refuge of a scoundrel." I am going to say now that this power issue is the first and last refuge of a public officer who is desirous of continuing in the public service.

Here is what the Grand Coulee proposition means: In the first instance, there will be a disbursement of $63,000,000 for a mere dam. I repeat, there is no power involved, and cannot be, and never has been until the distinguished, brilliant, able, and skillful gentleman from Washington came in here and attempted to throw sand in your eyes. It is an irrigation and reclamation proposition pure and simple. It will bring from 1,200,000 to 2,000,000 acres into production.

I want to show you the attitude of the farmers in the Northwest toward this reclamation project. I have a number of letters from farmers in the Northwest which protest most vigorously against this Grand Coulee development. I have one, for instance, from the Wenatchee district in Washington, in which the writer says that the fixed indebtedness, without seasonal charges, per acre there is $555. This writer says that the introduction of more land or the placing of more land in production will destroy the farmers in Washington, who are now in difficult straits. The National Grange opposes it.

I am going to tell you briefly the genesis of this Grand Coulee proposition.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman furnish us with the names of those farmers?

Mr. CULKIN. I will be glad to supply the names to the gentleman. I do not have them here. I can give the gentleman a very large list of names, and will be glad to do so. I have at least 25.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I will be glad to have them.

Mr. CULKIN. Extracts from these letters have gone in the RECORD heretofore, but I will be glad to furnish the gentleman with the names.

Mr. Speaker, there is one phase of the Grand Coulee proposition which I wish to discuss. It is definitely a promotional proposition. An article appeared in Nation sometime in April, written by one William Rorty, who is a publicist of some standing. He is also the author of several books, and his reputation vouches for the truth of the article which appears under his name. He says that some 630,000 acres of the choicest land in the Grand Coulee country are held by the utilities—note this, after the statement made by the gentleman from Washington—and banks and railroads. Think of it, 630,000 acres of the choicest land! It is impossible for the public to get on to the land without running the gauntlet of the land sharks who now hold title to same. I want to read a list of the companies that hold the best of those lands in the hollow of their hands.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is any of the land that is going to be covered by this 150 miles of water owned by the parties referred to?

Mr. CULKIN. All of this land is owned by these parties.

Mr. HARLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. If a few generations ago, when we built the railroads across through Kansas and those other western States, someone had said that these railroads should not be built in the West because there are no cities there and nobody to use the railroads, what would the gentleman think of that kind of an argument? Does not the same thing apply to this power? There are not many factories there to use the power until it is put there.

Mr. CULKIN. I will tell the gentleman what they intend to do, and he may take it back to his constituents. They are going to take people from the gentleman's State. Then they are going to move your factories from Ohio out there. I give the gentleman due warning. That is the purpose of this program and they boast about it.

Mr. Rorty, this writer—and I am advised he is thoroughly authoritative—says he has examined the records of Grant, Adams, Lincoln, Franklin, and Douglas Counties, and he makes the statement that 670,000 acres of this land are now owned by banks, railroads, utilities, investment bankers, insurance and real-estate companies. Then he goes on to recite a list of the companies. In other words, the United States Government is making an initial disbursement of $63,000,000 on property that belongs to the railroads and to the utilities. In the meantime, the gentleman from Washington yells about the Power Trust.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced a resolution today which, with the permission of the Members of the House, I would like to read:

Whereas the Nation, a magazine of some circulation, several months since carried the statement that over 600,000 acres of the choice lands of the Grand Coulee district are held by the banks, politicians, railroads, and utilities; and

Whereas no authoritative denial has been made of this fact: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that all work on this project should cease pending an investigation into the holdings of these lands as above stated; and be it further

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a committee of five for the purpose of examining into the question of title to these lands which the Government is now improving at an ultimate cost of $350,000,000.

It seems to me, in justice to the distinguished occupant of the White House, who was more or less misled, if you please, in this situation, this Grand Coulee project should be stricken from this bill. There have been some political casualties since this project was initiated that seem to justify the belief that he was mislead. I am not going to mention any names or be rude about that.

Mr. KELLER. Why not?

Mr. CULKIN. Well, I am not going to; at any rate, some political faces have disappeared from the horizon, and I think the President would welcome this resolution of the elimination of the Grand Coulee. I think the proposition has within it the seeds of crédit mobilier, which, in its youth, nearly wrecked my own party. I think this matter ought to be investigated, and now is the time to suspend work on the project, and first get these titles back into the hands of the people.

You all know the romance that was attendant upon the opening up of new lands for settlement. There is none of that involved here. Before a man can take title he has to run the gantlet of a chain of real-estate holding companies, if you please; and then the fellow who gives him title is far removed from any responsibility. Just stop this performance now at this particular stage and look into it. It is your function to look into it. "Honest Harold" Ickes is the only man who ever passed on this question. The President himself, of course, had to accept the recommendations of certain men—men who have now deceived the distinguished gentleman from Washington as to the facts as to this development.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point? As a matter of fact, this matter has been examined by at least a half dozen different investigators, including the leading engineers of the country in the Reclamation Department and the War Department, and they all report favorably upon it.

Mr. CULKIN. I may say to the gentleman that I suggest he read a reprint from the Engineering Review on this subject. I would suggest that he read a well-considered, well-balanced, kindly story that appeared in the Saturday Evening Post several weeks ago. These give true pictures, and both of these articles say that there is absolutely no market for the power in this section and will not be for many years to come. This is what the United States engineers have said. I may say to the House that these great public servants, when they wrote their report in 1932, stated that the power plants are incident to the pumping of water into another reservoir. Let me say to the gentleman that this problem involves the raising every minute of 500 tons of water 350 feet. It is one of the most gigantic engineering problems in the history of mankind, and you are just at the inception of it. It involves the disbursement, according to the estimates of the engineers, amortized at 4 percent, of $712,000,000, and as modified now the expense, estimated by every authority I can find—and I have examined the question carefully—amounts to a disbursement of $390,000,000.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BIERMANN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL] said that these utility owners and these bank owners and the other owners of this land would be made to sell the land at a reasonable price before they would get the water on it. What does the gentleman think of that proposition?

Mr. CULKIN. Let me tell the gentleman and tell the House, in reply to that question which is very pertinent, that the gentlemen who, he states, will be made to sell this land on terms, are the gentlemen who are financing and promoting this proposition. They are the Inland Empire outfit who are back of this scheme. This is the fact, and when the settler goes on the land, if he has to deal with a utility or bank——

Mr. BIERMANN. And he will have to do that, will he not? He will have to buy it from the people who own the land.

Mr. CULKIN. Yes. That fact sticks up like a sore thumb.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the motion of the gentleman from Washington be voted down. I ask that the motion of Judge MANSFIELD, excepting the Grand Coulee from the operation of this measure carry. Protect the farmers and the Treasury of the United States from this outrageous infliction. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion and the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on the adoption of the Hill amendment, with respect to the Coulee Dam, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 201, nays 126, answered "present" 1, not voting 102, as follows:

KRAMER SEDITION BILL

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following:

MINORITY VIEWS OF CONGRESSMAN EMANUEL CELLER

I herewith submit the minority views of the Judiciary Committee on H. R. 6427, a bill introduced by Mr. CHARLES KRAMER, the gentleman from California, to prohibit statements and publications advocating overthrow of the Government by violence, and for other purposes. It is with great reluctance that I am constrained to oppose my colleague, Mr. KRAMER, for whom I have an affectionate regard, and to oppose my dear friends, Representatives DICKSTEIN, of New York, and MCCORMACK, of Massachusetts, cosponsors of the bill.

Thomas Jefferson once said: "If I had the choice between government without free speech and free speech without government, I would choose the latter." To him and, in fact, to all right-minded persons free speech, together with freedom of the press and freedom of religion—the Bill of Rights—which are embodied in the first amendments of the Constitution, is more important than the Constitution itself. Yet men and women, forgetful of our history and traditions, are constantly agitating for the enactment of measures that put vipers in the bosom of freedom.

The so-called "Kramer bill", H. R. 6427, is such a bill. It seeks to destroy free speech. It is the first peace-time sedition bill since 1798. I am unalterably opposed to it. Originally this bill was as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That any person who knowingly makes any statement orally or in writing, which advocates or urges the overthrow of the Government of the United States, or of any State or Territory, by force or violence, or by assassination of the Executive head or any other official of such Government, or other unlawful means, and any person who knowingly prints, publishes, issues, edits, circulates, sells, distributes, or displays in public any written matter containing any such statement, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"SEC. 2. As used in this act, the term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, association, or corporation."

Most of it was whittled away, and it now emerges from the Judiciary Committee in the following form:

"Be it enacted, etc., That any person who knowingly and willfully shall advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both."

It is my opinion that although the original bill may be stripped of some trappings its evil remains.

This bill at first blush seems worthy enough, but after close scrutiny it is readily discernible that it would become an instrument of oppression. It would doubtlessly lay an ax at the foot of the tree of free speech, would subject the great majority of the American people, particularly the workmen, to the absolute domination of the small minority of powerful and vested interests, would be the means of oppression against unpopular minorities, and would be used by employers and reactionary interests against those engaged in union and legitimate strike activities. It would finally be an attempt to sabotage free speech and other inalienable rights.

Under this statute no overt act is necessary. Merely harboring radical opinions might invite punishment. The speaker or the writer would find himself in the toils of the law if his utterances, though innocent, were forceful enough to incite his audience to violence. It is not what he says. It is the effect of what he says that would count. In practice no precise line can be drawn between advocacies of change by violence and by peaceful means. Different people are affected differently. A perfectly fair yet sharp criticism of the Government as a street-corner orator, by a striker, by an editorial writer, might have little or no effect upon many persons, yet cause others to do violence. ' That striker, editor, or orator would be clapped into jail.

It is difficult to draw the line between advocacy and incitement. Justice Brandeis, in the Gitlow case, very significantly stated:

"Every idea is an incitement. It offers itself for belief, and if believed it is acted upon unless some other belief outweighs it or some failure of energy stifles the movement at its birth. The only difference between the expression of an opinion and an incitement in the narrow sense is the speaker's enthusiasm for the result. Eloquence may set fire to reason."

Pass this bill, and what will be the result? People would be afraid to speak or write their thoughts. They would fear prosecution, or rather persecution. Rather than speak the truth, they would remain silent. Or, if they do speak, they would "pull their punches." In other words, the truth would remain partly spoken or unspoken for fear of jail. Free speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assemblage, would all go aglimmering.

Suppose I live in Louisiana. A certain nameless individual, wearing the toga of high office, is enabled to reduce the people of that State practically to serfdom. This bill would place a plaster over the mouths of those likely to criticize or protest. They would not dare offer objection, much less condemn the machinations of this self-styled leader. They would be incarcerated for violations of this statute. They would be charged with attempted overthrow of Government by violence, despite the fact that that Government ought to be overthrown.

The owner of a plant—wealthy, powerful, ruthless—could use the statute for his own fell, selfish purposes. Where he controls local officials he could claim that strikers at his plant were guilty of sedition and were aiming at the overthrow of Government, whereas in reality higher wages and shorter hours were their goal. Subservient and complacent district attorneys, sheriffs would readily prosecute.

Under this act anyone saying anything not in accord with the views of those in power—be they great industrialists, Governors, sheriffs, or political bosses—would come to grief.

It appears to be undisputed that communism implies the ultimate use of force if it is unable to achieve its ends by means of the ballot. It would seem to follow that this bill would punish anyone who should advocate communism, whether or not he specifically advocated the use of force. The proponents deny that this is the intent of the bill, but it would seem to be its necessary effect.

I am for punishment of those who commit overt, specific illegal acts; punishment for those who are guilty of active treason, criminal anarchy, riot, insurrection, assault and battery, criminal conspiracy, incendiarism. But under this statute mere words would be illegal; wild, forceful, emotional utterances; reprehensible, absurd, untruthful statements could enmesh a person.

It must be borne in mind that the present law adequately protects against any activity against the authority of the Federal Government. For example, our conspiracy statutes, sections 6 and 37 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 6, 88), severely punish two or more persons who conspire to overthrow the Government or to commit any offense against it. It will be appreciated that in order to have "two or more persons" conspiring it is only necessary to have 1 talker and 1 listener. The Kramer bill and all other bills of the same ilk are therefore unnecessary as well as undesirable.

Experience with all criminal-syndicalism and criminal-anarchy laws conclusively shows that most of the prosecutions have been based on utterances or writings prophesying, not advocating, violence at some future time to effect revolutionary changes in control of the economic system. Many of the prosecutions have been based, not on personal advocacies, but on mere membership in radical organizations held to subscribe to such a doctrine. Prosecutions have therefore not been directed at any actual or threatened violence, but at political or economic opinions of minority parties and labor unions, and have been instituted usually in times of strikes. In effect, these laws have been primarily used to aid employers against workers.

The instant bill and others like it make dominant interests the controllers of freedom of speech and of the press.

Prosecutions have been usually motivated by political and economic prejudice.

They do not protect the Government against counsels of violent action. They do aid employers in conflicts with workers, often on the theory that opposition to capitalism is opposition to the Government.

No definite standard of guilt is fixed.

Apparently, only general doctrines, necessarily remote in effect, are aimed at. Guilt under the Kramer bill and similar statutes is made absurdly dependent upon forms of language or choice of words. The courts are unable to apply any consistent standard of guilt.

Strangely enough, this law would punish the advocacy of force by those who seek to change the existing system, but does not punish the advocacy of force by those who seek to maintain it. In other words, encouragement is given to those who by violence would preserve a political and economic status quo. There is thus set up a sort of Fascist concept of law.

This bill is undoubtedly unconstitutional, violating as it does the basic safeguards and rights of the American citizen. In United States v. Schenck (249 U. S. 47), the Supreme Court upheld the application of the war-time Espionage Act (act of June 15, 1917), concerning the distribution of leaflets urging drafted men to refuse to serve. It expressly limited, however, the effect of its decision to cases arising during times of emergency. The rule it lays down would clearly make unconstitutional during peace-times any bill even remotely resembling the Kramer bill. The Court said (p. 52), "* * * we admit that in many places and in ordinary times the defendants in saying all that was said in the circular would have been within their constitutional rights * * * the question in every case is whether the words used are used in such circumstances and are of such a nature as to create a clear and present danger that they will bring about the substantive evils that Congress has a right to prevent."

Henry Thomas Buckle, author of that great classic, the History of Civilization in England, significantly states: "The only answer to words is words; when an attempt is made to answer them by force, it becomes tyranny." Voltaire put it this way: "I may disagree utterly with what you say, but I will fight to the death for your right to say it."

There seems to be a general hysteria of fear gripping the Nation against communism, socialism, and all manner and kinds of other "isms." In almost every legislature a flood of "gag" bills and sedition measures have been introduced. In Georgia a woman was thrown into jail. Her sole offense was the possession of copies of Liberty and some liberal magazines like the Nation and the New Republic. In fact, the sheriff, who broke into her home illegally stated that the magazine Liberty was the most dangerous of the magazines seized. He said the very name proved that it was a seditious document. In California, the home of Mr. KRAMER, during the past session, 24 bills were introduced denying civil liberties and imposing restrictions of the right to strike. Measures were introduced ranging from the establishment of a bureau of espionage to one making radical meeting places public nuisances; from one making the advocacy of a change in Government a felony to another making the advocacy of pacificism a felony. If all these bills had been passed, it is pointed out by the editor of the New Republic, California would have a form of government besides which that of czarist Russia could be called progressive.

President Robert M. Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, in a recent commencement address, attacked vigorously these so-called "patrioteers" who seek to reduce the rights of free speech and freedom of the press. He said:

"Almost everybody is now afraid. This is reflected in the hysteria of certain organs of opinion which insist on free speech themselves, although nobody has thought of taking it away from them, though at the same time they demand that it be denied everybody else. * * * It (this fear) is reflected in the general resistance to all uncomfortable truths. * * *"

Several sedition bills, including the Kramer bill, before our Judiciary Committee were urged as a means of combating the spread of communism and fascism. They would, I repeat, merely curtail free speech.

In my humble opinion the best antidote to communism or fascism is more—not less—free speech. My friend and esteemed colleague, Representative VITO MARCANTONIO, of New York, vigorously and valiantly opposed these bills and held with Senator BORAH—

"* * * that to oppose communism and fascism by surrendering the very things, as free speech, the right of assemblage, which distinguish Americanism from fascism and communism, is blundering leadership and unworthy of the support of true Americans."

But there is no real danger from communism in this country. The total enrollment of the Communist Party is 36,000 votes, 18,000 of which are in New York. However, if there is no danger from the Communists now, there will be danger if these "gag" and sedition bills are passed. That is the meat upon which the Communists feed—repression and restraint. I believe the sound method of dealing with communism is to bring it out in the open so that its tenets, if unsound, may be so demonstrated. The most effective method of defeating the Communists is to throw as much light as possible upon their program, so that its unsoundness may be revealed. The bill before us would have the contrary effect of driving their activities underground, with the inevitable consequence that they would become further intensified and publicized. Forcing Fascists and Communists into secret channels would only martyrize them—make them heroes and their doctrines popular and romantic. Their adherents would, consequently, greatly grow in numbers.

Jefferson properly said: "It is error alone which needs the support of government. Truth can stand by itself." Let us therefore place communism, with all its hideousness and loathsomeness, in the open market place, where we can place a value upon it. Let us freely speak and write about it and show it to be cheap and worthless, not keep it hidden, like a jewel, in a safe, as though it were valuable and precious. Only by dragging it out will we consign it to the dunghill, where it belongs.

The situation that confronts us today with these pending repressive bills is not unlike that which confronted Jefferson, Madison, and Livingston upon the eve of the Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798. John Adams and the Federalists then in power were restive under the sharp criticisms of their regime. They felt that they, like the king, "could do no wrong." They wished to prevent criticism and stop the spread of Jeffersonian "radicalism." They passed the Alien and Sedition Acts. This aroused the greatest indignation and caused their decisive defeat at the polls by Jefferson and his followers.

In the House of Representatives in 1798, Edward Livingston, in opposing the Sedition Act, predicted as follows:

"The country will swarm with informers, spies, delators, and all the odious reptile tribes that breed in the sunshine of despotic power * * *. The hours of the most unsuspected confidence, the intimacies of friendship, or the recesses of domestic retirement afford no security. The companion whom you must trust, the friend in whom you must confide, the domestic who waits in your chamber, all are tempted to betray your imprudent or unguarded follies; to misrepresent your words; to convey them, distorted by calumny, to the secret tribunal where jealousy presides, where fear officiates as accuser and suspicion is the only evidence that is heard * * *."

My colleague, Hon. MAURY MAVERICK, Representative from the State of Texas, very forcefully and ably drew attention to the fact that Livingston's predictions were not unjustified and that the Sedition Act led to a campaign of systematic snooping, and that Federalist judges and officials used the statute to oppress their political enemies.

The very first prosecution under the Sedition Act was against an anti-Federalist Congressman. Collendar, a friend of Jefferson, was convicted for saying: "Mr. Adams has only completed the scene of ignominy which Mr. Washington began."

Charles Beard points out that:

"* * * editors of Republican (Jeffersonian) papers soon found themselves in jail or broken by heavy fines; bystanders at political meetings who made contemptuous remarks about Adams or his policies were hurried off to court, lectured by irate Federalist judges, and convicted of sedition. In vain did John Marshall urge caution, explaining that the sedition law was useless and calculated to arouse rather than allay discontent."

The Alien and Sedition Acts were, of course, repealed, and Congress, many years after the repeal, repaid the fines imposed on some of its prominent victims. By thus repaying these fines, Justice Holmes intimates in his memorable dissenting opinion in Abrams v. United States (250 U. S. 616) "* * * the United States * * * had shown its repentance" for acts which were, even as is the measure under discussion, clearly un-American and clearly unconstitutional.

I warn—let there be no recurrence of the wild and pitiful scenes resulting from the Sedition Acts of 1798. Let there be no Sedition Act of 1935.

If these "gag" and sedition bills are permitted to become imbedded in our permanent statutes, then what apparently is desired in this country is a sort of dead-level of mediocrity, a nation of nincompoops and dullards. If we cannot speak our minds freely and openly on economic and political topics, then we will be reduced to automatons, without intelligence, ideas, or courage. Without freedom to express ideas and thoughts there can be no progress. We might as well go back to horse-and-buggy days! If the Government is to throttle free thought and free expression, fear and timidity will replace courage and initiative of our citizenry.

Let us cast our eye backward and see how the espionage and sedition statutes during the war were enforced.

Mere expression of a doubt that socks knitted for soldiers ever reached their intended recipients resulted in an extreme prison sentence. (See State v. Freerks, 140 Minn. 349, 168 N. W. 23 (1918).) The defendant in the case of Gilbert v. Minnesota (254 U. S. 300 (1920)) demanded a vote on conscription and advocated the conscription of wealth. He went to jail. The assertion that soldiers were dying for the capitalists merited a 20-year sentence. (See United States v. Wallace, Bull. Dept. Justice No. 4, D. Ia. 1917.) That man went insane and died in jail. The assertion that "this is a rich man's war", also merited a jail sentence. (See State v. Kahn, 56 Mont. 108, 182 Pac. 107 (1919).)

See how times have changed. It is interesting to note the present-day movement in our own Congress for war-time conscription of the wealthy. Yet, the defendant, Kahn, in Montana, in 1919, went to jail for advocating what apparently this Congress espouses. In 1916 there was a motion picture depicting the American Revolution. On the score that the exhibit of this picture might possibly deter the fullest measure of cooperation with Great Britain, the defendant in the case was sentenced to 10 years' imprisonment. (See United States v. Spirit of '76, 252 Fed. 946, S. D. Cal. 1917.) On appeal the 10 years' sentence was reduced to 3 years. (See Goldstein v. United States, 258 Fed. 908, C. C. A. 9th, 1919.) Mere criticisms of the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. were held to obstruct the operations of the Army. Prison sentences resulted. (See United States v. Nagler, 252 Fed. 217 W. D. Wis. 1918.) Mere statements made in the privacy of a small cobbler's shop merited a prison term. The evidence was obtained by means of a dictograph installed in the shop by a volunteer association of citizens. (See Schoberg v. United States, 264 Fed. 1, C. C. A. 6th, 1920.)

One can search the whole record in all the States and look through all the Federal law reports and you will not find one reported instance of prosecution under these statutes where there was any actual or immediate overt act or acts directed toward an immediate violent political change. The conclusion seems inescapable, namely, the history of these cases is a history of suppression of nonexistent danger.

There are therefore cast grave doubts as to the present need for any effort to prevent revolution by any legislative restrictions on speech.

Russia, Italy, Germany, have always had espionage and sedition laws of the Kramer type. The results are obvious—dictatorships. Communism in one, fascism in the other, and nazi-ism in the third. On the other hand, England has always had its Hyde Park where its turbulent and radical populace can blow off steam. England has no dictatorship.

Now, let us see how these same State sedition statutes were used and are still being used, not in war time, but in peace time, particularly during the economic depression. The following is an excerpt from an article in a recent issue of the Columbia Law Review:

"After the wave of enforcement in the post-war years, prosecutions fell off precipitately with the rise of prosperity, and from 1925 to 1930 the statutes became virtual dead letters.[1] The revival of prosecutions under the old statutes in the economic decline of recent years, and the present call for new legislation,[2] suggest a correlation between speech restriction and the business cycle. Of peculiar significance in evaluating the nature and effects of sedition legislation is a survey of the circumstances and localities that have evoked the greatest activity in the present era of prosecution. In 1930, organizational activity among the agricultural workers of Imperial Valley in California, a group whose living conditions had been regarded as virtually irremediable,[3] served as background for a series of criminal syndicalism convictions.[4] Again in 1934, the "radicalism" attributed to the San Francisco general strike[5] materialized into prosecutions not of participants[6] but of agricultural union leaders in Sacramento.[7] In Arkansas, union activity among the poverty-stricken share croppers[8] has been met with terrorism and conviction for criminal anarchy. Relief demonstrations seem to have been the immediate provocation for other applications of statutes designed to prevent violent revolution.[9]

"The picture of official activity in the background against which the sedition bills must be viewed is rounded out by the increasingly ready resort to the National Guard to put down "revolution" found in labor demands for increased wages.[11]

"Sane consideration of a hectic social scene thus emphasizes the role of the sedition statute. Whether it is the product of misguided sincerity or of hyprocrisy, sedition legislation has been used to combat immediate demands of labor groups, rather than to meet imminent danger of violent overthrow of the Government."

There is a need for progressive and patriotic men and women everywhere to take heed and be watchful lest these sedition and "gag" bills take hold.

Remember, article III of the Constitution of the United States says, "Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech."

Finally, let us always keep in mind what our dear and late lamented Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes stated in his dissenting opinion in the case of Abrahms v. United States (250 U. S., at page 630) "* * * the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market * * *"

MILITARY DISAFFECTION BILL KILLS AMERICAN LIBERTY

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer as my own remarks a minority report as filed by myself and the Honorable PAUL J. KVALE against Senate bill 2253, known as the "Tydings-McCormack military disaffection bill."

The report is as follows:

MINORITY VIEWS

The following is submitted by Mr. MAURY MAVERICK, of Texas, and Mr. PAUL J. KVALE, of Minnesota:

Section 1. Foreword

The bill is said to have as its purpose the riddance of Communists and communistic influence from the Army and Navy. But Assistant Secretary Roosevelt testified, as to Communists in the Navy, that there were "none, among either the officers or enlisted men" and as to communistic influence, that it was "absolutely infinitesimal." General Smith testified that, "while there has been much effort on the part of subversive groups to penetrate the armed forces, it appears that their efforts have not met with a great deal of success."

This bill, then, proposes, in effect, to use a 12-inch gun to kill a knat. The truth is that it is not really aimed at Communists—that is a subterfuge—but at the honest peace-time expression of opinions on anything remotely concerning the Army or Navy by decent American citizens of any projects favored by profiteering munition makers and similar interests. It is a brash piece of Hitleristic fascism.

ANALYSIS AND INTRODUCTION TO BILL

This bill is:

I

In violation of the first amendment to the Constitution in practically every part of it, especially in reference to the abridgment of the press. The amendment reads as follows:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or of the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances."

The claim may be made by the proponents of the bill that the bill is constitutional, and, granting that it is, purely for the purposes of argument, it is unquestionably in direct violation of the spirit of the Constitution expressed in the first amendment; and

II

In violation of the fourth amendment to the Constitution, which is as follows:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation and particularly describing the places to be searched and the persons or things to be seized."

III

Unnecessary, as no likelihood of mutiny, sedition, or revolution now exists in the United States Army or Navy. (See (1) Necessity.)

IV

An insult to the loyalty and patriotism of the enlisted men and a reflection on the ability and efficiency of the officers. (One of the undersigned served during the war as a noncommissioned officer and the other as a lieutenant; we feel entitled, on behalf of the enlisted men and officers of the Army, to resent that proposed insult.) (See (2) Communistic propaganda.)

VI

Modeled on fascistic and communistic lines, being wholly opposed to the genius of American institutions.

Section 2. Argument

This bill is un-American—modeled on fascistic and communistic lines—is undoubtedly unconstitutional, violates primarily the right of freedom of press and, indirectly, practically all the liberties of American citizens; directly the right to be free of searches and seizures. The reason why this country has been considered a free country is that it has not hitherto enacted oppressive statutes similar to those of Soviet Russia and Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany. Just such laws as this disaffection bill are in effect in those countries today, and are a necessary adjunct to the regimentation of a free people to the purposes of an absolute government.

Always in presenting a bill like this the proponents say that it is to control the Communists or radicals. Twenty-eight thousand Communists to wreck 128,000,000 free people. To think that the Communists in this country can overthrow the Government is sheer nonsense. Twenty-eight thousand Communists overthrowing this Government. About one-fiftieth of 1 percent of the population. Twenty-eight thousand Communists overthrowing the Army and the Navy. Worse than being nonsense. however, is the fact that it is a direct insult to the patriotism of the enlisted men of the Army and Navy. Are we about to have a revolution? Is our Army seething with sedition? Is our Navy likely to have mutiny at sea? To even intimate such a thing is the worst kind of folly.

The mere reporting out of a bill like this morally weakens the national defenses of our country. It gives the impression that the Congress of the United States is suspicious of the Army and the Navy. It says that we do not trust our soldiers and sailors and implies that we do not trust our own citizens. It means that we believe—if we should vote for this bill—that it is necessary to have a military despotism in order for the Government to survive. This Government is the strongest Government in the world, because it rests on the free consent of the governed. And we offer such a bill as this.

Thomas Jefferson literally hated and despised such limitations of freedom and said so on every occasion. The Alien and Sedition Acts were written to destroy him and the Democratic (although called Republican) Party by the Tories. He was maligned as a radical and as an atheist because he believed in freedom. The Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798 are still at this late day America's greatest national disgrace. This legislation is worse—it is inexcusable.

This bill, if enacted into law, forms the basis of bloody reactionary revolution; that is, a military coup d'état. There are three kinds of revolutions: The reactionary or military revolution, the radical revolution, and the peaceful revolution. The reactionary revolution goes backward by military force and bloodshed, and takes away the liberty of speech and press and other ordinary democratic liberties. It includes censorship, reckless searches and seizures, and suppressions with force.

The radical revolution is one in which there is a violent general rising of the people, similar to a levée en masse, usually accompanied by great destruction of property, disorganization, bloodshed, hunger, and starvation. A radical revolution ordinarily follows a military or reactionary revolution.

The third type of revolution—the peaceful one—is accomplished within the framework of the Constitution, for progressive purposes, and is accomplished through the ballots of a majority of the sovereign voters. Revolution in that sense only means, as the dictionary says, "strictly a progressive motion"—and "revolution is often combined with rotation"—"change", "alteration", and is the symbol of that orderly evolution which is the secret of free government.

The grave unemployment and disturbed economic conditions of the country must undoubtedly be met with fundamental changes of some nature. But whatever they are, it is well established that European communism and fascism are not suited to the genius and temperament of the American people. Such a projected law as this disaffection bill, besides creating the absurd impression that this Government is worried by the activities of communistic or fascistic agitators, is itself an expression of that type of government authority which the framers of this bill consider detrimental to and subversive of the principles of American democracy.

Looking at the bill itself, as originally written, it applied to the "military and naval forces of the United States—including military reserves thereof", and that has been changed to the "Army and Navy." The reason that the bill was changed was to keep the American Federation of Labor quiet, so they wouldn't object, as we understand they did, because they thought the bill might apply to the National Guard, which would be used in strikes. For that reason the compromise in the language was made. That attempted compromise is a ridiculous one, since, if it means anything, it must mean the following:

The National Guard is not a part of the Army, nor is the Coast Guard or Marine Corps a part of the Navy. Therefore, it shall be lawful to create disorder and disobedience in the National Guard, the Reserves, the Coast Guard, the Marine Corps, and the R. O. T. C.—but not in the Army and Navy. Or, to put it otherwise, it must mean that the military and naval forces outside of the regulars are patriotic, but that the regular troops are disloyal and not patriotic or dependable. In other words, the Congress is asked to take for granted the questionable loyalty of the Army and Navy, for it is asked to act as if it were necessary to have a law passed to keep them from mutiny and the country from bloodshed.

Of course, the National Guard, the Reserves, the R. O. T. C., the Coast Guard, and the Marine Corps are, in fact, a part of the Army and Navy; but, if they are logically treated as such under the act, then labor has been duped and has received no compromise.

If, on the other hand, the framers of this bill intended by this change to except the National Guard, the Reserves, and such military organizations from the provisions of the proposed act, they have eliminated those groups who have the power by their vote to express their disgust and disapproval at the offensiveness of such legislation; and make the act binding upon only those groups who lack this articulate power. Aware of the indignation that such laws will call forth, the framers of the bill thus foist it only upon groups which cannot voice their indigation at the slur which it is proposed to cast upon them. We, who served in the Army, resent that insult. (See below: Army or Navy.)

What will come if such a bill is passed? Cross-currents of persecutions, hunts by hysterical false "patriots"; newspaper raids, brutal arrests on unfounded gossip; censorship by intimidatory actions, head-crackings, bloodshed, unconstitutional searches and seizures, suspicions, industrial warfare—bringing chaos rather than halting it. This bill is dangerous and utterly in contempt of our Bill of Rights and free democratic government.

We deny that our Army and Navy are mutinous, or can be made mutinous or disloyal by foreign propaganda or radical—or whatnot propaganda. Our soldiers and sailors are loyal. They are good Americans. They are as good Americans as their officers—and as their Congressmen.

The second section of this bill is a pure case of unwarranted, unconstitutional, and bigoted tyranny. It provides for every conceivable violation of the rights of search and seizure. It provides for the breaking into the homes of the American people and shows a reckless disregard of every American principle of liberty.

The law is likewise obviously unnecessary.

Section 3.—Index of points offered for consideration

1. Necessity?
2. Communistic propaganda.
3. Espionage Act.
4. Army or Navy.
5. Labor.
6. Political.
7. Political science.
8. Historical.
9. Practical.
10. Conclusion.

The points are as follows:

1. NECESSITY?

In the first place the control by the Court Martial Manual of the military and naval forces is absolute and almost unlimited. The manual and strict military law have always been sufficient to maintain good discipline and besides there being no danger of mutiny or sedition in our military or naval forces, existing laws adequately punish disaffection, mutiny, or disobedience in the Army and Navy or conspiracies among civilians to incite disobedience.

If the laws already in effect are utilized and are adequately enforced, it is inconceivable how any attempts on the loyalty of the Army and Navy can go unpunished.

Title 18, 6 U. S. C. (Criminal Code), provides:

"Seditious conspiracy: If two or more persons in any State or Territory, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, conspire to overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them, or to oppose by force the authority thereof, or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, they shall each be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 6 years, or both" (R. S., sec. 5336; Mar. 4, 1909, c. 321, sec. 6, 35 Stat. 1089).

This statute was successfully invoked in Wells v. U. S. (257 Fed. 605) to punish four persons for having conspired by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of certain Federal statutes—the declaration of war against Germany and others. The case arose before the Espionage Act became effective. Section 6 was used to punish defendants who had collaborated in the preparation and distribution of a certain anticonscription circular urging forcible resistance to conscription.

The court said: "It was not necessary to show that force was actually employed, but only that there was a conspiracy entered into that contemplated the employment of force, as a means to the accomplishment of a common purpose to oppose the execution of a law of the United States, or the authority of the Government to prosecute the war" (614).

So much for the law making it punishable for two or more to conspire to urge forcible resistance to law. It was and is equally punishable for a single individual to incite to forcible resistance to law. Thus section 4 of title 18, U. S. C. (Criminal Code, sec. 4), provides as follows:

"Inciting rebellion or insurrection: Whoever incites, sets on foot, assists, or engages in any rebellion or insurrection against the authority of the United States or the laws thereof, or gives aid or comfort thereto, shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years, or fined not more than $10,000, or both; and shall, moreover, be incapable of holding any office under the United States" (R. S., sec. 5334; Mar. 4, 1909, c. 321, sec. 4, 35 Stat. 1088).

Two further provisions of the Criminal Code were successfully relied on by the Government in securing the conviction of Emma Goldman (Goldman v. U. S., 245 U. S. 474, 1917). Those were sections 37 and 332 of the then Criminal Code, now, respectively, sections 88 and 550 of title 18. The statutes were designed to punish bare conspiracies to commit any offense against the United States.

Emma Goldman was held guilty of violating these laws by conspiring to induce persons subject to the Draft Act to refuse to register. Under section 37 the doing of overt acts in furtherance of the conspiracy was held to be unlawful, "irrespective of whether the result of the conspiracy has been to accomplish its illegal end" (p. 477).

The additional statutory safeguards are:

Section 94, title 18, punishing enticing desertion from the Army and Navy.

34 United States Code Annotated, section 1200, permitting infliction of court-martial penalty on Navy men found guilty of uttering seditious words.

10 United States Code Annotated, section 1538, providing the death penalty for mutiny or joining in a seditious uprising for any person subject to military law.

18 United States Code Annotated, Section 483, punishing incitement to mutiny on the high seas.

18 United States Code Annotated, section 484, punishing the actual mutiny.

Under these provisions of the law, together with the treason provisions of the Constitution (sec. 3, art. III), what serious interference with military authority cannot be dealt with? All such situations can easily be handled under present laws.

In addition to all these various laws are numerous statutes that would appear to cover the problem. Mailing of matter of this nature to the members of the Army or Navy would be covered by title 18, sections 343, 344, and 345, of the United States Code. Also reference is made to section 44 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 96), punishing anyone who trespasses upon or interferes with any fortification, harbor defense, etc., or who shall willfully "violate any duly authorized and promulgated order or regulation of the President governing persons or vessels within the limits of defensive sea areas, which defensive sea areas are hereby authorized to be established by order of the President from time to time as may be necessary, in his discretion, for purposes of national defense."

Also, section 45 (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 97) gives sweeping power to the military authorities to punish anyone who may be found upon any military reservation, etc., "for any purpose prohibited by military law or regulation." This gives complete authority to the military over all areas of their own, and the Navy is given the additional power heretofore recited in which the President may set up any defensive areas desired, with such regulations as he believes necessary.

2. COMMUNISTIC PROPAGANDA

It is difficult to find exactly why this bill is being proposed; there are probably a variety of reasons. But the proponents claim the bill is aimed at the alleged communistic propaganda carried on among the soldiers and sailors. Yet high military officials testified before the McCormack committee that this propaganda was insignificant.

The Senate report on S. 2253 by the Committee on Naval Affairs states:

"Literature of a subversive nature to the Government has been distributed in increasing quantities in recent years to the personnel of the Navy and other branches of our military and naval forces."

Also, it says the literature "apparently emanates from Communist organizations." This would indicate few, if any, persons have actually been shown as sending or distributing propaganda. Also, it is admitted none of the matter is sent by mail.

The naval statement seems hardly consistent with the testimony of Brig. Gen. Alfred T. Smith, General Staff, War Department, and Commander V. L. Kirkman, on behalf of the Navy Department, before the House committee investigating un-American activities. The hearings at which these officers testified were held in Washington, D. C., on the 17th and 18th of December 1934. (Hearings No. 73—D. C.—5.)

After testifying to the extent of the distribution of communistic literature in the Army, General Smith stated:

"While there has been much effort on the part of the subversive groups to penetrate the armed forces, it appears that their efforts have not met with a great deal of success. In 1925 two enlisted men were tried and convicted by general court martial for communistic activities. Since the expiration of their sentences, reports indicate that both of these men have again been active. In 1933 one enlisted man was discharged for communistic activities and in 1934 one enlisted man was discharged for the same reason."

Commander Kirkman drew no conclusions, but testified that literature is constantly being disseminated. Besides this conventional method of propaganda, resort is also had, he states, to the use of pretty girls who engage promising enlisted men "with the object of making dates with them ashore and 'working on them' there to convert them to the 'cause' and thus gain a recruit within the ship's company." Communist girl "lures" were also mentioned in an article by Admiral Yates Stirling, recently reprimanded by the Secretary of the Navy for meddling in international relations.

Mr. MAVERICK asked several questions in hearings before the Military Affairs Committee of The Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Henry L. Roosevelt, one as to the Communists in the Navy, to which answer was given: "None, among either the officers or enlisted men." And to the direct question as to communistic influence upon the Navy, Mr. Roosevelt answered: "Absolutely infinitesimal." He stated he had no belief of any danger to the Navy.

Mr. MAVERICK also heard the testimony of Maj. Gen. Amos Fries, who gave as a reason, before the subcommittee, that this bill was required in order to prevent people from criticizing the size of appropriations for the Army or Navy. In other words, his intention and the intention of the bill, among other things, is to put people in the penitentiary if they state that the appropriations for the Army or Navy are too much; the same to apply to newspapers and periodicals. Of course, the bill is so drawn as to fine and imprison anyone criticizing the military or naval forces in any way whatsoever, however vague.

While a Senate committee has been investigating the munitions racketeers, this bill to punish those who criticize their depredations is seriously put forward. It would be ridiculous if it were not so clearly evidence of their power over legislation of this type.

3. ESPIONAGE ACT

NOTE.—The Espionage Act was enacted during the war and is not effective in peace time. The proposed law is practically a peace-time enactment of a war measure. The only difference is that this law goes further. Therefore, the decisions and the statutory construction of the proposed law would be similar to the Espionage Act, and this note is made in order to call attention to its effect.

The amendments to the bill attempting to limit it to those who actually intend to incite disaffection will have no effect on its enforcement.

The third section of title I of the Espionage Act (act of June 15, 1917, c. 30), upon which the present bill is modeled, reads in part, as follows:

"Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States", etc.

The earliest decisions under that section quickly adopted, in utter disregard of the most elementary principles of the common law, the doctrine of constructive intent, holding that if the words uttered had a remotely bad tendency within the prohibition of the statute, the fact that the utterances were made in the greatest good faith and with complete innocence of any idea of direct incitement, the utterer was nevertheless guilty of violating the law and subject to imprisonment (Masses Pub. Co. v. Patten, 245 Fed. 102, 245 Fed. 24).

Thus was immediately put to an end any genuine discussion of public matters. Those that attempted criticism speedily found their way to jail. The first year after the enactment of the Espionage Act found more than 1,100 prosecutions. In all, the total exceeded 2,000. The following are typical examples of what was considered criminal under the statute:

Rose Pastor Stokes was given 10 years for saying, "I am for the people, and the Government is for the profiteers." Her conviction was later reversed.

D. T. Blodgett, however, was not so fortunate. He received a 20-year sentence, which was affirmed, for circulating a pamphlet urging Iowa voters not to reelect Congressmen who voted for conscription and reprinting an argument of Congressman Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, against the constitutionality of the Draft Act (Nelles, Espionage cases, p. 48).

Judge Amidon, before whom many of the prosecutions came, summed up the situation admirably:

"It has very seldom occurred in the midst of this war that anybody has attempted in the United States to obstruct the Government by overt acts. Nearly all the opposition has come through the use of language. So all the decisions are addressed to that subject" (U. S. v. Mills, Bulletin No. 204, pl.).

In time of war such an espionage statute probably has its justifications. However, it is inevitably abused. Men are improperly convicted who cannot afford to appeal and are improperly jailed. In war time such abuses, however deplorable, must perhaps be accepted as part of the unavoidable cost of war.

But in time of peace it is unthinkable that such injustice should be invited. And such a law will invite abuses—unwarranted when the Nation is not at war. Even assuming that such a law would be constitutional in time of war, the misadministration of the law—the unfair application of its provisions to innocent persons who cannot afford to hire able lawyers to defend and appeal their cases—which would surely follow its enactment will unquestionably be unconstitutional (Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 183 U. S. 356). Certain elements are asking Congress to pass a law which is absolutely certain to be used unconstitutionally. And yet they are the very persons who prattle the loudest on every possible occasion of preserving the Constitution and of the abuses of constitutional rights by Government officials. They are always vocal about the Constitution when their excessive property rights are even slightly threatened by lawful processes. But the constitutional rights of liberty mean nothing to them. Their attitude is that of Hamilton, who said: "The people. The people, sir, is a great beast." But even Hamilton was disgusted by the enactment of the only piece of congressional legislation which remotely resembles this pernicious bill—the deservedly odious sedition law, which was used by Jefferson's political opponents to institute a reign of terror during which they unconstitutionally jailed political adherents of Jefferson.

4. ARMY OR NAVY

The status of the National Guard has been fairly well covered in the main argument; it is desired, however, to emphasize certain legal phases.

Despite the amendments made in committee, the bill remains unchanged insofar as the organizations sought to be protected are concerned.

The bill as originally proposed was designed "to make better provision for the government of the military and naval forces of the United States * * *" and penalized attempts to incite members of such forces, including the reserves thereof, to disobedience. The bill was amended in committee by substituting the words "Army or Navy" for the words "military and naval forces" wherever the latter appeared, and by striking out the words "including the reserves thereof." The professed purpose of the amendment was to exclude the National Guard from the coverage of the bill. However, the amendment is wholly ineffectual to accomplish such a purpose, because it is based upon an erroneous assumption concerning the nature and function of the National Guard.

That the bill, even as amended, applies to the National Guard is clearly shown by an analysis of the organizational and functional set-up of that body. While the National Guard is for some purposes a State organization, it is primarily subject to requisition for use by the Federal Government (32 U. S. C. A. 4a, 48 Stat. 155).

And it is clear beyond question that the National Guard, in the last analysis, was created for much the same purpose as was the Regular Army of the United States, and is part of the armed forces of the United States.

There are numerous decisions to the effect that the National Guard is a reserve component of the Army; annual appropriations are made by the Federal Government; property and disbursing officers are deemed officers of the Federal Government.

Moreover, the National Guard Act of 1933, recently amended to permit the President to transfer the commissioned personnel of the guard from any State to another at his pleasure, clearly makes the organization an actual part of the United States Army and in conjunction with the powers granted in this bill would place such Federal use of the National Guard above public criticism. The discipline and training of the National Guard must conform to the United States Army—without any doubt the National Guard is a part of the Army and the decisions are not carried herewith for the sake of brevity. It is believed also likely that the Coast Guard Service and the Marine Corps will be considered a part of the Navy.

In other words, although the committee has eliminated certain words, there has been no change in meaning whatsoever. It has been stated that these changes were made on behalf of labor organizations, since they did not wish the National Guard used in strikes. However, the statute is still an outright threat to organized labor as written.

5. LABOR

Organized labor in the United States is historically opposed to such measures.

Labor organizations during the present session of Congress have repeatedly voiced their opposition, on behalf of the labor movement, to the present bill and other gag measures, for experience has shown that in their application and enforcement these bills are used against labor in its activities. The policy is in keeping with the traditional one of the labor movement as enunciated by Samuel Gompers before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-sixth Congress, in opposing a proposed sedition bill. The hearing took place on February 4, 1920.

Mr. Gompers said:

"* * * and I am apprehensive of this species of legislation. It will take the idealism out of the people of the United States; it will take the reverence out of the hearts and souls of the spirit of America. Repression and suppression all bring resentment in their wake; just as surely as the law of gravitation has its repulsion, just so surely comes the reaction against any attempt upon the national normal activities of a people * * *.

"The legislation is not reconstruction; it is destruction. This is not going to suppress or kill off discontent; it will increase it. And, whether that discontent is manifested one way or another, it will be discontent; and if the open meeting, assemblage, and freedom of the people are curbed, the underground, the secret assemblage, with all that breeds from secrecy and darkness and the feeling of suppression and denial of right will surely follow. The proposed legislation does not accomplish the desired result; for the desired result is to stamp out the advocacy of change in the Government, in the forms, in the Constitution, in the method.

"Nothing is so contributing to a better understanding of the people of the United States, or of any country, of any cause, as publicity—open publicity. And much as we are disturbed by any so-called "radicalism", it is better that it should be permitted and be counteracted by other influences that we can exert, than that we should attempt to throttle it. It will not be throttled."

6. POLITICAL

The Democratic Party, particularly its southern members, ought to have some memory of the reconstruction period of the United States. There was some occasion for the reconstruction abuses, considering that there had been a fratricidal war. Certainly there is no excuse whatsoever today for such a bill as this in peace time. That the party formed by Jefferson should favor such a bill as this is unthinkable. To pass such a bill ought to bring a rebuke to the Democratic Party.

(NOTE.—Mr. KVALE does not join in this particular expression of opinion, not being a member of the Democratic Party, and is therefore the sole expression of Mr. MAVERICK.)

7. POLITICAL SCIENCE

Just as in the science of chemistry, where we find the sudden mixture of certain elements may cause an explosion, so also in political science, or in the science of government, it has been found that the use by the Government during economic distress of violent suppressions, the violation of ordinary liberties of its citizens, and impatience often leads to revolution and governmental breakdown. One of these might be called the American Revolution, itself preceded by military suppressions and having as its beginning the Boston massacre by the British troops. This military act formed the basis of the American Revolution through the resentment of the civilian population against military suppression.

From a viewpoint of political science, it has always been found preferable to govern intelligently, with foresight, wisdom, and patience.

8. HISTORICAL

"Liberty" and "freedom" have been general terms somewhat hard to define, but liberty of speech is specific enough to discuss rather accurately. Liberty of speech has never existed in Africa and oriental countries. The uncivilized races and oriental races with dictatorial governments have never allowed freedom of speech. Neither Russia in Europe nor any portion of its Empire ever enjoyed freedom of speech, and it must be remembered that much of the psychological background of that country is oriental. With the Russian Bolshevik revolution there was no change in that policy, and today no semblance of freedom of speech exists in Russia.

Continental Europe has enjoyed in the past few centuries varying degrees of freedom of speech, though never of a very wide latitude. It has, however, enjoyed more of such freedom than the rest of the world, save England. Historically, England has always enjoyed more freedom of speech than Continental Europe, and yet, before the American Revolution it was unfortunately restricted.

When the Declaration of Independence was written it was determined by our forefathers that the surest way to have a free government was to have the widest latitude in the freedom of speech. They really wished to have a free government, and practically every one of the leaders of the Revolution and the political leaders that came for 100 years afterward were opposed to any such limitation, with the possible exception of President John Adams, in whose administration the Alien and Sedition Acts were enacted.

Thomas Jefferson literally despised any such laws as this. It is Jefferson who reminds us that "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" and that "The ground of liberty must be gained by inches." One of the greatest of modern political philosophers, John Stuart Mill, has asserted that "the only freedom which deserves the name is that of pursuing our own good in our own way, so long as we do not attempt to deprive others of theirs, or impede their efforts to attain it." In his famous essay on Liberty, Mill concluded that:

"A State which dwarfs its men, in order that they may be more docile instruments in its hands even for beneficial purposes, will find that with small men no great thing can really be accomplished; and that the perfection of machinery to which it has sacrificed everything will in the end avail it nothing, for want of the vital power which, in order that the machine might work more smoothly, it has preferred to banish."

This measure is one of those coercive, eroding, and corroding acts by which liberty is destroyed in the name of patriotism—patriotism, which, when thus unfairly used as a subterfuge for tyranny, deserves the comment made by Dr. Johnson that it is "the last refuge of the scoundrel."

Who are the people, what are the forces, behind this bill? There is much fake talk about "liberty" in the land and there is even an organization called the Liberty League, whose secretary enjoys close relations of friendship with the powerful Du Pont munitions interests and who also receives a very high salary to brand as "unconstitutional" or tyrannical most of this administration's measures designed to help the average man. Mr. Jouett Shouse and his subsidized Liberty League have not come out in the open against this present bill. And everyone knows why.

A check of several high-ranking Army officers would indicate that the Army is not for this bill. The Navy appears to be divided in its recommendations, and denies emphatically that subversive influences are any important problem in its share of the national defense.

The Navy has had for some time a "red squad" and certain of its officers have spent practically all their time running down "communists" and undoubtedly they are a little jittery. However, it should again be noted that the Assistant Secretary of the Navy maintains that there is no communism in the Navy—absolutely no present danger of it—and that any communistic influence is "absolutely infinitesimal."

So-called "patriotic societies"—patrioteers—the traditional front of the munitions lobby, are in good faith for this bill. Certain business groups, moreover, who are frankly interested in having the Government and the States maintain a reliable force of potential strikebreakers through the Army and the National Guard have rationalized their desires into a spirit of lofty and disinterested concern for the preservation of our country from "subversive doctrines."

It is the old line-up: The munitioneers, the patrioteers, and the chamber of commerce. The self-appointed friends of the Constitution, so far as it protects their excessive property rights, are here proposing to violate the Constitution so far as it pretends to protect free institutions and human rights of others. Tyranny masquerading as liberty is everywhere on the defensive today, but never more so than in the house of its self-proclaimed friends and blood relatives.

It is amusing to think that this proposed law would in all likelihood be as great a threat to the chamber of commerce and the reactionary elements as any radical element. Should the chamber of commerce, or certain newspapers, or any newspapers, get out of line or talk too much, or tell the truth, for that matter, the military might use such a law to lock them up, too. This law is a severe danger to every lawful element in America.

9. PRACTICAL

From a practical viewpoint, this suggested law is worse than nonsense. It is a piece of gross stupidity. Being wholly useless, it will immediately appeal to the public imagination as an excuse by the Government for not enacting laws which meet the economic needs of the day. It will stimulate interest in the very ideas which it aims to suppress. The soldier or sailor, for instance, will say: "If they are using all these laws to protect me, there must be something to this radicalism", and instead of preventing disaffection it will cause disaffection. Therefore, from a military viewpoint, it is entirely impractical and will be hailed with joy and glee by the Communists and extreme radicals—those who violently disagree with the Government—because it will give them an opportunity to say they have been denied their rights of organizing or enjoying the usual constitutional liberties of an American citizen, and will give them undue opportunity of declaring our Government one of a military fascist nature. It will, as brought out originally, furnish the weapons for a reactionary revolution, which would be sure to be followed in due course by a radical revolution.

This bill is impractical from many viewpoints. If a mother wrote her son, a soldier, and told him that the Army was no place for him and enjoined him to get out, she would be subject to a penitentiary sentence. Any newspaper so much as suggesting an increase or decrease in the Army would be subject to its provisions. A newspaper suggesting that the Navy did not have the best battleships could be charged with violation of the law in that they were inciting sailors to disaffection, thinking the ships might not be suitable for their sailing. Criticism of brutality, mistreatment, bad food, insanitary conditions—or anything of that character—could be met by the most brutal suppression, searches and seizures, and penitentiary sentences.

10. CONCLUSION

This measure, put forward apparently casually and in as inconspicuous a manner as possible, is a direct, unnecessary, and wanton assault on the freedom of the press and of speech, and on our traditional rights of immunity against unreasonable search and seizure. At the very least, it is a sop designed to cater to the prejudices of those so-called "patriotic groups" who think that the most becoming garb for the Statue of Liberty is a straitjacket and that American freedom consists of allowing the liberties of the people to be anesthetized into complete coma. At worst, it is an under-handed attempt to prevent the American people from criticizing or organizing to oppose the magnificent grabs of the munitions makers and other selfish special interests and to put the whole authority of the United States behind unimpeded appropriations for the relief of the Schwabs, Du Ponts, and Morgans, who thrive on battleships and munitions contracts. It is also a snide effort to prevent that free discussion which would help to prevent foolish and unnecessary wars.

We do not face a war. We do not face a revolution. There is no danger of mutiny in our armed forces. The American converts to communism are contemptibly few in number and without any influence whatsoever. This is fascism pure and simple. There is no need for the enactment of this bill into law and there is every reason for its rejection in the Congress by the political party of liberty and freedom in the United States.

(p) To exercise all other powers, not inconsistent with the Constitutions of the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey or of the United States, which may be reasonably necessary or incidental to the effectuation of its authorized purposes or to the exercise of any of the foregoing powers, except the power to levy taxes or assessments for benefits; and generally to exercise, in connection with its property and affairs and in connection with property under its control, any and all powers which might be exercised by a natural person or a private corporation in connection with similar property and affairs.

ARTICLE III

If for any of its authorized purposes (including temporary purposes) the commission shall find it necessary or convenient to acquire for public use any real property in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania or the State of New Jersey, whether for immediate or future use, the commission may, by resolution, determine to acquire such property by a fee simple absolute or a lesser interest, and the said determination shall not be affected by the fact that such property has therefore been taken for or is then devoted to a public use, but the public use in the hands or under the control of the commission shall be deemed superior to the public use in the hands or under the control of any other person, association, or corporation.

If the commission is unable to agree with the owner or owners thereof upon terms for the acquisition of any such real property in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, for any reason whatsoever, then the commission may acquire such real property by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, in the manner provided by the act, approved the 8th day of May 1919 (Pamphlet Laws, 148), entitled "An act providing for the joint acquisition and maintenance by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey of certain toll bridges over the Delaware River", and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, relating to the acquisition of interstate toll bridges over the Delaware River.

If the commission is unable to agree with the owner or owners thereof upon terms for the acquisition of any such real property, in the State of New Jersey, for any reason whatsoever, then the commission may acquire such property by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, in the manner provided by the act of the State of New Jersey, entitled "An act authorizing the acquisition and maintaining by the State of New Jersey, in conjunction with the State of Pennsylvania, of toll bridges across the Delaware River; and providing for free travel across the same", approved the 1st day of April 1912 (ch. 297), and the various acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, relating to the acquisition of interstate toll bridges over the Delaware River.

The power of the commission to acquire real property by condemnation or the exercise of the power of eminent domain in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey shall be a continuing power and no exercise thereof shall be deemed to exhaust it.

The commission and its duly authorized agents and employees may enter upon any land, in the Commonwealth or the State of New Jersey, for the purpose of making such surveys, maps, or other examinations thereof, as it may deem necessary or convenient for its authorized purposes.

However, anything to the contrary contained in this compact notwithstanding, no property, now or hereafter vested in or held by any county, city, borough, village, township, or other municipality, shall be taken by the commission without the consent of such municipality, unless expressly authorized so to do by the Commonwealth or State in which such municipality is located. All counties, cities, boroughs, villages, townships, and other municipalities, and all public agencies and commissions of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, notwithstanding any contrary provision of law, are hereby authorized and empowered to grant and convey to the commission upon its request, but not otherwise, upon reasonable terms and conditions, any real property which may be necessary or convenient to the effectuation of its authorized purposes, including real property already devoted to public use.

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey hereby consent to the use and occupation by the commission of any real property of the said two States, or of either of them, which may be or become necessary or convenient to the effectuation of the authorized purposes of the commission, including lands lying under water and lands already devoted to public use.

The term "real property", as used in this compact, includes lands, structures, franchises, and interests in land, including lands under water and riparian rights, and any and all things and rights usually included within the said term, and includes not only fees simple and absolute but also any and all lesser interests, such as easements, rights-of-way, uses, leases, licenses, and all other incorporeal hereditaments, and every estate, interest, or right, legal or equitable, including terms of years and liens thereon by way of judgments, mortgages, or otherwise, and also claims for damage to real estate.

ARTICLE IV

Notwithstanding any provision of this agreement, the commission shall have no power to pledge the credit of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, or of the State of New Jersey, or of any county, city, borough, village, township, and other municipality of said Commonwealth or State, or to create any debt against said Commonwealth or State or any such municipality.

ARTICLE V

The commission is hereby authorized to make and enforce such rules and regulations, and to establish, levy, and collect (or to authorize by contract, franchise, liens, or otherwise the establishment, levying, and collection of) such tolls, rates, rents, and other charges, in connection with any such bridge across the Delaware River which it may hereafter construct and operate, as it may deem necessary, proper, desirable, and reasonable, which tolls, rates, rents, and other charges shall be at least sufficient to meet interest and sinking-fund charges on bonds and obligations issued by the commission, the maintenance of such bridge, and the administrative expenses of the commission properly chargeable to such bridge. The commission is hereby authorized and empowered to pledge such tolls, rates, rents, and other revenues, or any part thereof, as security for the repayment, with interest, of any moneys borrowed by it or advanced to it for any of its authorized purposes, and as security for the satisfaction of any other obligation assumed by it in connection with such loans or advances.

ARTICLE VI

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey hereby covenant and agree with each other and with the holders of any bonds or other obligations of the commission, for which tolls, rents, rates, or other revenues have been pledged, that, so long as any of said bonds or obligations remain outstanding and unpaid (unless adequate provision is otherwise made by law for the protection of those advancing moneys upon such bonds or obligations), the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey will not diminish or impair the power of the commission to own, operate, and control said properties and facilities, or to establish, levy, and collect tolls, rents, rates, and other charges in connection with such properties and facilities.

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey hereby covenant and agree with each other and with the holders of any bonds or obligations of the commission, for which tolls, rents, rates, or other revenues shall have been pledged, that said Commonwealth and State will not authorize or permit the construction, operation, and maintenance of any additional bridge or tunnel for the transportion of passengers by vehicles over the Delaware River by any other person or body, than the commission, within a distance of 10 miles in either direction from any such toll bridge, measured along the boundary line between the said Commonwealth and the said State.

ARTICLE VII

The bonds or obligations which may be issued by the commission for any of its authorized purposes, and as security for which tolls, rents, rates, and other revenues shall have been pledged, are hereby made securities in which all State and municipal officers and bodies of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, and all banks, bankers, trust companies, savings banks, savings and loan associations, investment companies, and other persons carrying on a banking business, or insurance companies, insurance associations, and other persons carrying on an insurance business, and all administrators, executors, guardians, trustees, and other fiduciaries, and all other persons whatsoever, who now or may hereafter be authorized to invest in bonds or other obligations of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania or of the State of New Jersey, may properly and legally invest funds, including capital belonging to them or within their control; and said bonds or other obligations are hereby made securities which may properly and legally be deposited with and received by any State or municipal officer, or agency of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, for any purpose for which the deposit of bonds or other obligations, either of the Commonwealth or of the State, is now or may hereafter be authorized.

ARTICLE VIII

The effectuation of its authorized purposes by the commission is and will be in all respects for the benefit of the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, and for the increase of their commerce and prosperity, and since the commission will be performing essential governmental functions in effectuating said purposes, the commission shall not be required to pay any taxes or assessments upon any property acquired or used by it for purposes authorized by this agreement; and the bonds or obligations issued by the commission, their transfer, and the income therefrom, including any profits made on the sale thereof, shall, at all times, be free from taxation within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey.

ARTICLE IX

The commission shall make annual reports to the Governors and Legislatures of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, setting forth in detail its operations and transactions, and make make such additional reports, from time to time, to the Governors and legislatures as it may deem advisable.

Whenever the commission, after investigation and study, shall have concluded plans, with estimates of cost, and means of financing any new toll bridge across the Delaware River, as hereinbefore provided, it shall make to the legislatures of each State, at the next sessions thereof, a detailed report, dealing with the contemplated project; but such project may, nevertheless, be proceeded with if the legislatures of said States, or either of them, are not in session.

ARTICLE X

Whenever particular bonds issued for any bridge or bridges, and the interest thereon, shall have been paid, or a sufficient amount shall have been provided for their payment and shall continue to be held for that purpose, the commission shall cease to charge tolls for the use of such bridge and thereafter such bridge shall be a free bridge, and shall thereafter be maintained equally at the cost of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey by appropriations made for such purposes, as now provided by law for the maintenance of bridges over the Delaware River acquired by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey.

In witness whereof, this 18th day of December, 1934, A. Harry Moore has affixed his signature hereto as Governor of the State of New Jersey and caused the great seal of the State to be attached thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from New York to 20 minutes.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is an omnibus bridge bill, which has been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The necessity for the bill arises from the fact that on days when the Consent Calendar has been called during this session of Congress a few of our colleagues have taken it upon themselves to object, frequently without reason, to these bills, which have been carefully considered by the standing subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce having jurisdiction of bridge bills.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Not now. Each of these bills has been reported to and considered by the full Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. No bill has been reported to this House to be placed on the Consent Calendar until after it has been given careful and deliberate consideration by the members of that committee. Every one of these bills, whatever type of project it is intended to authorize, is strictly according to the approved form which has been evolved through years of practice and experience with bridge legislation in this House. I wish to say for the other members of the committee on both sides of this aisle that they have studied and worked on these bills conscientiously and diligently to insure that no bill reached the floor of this House which should not be considered and passed. Every section of this omnibus bill is strictly in accordance with the appropriate form out of that set of approved forms established by the precedents of the committee and of the House.

It is regrettable to the members of our committee that Members of the House who have meritorious bridge bills should have had them blocked and held up as they have been throughout this session by "conscientious objectors", and that it should now become necessary to bring in this omnibus bill. But, Mr. Speaker, the only chance in these closing days of the session to obtain the passage of these bridge bills that have been approved by the committee and that are worthy of the approval of the House is by means of this omnibus bill.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. With very few exceptions, this legislation grants authority to States, highway commissions, counties, or municipalities, so that we are granting rights direct to the subordinate States of the Union?

Mr. CHAPMAN. That is correct. I wish to thank my distinguished colleague the ranking minority member on the subcommittee for that suggestion. It is true that most of these bills grant authority to States, counties, municipalities, or to agencies granted authority by State legislation for the construction and maintenance of these bridges.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. At least in half a dozen instances authority is granted to private corporations to build toll bridges; is that not correct?

Mr. CHAPMAN. If the gentleman had waited, that would have been the next sentence. In a few instances, it is true, Mr. Speaker, that authority is granted to private individuals. In each instance the facts and circumstances have been carefully gone into and the authorization is justified. There has been a great deal said on the floor of this House during the present session in opposition to toll bridges. All of us long for the day when every bridge, like every highway in this country, shall be free, but we all know, as practical men, as men of experience, as observers in our own States, that the only possible way that a great many of these bridges can ever be constructed is by making them toll bridges and letting the people who use them pay the tolls until the amortization period is over, when they will become free bridges dedicated to the public use.

Mr. O'NEAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I yield to my colleague from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. Is it not a fact that in the case of a privately owned toll bridge it replaces a privately owned toll ferry?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I thank the gentleman for that suggestion. I was just coming to that. It is true that on many of the great highways that are being constructed with public funds the only way in which a river can be crossed today is by means of an inadequate ferry service. In the first place, with the rapid and tremendous growth of automobile, bus, and truck traffic in this country there has resulted necessarily much congestion in traffic. It retards business. In addition to that, not infrequently we notice in the papers where, because of the use of those small ferryboats over dangerous rivers, people drive cars off the end and go down into the river and are drowned. Only 2 or 3 weeks ago I read of an incident like that which occurred in a nearby State. A few years ago some of my friends in Kentucky were victims of the same kind of accident. Not only is it necessary to have these bridges in order to carry the great volume of automobile traffic in the country but it is also necessary in the interest of the public safety.

In addition to those considerations, a rather comprehensive bridge program like this, including projects in various States of the Union, is important as a recovery measure. Its consummation will require vast amounts of materials and supplies in the construction of so many bridges. It will give employment to thousands of laborers throughout the land, skilled and unskilled. I hope that for the public interest, and in justice to the communities and States which are seeking, through their Representatives, the passage of this legislation, this bill will be given the overwhelming approval of the House.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that there is a bridge in this bill that is in my district. However, I am going to reserve my opinion just now as to how I shall vote upon the question for although I am against toll bridges there are cases where we must get what we can and then improve the situation later. I wish to state to the Members of this House a fact that exists in West Virginia in my congressional district. The Public Works Administration appropriated $325,000 to the State Road Commission of West Virginia to construct a bridge across the Potomac River at Shepherdstown, W. Va., not more than $40,000 of which was to be used in the purchase of the old bridge, which has repaid the people who had it over and over again. Yet they have consistently refused to sell that toll bridge which was placed there by private funds, and in this very bill we continue the practice of erecting bridges by private individuals. So a needed program is being held up because those who now have the bridge will not allow it to be sold for the amount that the Public Works Administration can pay for it.

Mr. CHAPMAN. The terms of the bills included in this omnibus bill obviate the possibility of such difficulties arising in connection with the bridges for which authorization is sought.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHAPMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman speaks of the amortization of these bridges and of their finally becoming free bridges.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. Is it not a fact that there are many toll bridges in this country that have been maintained for over 50 years and are still toll bridges?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Yes, sir; but they are not in this bill, and that cannot happen under any bill reported by this committee.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 12 minutes.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as to the comprehensive statement made by the chairman of the committee, I think that I can add nothing. As I have had no requests for time I shall yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE].

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the bill be read for amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

TOLL BRIDGE LEGISLATION SHOULD NOT BE CONSIDERED IN AN OMNIBUS BILL

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, in view of certain remarks that have been made here by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] and since I have been one of the regularly appointed objectors against some of these bridge bills, I rise at this time to make my position clear to the Members of the House who may not have been here when these bridge bills were considered.

First let me call to your attention that the omnibus toll-bridge bill, containing 41 sections and 61 pages, being reported from the committee less than a week and brought up under suspension where it is impossible for any one of the 40 separate and distinct bills to be amended, to my way of thinking, is nothing short of an outrage.

Since I heard a few moments ago that this bridge bill was going to be called up in this manner, I have sent to the Document Room to secure a copy of the bill and a report, no such bill being available within the Chambers, and I find upon a hurried examination that the Department of Agriculture has filed with the committee good and sufficient objections to the consideration of 4 out of the first 5 toll-bridge bills included in this omnibus bill. I realize that the authors of these toll-bridge bills and their friends in the different delegations from their States are present and are determined to pass these bills; however, might does not make right.

I have never objected to any toll bridge being built by a State, county, city, or municipality where the amortization was within a reasonable time. But under conditions such as we have here where amendments cannot be offered, where we are not allowed to separate the sheep from the goats, so to speak, we have to take them lock, stock, and barrel, regardless. I just do not like any such method of legislation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The conditions under which this bill is brought up makes it impossible to strike out section 1, which renews permission granted to a company in 1931, which company has never made any attempt to build the bridge.

Mr. McFARLANE. There are nine such provisions in the bill giving private corporations and certain individuals these exclusive rights to build these bridges, and renewing these rights for a period of years when they have shown no disposition in the past to build these bridges.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. One of the wrongs of my district are the toll bridges across the Potomac River at Shepherdstown, and also at Harpers Ferry, and across the Potomac River at Williamsport, Md., and Martinsburg, W. Va. The annual intake of the latter bridge is said to be $90,000. This bridge cost $112,000 to build, I am told. Tolls continue to be charged and they will not reduce them. The time has come to have free bridges on Federal highways. We must stop toll bridges being allowed to indefinitely operate at high rates. What are we going to do about it?

Mr. McFARLANE. If we are going to consider bills like this we cannot do anything about it. I think the Members should stay here and consider these bills separately on their merits rather than bring them up in an omnibus bill where we have to vote for all or against all. I know many Members are interested in these bills, and it does not seem right to call them up in this manner under suspension where the 22 bills are considered together and not be allowed to strike out the bad bills. These are some of the objections I have to this bill.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. COSTELLO. Another point the gentleman might bring out is that a number of bills are included in this bill which are opposed by the Department of Agriculture as is shown in the committee reports on the bridges.

The statement was made that objectors objected to these bills without any reason. We object to those bills that are opposed by the Department of Agriculture and I think that is sufficient justification.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. We object to granting permission to private interests to build toll bridges on the ground, too, that in many cases it is never intended to build the bridge but is just intended as promotion schemes to sell stock to the public, to profit on the public, and nothing else.

Mr. McFARLANE. There is no doubt about that, and it is regrettable that they force this omnibus bill in here at this time to be considered with little debate and without amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan for a question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is this procedure that the gentleman complains of today not just the same as has been rammed down our necks all this session?

Mr. McFARLANE. I may say to the gentleman in answer to his question that the party the gentleman belongs to rammed that kind of stuff down our necks for 12 years before the present administration came in. I have never approved of their tactics and do not approve of such legislation being considered here now in this manner.

Under permission given to revise and extend my remarks I want to analyze some of the reasons given by the different departments as to why some of these measures should not be enacted.

First let me call to your attention that by an amendment offered by Mr. CHAPMAN, 18 of the 41 sections of the bill were eliminated. These 18 sections thus eliminated were not included in the printed report of the bill and no authorization or authority from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee is shown by the report or was made known by the gentleman from Kentucky in his remarks on the floor in explaining the bill. The last 6 sections of the bill were added during the consideration of the bill in the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which leaves only 7 sections in the entire bill that have the approval of the different departments of Government, who are consulted regarding such measures. The last section of the bill grants certain land in Louisiana for State highway purposes. Summarizing, we find that 9 of the 22 remaining sections in the bill are strenuously objected to by at least one department of Government.

Let me review some of the objections filed to 9 of these toll-bridge bills:

Section 1, toll bridge for Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo. Mr. Wallace, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, concerning this proposed toll bridge, said:

> When the original bill to authorize the construction of this bridge was pending, this Department submitted adverse reports thereon, stating that if an additional bridge across the Mississippi River at this point was needed a publicly owned bridge could be constructed and financed from the tolls and be made free in a much shorter time than would be possible under any plan for a private toll bridge. It still is the view of the Department that a private toll bridge should not be constructed at this point, for which reason it recommends against enactment of the pending bill.

Section 3, toll bridge, Potomac River, between Old Town, Md., and Green Spring, W. Va. Mr. Tugwell, Acting Secretary for the Department of Agriculture, says concerning this toll bridge:

> A bridge across the Potomac River at the point proposed would not be a large and expensive structure and, therefore, should not be difficult to finance as a public enterprise if there is a real need for a bridge at that point. Furthermore, the States of Maryland and West Virginia have just recently acquired several private toll bridges across the Potomac River west of Washington, and it is not believed that any new private toll bridge should be authorized across this stream.
> The Department, therefore, recommends against favorable action on the bill.

Section 4, toll bridge, Ohio River, at Wellsburg, W. Va. Mr. Wallace, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, in opposing this toll bridge, says:

> This bill would create the Brookewell Bridge Co. and grant to such company, its successors and assigns, the authority to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at or near Wellsburg, W. Va. The location indicated for the proposed bridge would constitute a connection across the Ohio River between routes on the systems of Federal-aid highways approved for the States of Ohio and West Virginia, the same being United States Highway No. 22.
> The proposed company would be composed of seven citizens of Brooke County, W. Va., the mayor of the city of Wellsburg and his successors in office, and the president of the county court of Brooke County, W. Va., and his successors in office. Neither the State of Ohio nor any subdivision thereof would have any representative on the personnel of said company nor would any citizens of Ohio be included in such personnel. Said company furthermore would be composed of only 2 public officials and 7 private citizens with authority vested in the company to fill any vacancy which may occur in its personnel by a majority vote of the members thereof. It is the view of the Department, therefore, that a company so constituted is essentially a private concern, and that the construction and operation of the proposed bridge by such company would be essentially a private enterprise.

The Department is of the opinion that a private toll bridge should not be constructed at the point proposed on the interstate route on the system of Federal-aid highways. It, therefore, recommends against favorable action on the bill.

Section 6, toll bridge, Mississippi River at New Boston, Ill. Mr. M. L. Wilson, Acting Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, says, concerning this toll bridge:

This bill would further revive and reenact the act of March 3, 1931, which authorized the individuals therein named, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at or near New Boston, Ill.

When the original bill to authorize the parties named to construct this bridge was pending this Department recommended against its enactment. Under date of March 8, 1934, the Department also submitted an adverse report on a bill then pending to revive and reenact the enactment of March 3, 1931, to authorize the parties named to construct this bridge. Notwithstanding the Department's adverse report and the reasons therein stated, the bill to revive and reenact the original act was passed by Congress and approved April 30, 1934 (48 Stat. 652).

The Department is still of the view that a private toll bridge should not be authorized at the point proposed. It, therefore, recommends against favorable action on the bill.

Section 22, toll bridge, Potomac River at Dahlgren, Va. Mr. M. L. Wilson, Acting Secretary of Department of Agriculture, in opposing this bridge, says:

This bill would authorize the George Washington Memorial Bridge Public Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge or a combined railroad and highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River between a point in the vicinity of Dahlgren, King George County, Va., and a point south of Popes Creek, in Charles County, Md.

Similar authority for the construction of a bridge at the point proposed was granted by act of Congress approved May 5, 1926, to what apparently was the same corporation as the pending bill now proposes to grant such authority. Nine years have now elapsed since this organization was authorized to construct this bridge, and it apparently has been and is unable to proceed with its construction. The Department's view, therefore, is that they should not be permitted to continue to encumber the proposed location with a grant of authority for the construction of a bridge. For this reason, it is not believed that favorable consideration should be given to the pending bill.

Section 27, toll bridge, Gulf of Mexico between Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, Ala. Secretary Wallace, of the Department of Agriculture, says in opposing this bill:

The bill (lines 7 and 8) refers to "Mobile County, Ala., transferee", from which it is inferred that the authorization originally granted for the construction of this bridge has been assigned to Mobile County. The Department, however, has no other information concerning any such assignment. It is noted that more than 8 years have now elapsed since the original act authorizing the construction of this bridge was passed, and it is the view of the Department that the beneficiary under such legislation should not be permitted to tie up a location where the construction of a bridge may be desirable for any such length of time if it cannot proceed with construction. The Department, therefore, recommends against favorable action on this bill unless there actually has been an assignment to Mobile County and satisfactory evidence of such assignment is filed with your committee.

Section 31, toll bridge, Missouri River at Arrow Rock, Mo. Mr. Wallace, Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, in opposing this bridge says:

This bill would authorize J. L. Jones, Tyre W. Burton, and H. R. Turley, trustees, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Mo. It provides that the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to meet annual maintenance, repair, and operation costs and provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge within not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof and that thereafter the bridge shall be operated free from tolls, or the rates shall be so adjusted as to provide only for maintenance, repair, and operation costs.

Any bridge constructed under the provisions of the bill would be essentially a private toll bridge. While the bill refers to the parties named therein as "trustees", and the authority which would be granted for the construction of the bridge would be to the parties named in that capacity, there is nothing to indicate for whom such parties are to act as "trustees" or how the status of "trustee" was attained by the parties named. Apparently they merely assumed the position of "trustee", as there does not appear to be any provision in the statutes of Missouri for the creation of a body of trustees for the purpose of building and operating a toll bridge on the public highways of that State. It would seem, therefore, that the parties named can act in an individual capacity with respect to the bridge, notwithstanding the use of the term "trustees" in the bill proposing to grant them authority for its construction.

The Department, therefore, recommends against favorable action on the bill.

Section 33, toll bridge, Ohio River at Louisville, Ky. Mr. M. L. Wilson, Acting Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, says in opposing this bill:

The effect of the proposed amendment may be to extend the period of collecting tolls on this bridge indefinitely unless there is a limit to the time for which such bridge revenue refunding bonds may be issued. The act of February 25, 1928, which authorized the city of Louisville to construct this bridge, provided that the toll rates should be so adjusted as to meet annual maintenance, repair, and operation costs and provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. It is the understanding of this Department that the revenues from the tolls on this bridge have been more than adequate to meet the requirements necessary for maintenance, repair, and operation costs and for providing the requisite sinking fund for retirement of the bonds when due—that is, within 20 years from the date of completion of the bridge. The effect of the proposed amendment would appear to be to authorize the Louisville Bridge Commission to extend the period of toll collection if they should issue revenue bonds for a term longer than the term of the original bonds issued under date of May 21, 1928.

The Department would recommend against the bill unless the period of collecting tolls is restricted to not exceed 20 years from the date of completion of the bridge as provided in the original act under which it was constructed.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McFARLANE, Mr. O'MALLEY, and Mr. KENNEY) there were—ayes 163, noes 31.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seven Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 32, not voting 165, as follows:

IN DEFENSE OF THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. DELGADO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DELGADO. Mr. Speaker, in an effort to correct some unfair misrepresentations recently published in some newspapers, I am taking advantage of the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD to include the following statement of mine:

The forces of imperialism seem to have taken a new lease of life, notwithstanding the now final decision of the American people through the Seventy-third Congress on the political future of the Philippines, to judge from the numerous newspaper articles reproducing in a more or less varied form the old and mummified arguments previously used against the capacity of the Filipinos. Recently newspapers reported that the Secretary of the Navy reprimanded a certain admiral for publishing an article which, it was feared, may drag the United States into some international complications. The same admiral published another article, just brought to my attention, picturing the Philippines as a country in the grip of "baneful politicians" and inhabited by a conglomeration of heterogeneous tribes incapable of governing themselves without the helping hand of another more enlightened race. No reprimand is necessary for this later article, as clearly no international complication could arise from mere misrepresentations, however gross, of a subject people. What the admiral does appear to need, however, is some accurate information about the Philippines and its people.

The admiral sounded a false alarm when he trumpeted a dismal prediction of disaster for the Filipinos in the event of independence. The alleged divergence of culture, religion, and speech among the "heterogeneous tribes" have apparently impelled the admiral, maybe out of unselfish motives, to hoist the danger signal. He has seen, through his high-powered telescope, gathering clouds, too, over the Moroland.

It is not my intention to take issue with the admiral on his conclusions about our future, as that will only open an endless argument. But, certainly, something must be said about some of his assertions bearing on the ethnological character of and some historical facts about the Filipino people. I shall try to avoid personal bias, natural in any individual speaking about his country, by measuring the veracity of the admiral's statement with the very yardstick of other illustrious Americans' study and observations.

THE PHILIPPINE POPULATION NOT A CONGLOMERATION OF HETEROGENEOUS TRIBES

The late Chief Justice Taft, who spent several years of official life in the Philippines, and in whose juristic mind prejudice and pride, much less conceit, had no place, said in 1914:

"The word 'tribe' is a misnomer. There is racial solidarity among them undoubtedly. They are homogeneous. I cannot tell the difference between an Ilocano, a Tagalog, or a Visayan; to me all Filipinos are alike."

Mr. Cameron Forbes, also a former Governor General of the Philippine Islands, and an outspoken advocate of the retention of the Philippines, observed in his book, The Philippine Islands:

"Racially the Filipino is a Malay, and throughout the islands the bulk of the population shows similarity in origin and types.

* * * * * * *

"But the fact is that the people are reasonably similar in type, generally so in religion; have the same ideal and characteristics, and are imbued throughout with a great pride in their race and desire for its advancement which would make them capable, under the common language, of being welded into a united, cohesive body politic."

Dr. Merton I. Miller, former chief ethnologist of the Bureau of Science of the Philippine Islands, said:

"With the exception of a few scattered Negritos, the people of the Philippines—Pagan, Moro, and Christian—are one racially."

James LeRoy, one of the foremost authorities on Philippine history, said:

"That the native stock of the Philippine Islands is Malayan is one of those things that have been recognized always, everywhere, and by all. But in writings, especially of recent years, so many fantastic strains of blood have been introduced into the archipelago, and too many purely hypothetical and often unreasonable conjectures as to the diversity of tribal origin have been evolved in the treatises of library workers or globe trotters, that the underlying homogeneity of the inhabitants of the archipelago has often been obscured." (Philippine Life in Town and Country.)

Nothing, indeed, more than a light treatment of the difficult subject of the ethnology of a race could reasonably be expected from light-headed writers.

PHILIPPINE LANGUAGES

The Filipinos have never made any extravagant claim about their race. We do not deny that the native languages spoken by those in the northern part are not exactly the same as those used in the southern part. This we do not blush to admit, any more than the very enlightened and progressive people of Switzerland would be ashamed to admit that various languages are spoken by them. But it must not be forgotten that English and Spanish serve as common languages among our people at present.

The admiral's conclusions and assertions, however vehement they may be, cannot change the following findings, the result of a scientific study, made by Dr. Merton I. Miller:

"There are different languages or dialects in the Philippines, and all are closely related to one another; the pronunciation and mode of speech vary very little from one section of the Philippines to another, and a majority of the words are common to two or more of the Philippine languages. These languages, whether spoken by Pagan, Moro, or Christian, belong to the great Malay-Polynesian family."

RELIGION

While statisticians and almost all who write about the Philippine Islands agree that about 94 percent of the Filipinos are Christians, the admiral again sounded a nervous warning about the disastrous effect of our different religions. Prof. Austin Craig, who has been making an investigation of the history of the oriental races, and whose preference as a historian is "better not to know so much than to know so much that is not so", said in his Oriental History:

"Four hundred years of Christian outline and education, regardless of what the Filipino may prefer, have made the inhabitants of the islands between Batel Tabago, in the Batanes group, and Manucmanucan (south of Sulu) a part of Christendom and taken them out of the Orient, which is still heathendom."

The following statistical figures should be conclusive on this point:

Present estimated total population	13,636,074
Present estimated Christian population	12,735,566
Present estimated Mohammedan population	472,463
Present estimated pagan population	402,790
All others, unclassified	25,255

OUR MOHAMMEDAN BROTHERS

The admiral also said in his article that Moros in the Philippines were always a thorn at the side of the Spanish Government. If that was so, the Christian Filipinos were a dagger over the head of that Government. There were many more revolts in Luzon and the Visayan Islands than in Mindanao during the Spanish regime.

I shall let the Moros themselves ease the admiral's overanxiety over the so-called "Moro question." In the files of the House Committee on Insular Affairs is kept the original of the following petition:

"Petition from Mohammedan Filipinos to the President, the Congress of the United States, and the American people for the immediate and complete independence of the Philippines.

"We, Mohammedan Filipinos, who had subscribed to this petition, hereby express and make of record our feelings and convictions on the matter of Philippine independence.

"We favor the granting of independence unreservedly. We join our Filipino Christian brothers in their demand for immediate, complete, and absolute independence. We ratify each and every one of the declarations contained in two memorials, one engraved in metal and the other written on paper, signed by our Datu Facundu Mandi, and Provincial Governor Carlos Camins, Municipal President Crispin Atilano, Judge Antonio Horrilleno, and Messrs. Pablo Lorenzo, Jose Erquiaga, and Tomas Valdes, and handed on September 7, 1931, to Hon. Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War of the United States, on occasion of his visit to Zamboanga.

"Although we belong to the Mohammedan faith, we are Filipinos in blood and sentiment, and as such form part of that great political body called the Filipino people. Our religious beliefs do not in any way alter our aspiration to become an independent people. Providence had given us our country to love, serve, and die for.

"With all the force that we can bring to bear we must protest against any plan or attempt at segregation of the islands of Mindanao, Sulu, and Palawan. Such a plan, if carried out, would be highly unjust, as it would divide and weaken the Filipino people. It would be against the designs of Providence, for these islands, like any other island in the Philippines, are a part and parcel of the Philippine soil.

"Therefore we petition the President and Congress of the United States and the American people to give us our liberty by granting the independence of our country without further delay.

"Respectfully submitted.

"DATU FACUNDU MANDI,
"Zamboanga, P. I., September 15, 1931."

(One thousand five hundred and seventy signatures were attached to this petition. The names of individuals and their addresses are being retained in the permanent files of the committee.)

It is sincerely hoped that those bent on resurrecting a dead issue should confine themselves to the factual merits of their side of the case rather than cast unfounded and unfair aspersions on a race so grateful and friendly as the Filipinos are to the American people.

CIVILIZATION IS AGAIN MENACED BY A STATE OF MIND AMONG SOME MODERN RULERS SIMILAR TO THAT WHICH AFFLICTED THE LEADING PERSECUTORS OF ANCIENT AND MEDIEVAL TIMES—RULERS OF GERMANY OF TODAY ARE A MENACE TO OUR CIVILIZATION—AMERICA SHOULD NOT PARTICIPATE IN ANY OLYMPICS IF THEY ARE TO BE HELD IN GERMANY

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain clippings and excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, several days ago I wrote a letter to the American Olympic Association protesting against this country's participation in the Olympic games which are to be held in Germany in 1936.

I object to our participating in these games if they are to be held in Germany. I object to the sending of our youth to Germany, and I object to the spending of American money in Germany during these times.

The Olympics have a historical significance. The youth of the world meet to promote good sportsmanship, brotherly feeling between the peoples of various nationalities and races, and the fundamental ideals of democracy—equality and justice.

But such ideals are detested in the Germany of today. Its rulers are preaching racial and religious hatreds. Its rulers are persecuting Jews, Christians—both Protestants and Catholics—and Masons, with a fiendish and fanatical delight and pleasure at the suffering they cause.

I object to our participation in Olympic games in a land where hatred and persecution is preached by its rulers and where tyranny and oppression is the foundation upon which its government rests.

Furthermore, the rulers of Germany are already using the expected Olympics for their propaganda of hate and persecution.

The youth of this country cannot improve their character or morals by participating in games in that country. There is danger of racial and religious antagonisms at the Olympics, if held in Germany, so as to embroil the youth of our country. Why should they go there to be subjected to propaganda against democracy and the fundamental principles of liberty that we cherish?

The rulers of Germany are preaching hatred toward constitutional government and those fundamental religious ideals of love and charity to one's neighbors—those cardinal principles of all religions—and gloat over their purges, concentration camps, and racial and religious persecutions.

The rulers of Germany are preaching with such fanaticism their hatred of non-Aryans that many people fear what might happen at the Olympics if non-Germans should be victorious. Why should we subject our youth to unnecessary dangers?

If some incident occurred which involved danger and trouble to our citizens, then our Government would be involved.

We do not send our athletes into lunatic asylums to participate in physical contests with madmen.

Today the rulers of Germany are trying to make this country of Goethe, Schiller, Heine, Lessing, and Kant into a country that would even make Torquemada, the arch-persecutor of the Middle Ages, blush with shame if he were to come to earth and land in Germany.

American youth cannot learn anything in a country that burns books, deports professors, writers, and philosophers, including such men as Einstein, the world's greatest physicist, and proposes the ghettos of the Dark Ages.

Every country that participates in the Olympics is pledged to equality of entry for all of its citizens. Germany has broken that pledge. Neither Jews, Catholics, Protestants, nor Masons have a fair opportunity to compete in that country. As the rulers are imbued with a hatred of all religion, there is no equality of opportunity, but those who belong to pagan sects are given all kinds of preferences. As this is the fact, the Olympic Association of this country should withdraw its relations with the Olympic committee of Germany.

Let us imagine an Olympic being held in ancient Rome, under the auspices of Nero, and a Christian from some distant country were to win in several contests. Nero would probably follow it up by a series of revengeful persecutions. Can we expect anything different if non-Germans win in the Olympics if held in Germany?

If the Olympics were to be held in some other country, I would not object. But why permit the sadistic rulers of this unfortunate country to fool its people by asserting that they have the moral support of other peoples as evidenced by the fact that the Olympics are to be held in their national capital.

This morning's papers carry the report that even Austria is withdrawing from entries in the sporting events in Germany because of the use of these proposed games for propaganda purposes by the German Government.

Daily we hear of drives against Jewish and other non-Aryan athletes. This is in addition to the terrible persecutions going on in that country. The following statement appeared recently in the American Hebrew, one of the leading journals of the Hebrew faith:

> The rulings against Jewish athletes promulgated since June 7, 1933, are known and have been listed. It was on that date that Dr. Theodore Lewald, then president of the German athletic organization, assured the International Olympic Committee at Vienna that "as a principle, German Jews shall not be excluded from German teams."
> But last April the Nazi press demanded that the Nazi regime remove Dr. Lewald, chairman of the Reich committee and a member of the International Olympic Committee, on the ground that his father was of Jewish descent, although baptized long ago, and despite the fact that Von Hindenburg conferred on Dr. Lewald the Reich's highest civil award, the eagle escutcheon, for his effort to promote sports in Germany.

And in the background of the Olympics are the uses Germany is making of these games to promote its war psychology and to inflame its people with the fervor for another war. Again quoting from an American paper, I note this information:

> It is hard for Americans to understand that the Olympics in Germany are on a wholly different footing than in America. Over here sport organizations are autonomous; over there they are pawns of the Government. The games in Germany are not being arranged by sports federations, but by the German War Ministry.
> The village of Doeberitz, where the Olympic city is to be erected, is the property of the War Ministry, and the completed structure will eventually become a Reich garrison and barracks. The German point of view is enunciated by an official of the War Ministry who last week told military attachés of foreign embassies invited to inspect the completed portions of the construction that "soldiers and sportsmen are identical in German opinion, since both foster the spirit of comradeship." The official host of the foreign sportsmen will be the Minister of War.
> On this side of the Atlantic athletes are in no sense controlled or influenced by their Government. In the Reich the German athletes are selected, trained, and financed by the Nazi regime.

The following editorial appeared in the Commonweal, a leading Catholic weekly, in its issue of August 9. It called for a Catholic boycott of the 1936 Olympic games because participation "means endorsement of willful and violent persecution." It added:

> In the interest of justice and fairness, we suggest that no Catholic and no friend of the sports activities of Catholic institutions should make the trip to Berlin. The German Government, which does not respect a covenant solemnly arrived at with the Holy See, will probably not bother a great deal about what it says to Mr. Brundage.

In the Christian Century, a leading journal of the Protestant denomination, appears the following:

> News coming from Germany makes shocking reading. While the forces back of the new outrages against Catholics, Protestants, and Jews are not clear, the facts are clear. Religious persecution is being used as an official instrument of the Nazi Government, and no person is safe in the enjoyment of the most elemental human rights. A capricious and ruthless party, in which adventurers of the most cynical and unreliable character have gained great power, is seeking to enforce its racial philosophy and its conception of the state by means of a terror which is nothing short of sadism.
> The question which confronts American Protestants, Catholics, and Jews, as they read the sickening news from Germany, is: What shall be done? What is it possible to do that will render some effective support to these victims of Nazi brutality? At all times it must be remembered that these outrages are the work of a party—the National Socialist Party. There are many Germans to whom what is taking place is just as abhorrent as it is to the rest of the civilized world. But they are helpless. What can be done to strengthen the morale of such Germans, to undermine the morale of the Nazis, and thus to hasten the day when sanity shall return? * * *
> The Olympic games are scheduled to be held in Berlin next year. Nazi strategists have regarded the securing of those games as one of the most brilliant strokes achieved in convincing the German people generally of their ability to restore the Reich to world leadership. They now count on drawing thousands to the games as a propaganda effort to spread broadcast the virtues of the Nazi rule. Move the Olympic games to some other country, and no twisting of the news in the controlled press could conceal from all the people of Germany—and especially from the Nazis themselves—a realization of the way in which the rest of mankind regards what is going on in that country. "Germany," insisted Reinhold Niebuhr in these columns long ago, "must be told." The proposal to move the Olympic games away from Berlin offers the most dramatic, and therefore the most effective, apportunity which has so far occurred to tell Germany.
> The Olympic games should be moved from Berlin not only to impress Germany but to preserve the nature of the games. The games are supposed to promote international friendship by an exhibition of sportsmanship and fair play. Fair play in Germany! Can anyone who reads the press dispatches take stock in that? Where do the athletes come from? From the various youth organizations and sports clubs. But the Nazis are now wiping out Catholic and Protestant, as well as Jewish, bodies of this kind. If these organizations are dissolved, or are refused permission to use the sports grounds, what chance have they for training athletes? Moreover, with Nazi race and State philosophy declaring that non-Aryans and church youth organizations enemies of Germany, what chance is there for fair play in competition for the Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish youth?
> To let the Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish youth of Germany know that the outside world is not indifferent to the persecution being inflicted upon them, and to let the Nazi leaders know of the horror with which their brutality is regarded, let the athletic authorities of America move to take the Olympics from Berlin. A move of this sort made in this country will be followed in other countries. It will have immediate moral effect inside Germany. It should, therefore, be made without delay: Germany must be told.

The conduct of the present rulers of Germany, if successful, would set the world back to the dark days of the Middle Ages. It is the duty of every lover of this country and its principles to express his protest and abhorrence at such brutal and barbarous conduct that the present rulers of Germany are preaching and practicing without care or respect for the decent opinion of humanity.

We are morally right in refusing to enter into sporting contests in that country, where our youth cannot improve their moral or spiritual characters and where there is danger of embroiling us in unforeseen troubles.

Just as we called off the Boy Scout jamboree the other day, because of the threatened danger from the prevalence of infantile paralysis, so we should recall the youth of our country from participating in athletic contests in a country whose rulers are suffering from the same mental and moral diseases that afflicted Nero in ancient Rome and many another persecutor during medieval times, because here also is a most dangerous pestilence that again menaces mankind and modern civilization.

The platform of the Hitler Nazi Party in Germany contained 25 points, 7 of which were directed against the liberty and equality of the Jews as citizens of Germany. Hitler and his cohorts have put their theories into practice, and have admitted that to accomplish their aims they must be brutal, even to the extreme. Evidence of the brutality and sadistic cruelties they are practicing occurs daily. In his book, My Struggle, Hitler says:

> For our liberation we need more than an economic policy and industry; what we need is pride, spite, hatred, and more hatred.

And further on he says:

> If you wish to win the sympathy of the broad masses, you must tell them the crudest and most stupid things.

Is it not, therefore, the duty of every American to protest against the youth of our country going to Germany for these games, a country whose leader, Hitler, ordered the burning of all books by Jewish authors? And in a country where Jews have been since the days of their dispersion from Palestine by the Romans. Books of Emil Ludwig, Lion Feuchtwanger, Arnold and Stefan Schweig, and Erich Remarque, author of All Quiet on the Western Front, were put to the bonfires. It is not necessary for me to mention the names of professors dismissed from the colleges, lawyers from the courts, doctors from hospitals, and business men from their life's undertakings. Persecution, started against Jews, is continuing against Protestants and Catholics. The cruelty of depriving hundreds of thousands of work or opportunities to earn a living and leaving them to the despair of a death by hunger and starvation in a country as cultured as Germany is cruelty worthy of barbarians. And how much more cruel is it when it occurs in a land of such cultural attainments as Germany, where Jews have contributed so much with their Protestant and Catholic friends to science, literature, music, and arts.

If a descendant of Heine or Mendelssohn were desirous of partaking in the Olympics, he would be refused permission.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I only raise my voice of protest in the same way as our immortal Presidents Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Woodrow Wilson would have done. That standard for the guidance of nations set out in the preamble of our Declaration of Independence, "a decent respect for the opinion of mankind", is unknown to the rulers of Germany, though it be the twentieth century. For the words of Holy Writ, "to love thy neighbor", and for the Sermon on the Mount they have again substituted "hatred"—"schrechlichkeit"—the philosophy of pagans and barbarians. Humanity can only hope that the unfortunate people of this country will see the light, and that justice, equality, and decency will soon return to guide these people. Until then let us not endanger the youth of our country by sending them there to contest in sporting events.

CURB GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, we Members of Congress are about to make our annual return to our constituents and run the gantlet of criticism and interrogation. We hope for a few pats on the back, but know that for the most part we shall hear complaints and embarrassing questions.

We can, all of us, be quite certain of being asked one question, and we shall hear it more frequently as the days go by, and that question is, When will you fellows down in Washington stop running into debt?

The Democratic Party faces a national political campaign in 1936. To retain our party strength we must have the confidence of the American people. I know of no better way to retain that confidence than to adopt from now on a definite policy of cutting down Government expenditures. We must go before the voters and show them that we have a plan to balance income and expenses. Only the politically blind can fail to see that one of the major issues next year will be Government spending.

It is all very well to sit back and say that in the 1936 campaign the big issue will be the Constitution. That may prove an empty issue. If we do not stop spending money, we shall go bankrupt, and in that event the constitutional issue rather fades into the background. When a business concern goes bankrupt, changing its bylaws does not make a great deal of difference one way or the other.

What is the financial situation of our Federal Government?

(A) Down here in Washington, we are running "in the red" at the rate of more than $3,000,000,000 per year—about $10,000,000 per day. That is a lot of money. With $10,000,000 more going out each day than is coming in, no establishment—not even Uncle Sam's Government—can last a very long time. The people of America have too much common sense to be led to believe that government can continue to exist if national expenditures exceed receipts.

(B) The national debt is now rapidly approaching the highest figure in our history, approximately $30,000,000,000. Do we have any right to further increase it? Shall we use all the national credit? Shall we not leave anything for our children? Has this generation the right to "bleed the Nation white"? Not all wisdom will die with us. Perhaps our children might also like a little money with which to do some experimenting!

Can we stop this terrific outflow of money? It is quite possible to do so and balance the Budget in the immediate future. We now have enough income for the actual necessary running expenses of the Government; not including, of course, certain "brain truster" extravagances which can be discontinued without harm to the country. The necessary relief load can be carried at an annual cost of approximately $800,000,000. Increased business activity is lessenning the burden of relief. Necessary expenses—and we cannot afford luxuries—can soon be paid for by larger revenues, due to increased national income, and by additional taxation within bearable limits.

High taxes are with us. All the people are paying these taxes—not a few—in spite of what vote-seeking demagogues may tell the people. The tax strain is rapidly approaching the limit of endurance. But the people will willingly pay if they can be sure that they are not pouring their tax money into a sieve. They will not continue to pay taxes if the Government consistently fails to meet its expenses and steadily increases the national debt. And if that day of taxpayers' refusal ever arrives, the entire Government will fall to ruin in the chaos of inflation.

It is high time for us Democrats to take hold, cut down expenses, drive the wild spenders from the temple, and balance the Government books. Experimentation, for the present, might well be limited to those experiments which involve no appropriation of money. Taxes which are unnecessary should not be levied. We in government must be financially honest.

We Democrats belong to an old political party. We can learn much from old and new leaders. We once had a great Democratic President, Grover Cleveland, who was especially zealous in guarding the rights of taxpayers. He laid down the rule that "unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation." We Democrats had better write that guiding principle into our 1936 platform.

President Roosevelt pronounced a great historical truth when he said in 1933, "Too often in recent history, liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy." We are, slowly and painfully, by making economic welfare a major interest of the Government, establishing a liberal government in Washington. That liberal government—full of promise for the future—should not be destroyed by a reckless fiscal policy.

TOWNSEND OLD-AGE PENSION PLAN

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks I insert the following address delivered by me before the meeting of the Townsend Clubs of Illinois, at Chicago, Ill., Sunday, August 18, 1935:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I deeply appreciate the honor of addressing this magnificent audience, which, I am informed, is one of the largest public gatherings ever held in the city of Chicago. I am always glad to visit your great city, because it is my birthplace, and I spent here my childhood and the years of my youth, before I moved with my parents out to the State of Washington. I have many relatives and friends in Chicago, and my aged father, now 83 years of age, resides in your midst.

The Townsend old-age pension plan is sweeping the country. No social-reform proposal ever gained the public ear faster than has this plan. People everywhere are asking questions, wanting to know more about it. The movement started in Long Beach, Calif. Today it has a foothold in every State. More than 20,000,000 voters have signed a petition to Congress asking for its adoption. State legislatures have passed resolutions asking Congress to pass a law putting it into operation. The plan is gaining momentum each day.

Perhaps no one would object to the plan if it can be worked out and put into force without costing us anything. The question is, How will it affect those who do not draw the pension? Will the benefits of the plan received by the general public equal or exceed the cost? These are questions that must be answered by the proponents of the plan.

According to the last United States census report, there are now about 10,300,000 people in the United States who have attained the age of 60. It is estimated that possibly 10,000,000 of these would apply for the pension if the plan becomes law. The plan proposes to pay $200 a month to each pensioner. It would likely involve an annual expenditure of $24,000,000,000. That is a lot of money. But it should be kept in mind that the plan calls for a revolving fund of but $2,000,000,000. The $2,000,000,000 would pay the entire $24,000,000,000 during the year. A tax is to be levied upon all transactions. The pensioner must spend his money each month, throwing all of the $2,000,000,000 back into circulation the month it is paid out, and the transaction tax is to collect this sum and give it back to the Government that the Government may have the $2,000,000,000 to meet the next month's pensions.

The opponents of the plan claim it would call for an excessive tax rate. Let us examine some of the facts upon which this estimate is based.

There are no statistics that give the total sales in the United States during any one year. Government statistics give the value of farm products on the farm, of the lumber industry at the mill, of our fisheries as received by those engaged in the fishing industry, the value of minerals as based on prices received by the mining companies, and the value of the output of the many different factories. But the total of all these does not approach our total annual sale values—transaction sales.

We know that the consumer pays from three to four times as much for the farm products he consumes as the farmer receives. As an illustration let us take raw cotton. The farmer sells it to the commission man. He sells it at an advanced price to the jobber. The jobber advances the price when he sells to the manufacturer. The manufactured cotton goods pass through 3, 4, or 5 hands before they reach the consumer, and each time at an advanced price. Apples, a product that is not manufactured before consumed, passes through three to six different hands before consumed, and usually at an advanced price. It costs $1.25 freight to ship a box of apples, in carload lots, from Wenatchee, Wash., to New York, and today the farmer is getting an average of about 75 cents a box. The same is true of the products of the mines, lumber mills, the fisheries, and other industries. Then there is a vast volume of sales that deal not in any of these products, such sales as tickets, stocks, bonds, mortgages, notes, accounts, real estate, mines, factories, etc.

Perhaps the best way to form an estimate of the total transaction sales in any given year is the money turnover during the year. We know that the Townsend plan will greatly increase the volume of our circulative medium. It would likely bring back similar business conditions to those that prevailed in 1919. Government statistics show we had $60,000,000,000 of cash and bank credits in circulation in 1929. Statisticians estimate that sum turned over 22½ times during the year, doing a total business of $1,300,000,000,000. A 2-percent transaction tax levied on that vast sum would have yielded $26,000,000,000—some $4,000,000,000 more money than the Townsend plan would require.

The plan is objected to on the ground it would give the pensioners too great a part of our annual wealth production, the objectors claiming that our annual wealth production is only about $70,000,000,000. A careful survey of our wealth production does not give support to such claims. It makes a lot of difference, as we have already pointed out, whether we value wealth production at the source of production or at the point of consumption. These pensioners would pay the consumers' price. And they would pay not the price products can be bought at today but the price they will be with the plan in operation. It is estimated that the Townsend plan, if put into operation, will double prices.

Some of our leading technicians and statisticians estimate that if our annual wealth production was equally divided among the people the average family would receive between seven and nine thousand dollars a year in values. The plan proposes to pay the pensioners but $2,400 a year.

If we wish to be fair when we consider the cost of the plan, we must take into account the savings and advantages of the plan. There is a gas tax in the State of Washington. Who would be willing to abolish the tax and go back to the road conditions we had 20 years ago? Life insurance companies have compiled statistics showing that 92 percent of all people reaching the age of 60 are partially or wholly dependent upon others for support. This burden is being borne by relatives, friends, and the Government. At the present time the great majority are on Government relief. This plan would lift that burden. It would almost do away with the poor farm. It would lessen crime. Government statistics show that each $200 a month spent gives employment to one person. On that basis, this plan would create 8,000,000 new jobs. Statistics show that of the 10,300,000 people above 60, 4,500,000 are doing some work, and the plan would thus cause some 4,000,000 jobs to be vacated. Thus a total of 12,500,000 jobs would be given to the unemployed. This would clear the cities and highways of idle men and women.

We have 19,000,000 people on our relief rolls. This plan would wipe out this blot upon our civilization. With the idle given jobs, prices of property, products, and labor doubled, there would be no relief roll. It would put a large sum of money into circulation, a thing greatly needed at this time, and it would be a pump constantly pumping this medium into the channels of trade. It would prevent future depressions. It would take the control of cash and credit circulation from our private bankers and restore it to our Government, where it belongs. It would stabilize prices. It would forever do away with that dreaded monster—fear of want in old age.

Let us assume that the tax, by the time it reaches the consumer, reaches 10 percent. Will he not be benefited? Would not the man out of a job gladly pay a 10-percent tax if the plan would give him steady work at good wages? Would not the merchant gladly pay the tax if it would double his sales and enable him to collect his outstanding accounts? Would not the business and professional men gladly pay the tax if their business would double?

I have studied the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan for over a year and feel that I know something about it. In the last Congress I placed in the RECORD a statement of the objects and purposes of the plan, the first public and official notice which it received in the Congress of the United States. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 4, 1934, pp. 6039–6040.)

Last December when I came to the Capital a month before Congress convened, I was one of a small group of Congressmen who met with Dr. Townsend and issued the call for the meeting in the House caucus room at which he made his first public explanation of his plan in the Nation's Capital, and I attended the session. Later I joined with Dr. Townsend, the gentleman from California, Mr. MCGROARTY, and several other colleagues in drafting the first bill, H. R. 3977; and I also collaborated with them in revising that bill and formulating H. R. 7154, the present McGroarty bill.

The revised McGroarty bill is essentially in principle the same as the first bill, excepting that we have broadened the tax base to impose an increased 10-percent tax on incomes and to add an extra 2-percent tax on inheritances and gifts over $500. We also provide that the "annuity", which term we employ instead of "pension", because it is more accurately descriptive, shall not be paid to anyone having an annual income of over $2,400, and that the present income of the annuitant shall be debited against the annuity, and that the annuity shall be "in such amount not exceeding $200 per month as may properly be paid from the funds accumulated." In other words, the amount of annuity to be paid shall be measured and determined, as it would necessarily have to be in any event, by the tax revenues yielded and derived from the collection of the 2-percent business transactions tax and the other taxes just referred to.

This improved bill makes no material departure from the original bill, and this view is shared by Dr. Townsend himself, by Mr. MCGROARTY, and by all of us who have taken the deepest interest and most active part in urging the Townsend plan. This modified bill is more explicit, practical, and workable, and is, in my judgment, far superior to the original measure. According to the studies of the actuaries and statisticians, the tax receipts would be sufficient to pay to each annuitant $50 the first month, with a steady increase of 20 to 25 percent each month, until at the end of 1 year the full maximum of $200 could be paid. This is the testimony of Dr. Robert D. Doane, one of the leading economists in the Nation.

Dr. Doane makes it clear that he is not advocating any old-age pension plan and that his sole purpose is to show what money could be raised by a 2-percent turn-over or transaction tax. His estimate is $336,000,000 for the first month, increasing 25 percent monthly, until the eighth month the income is estimated at $1,601,000,000, nearly enough to pay $200 per month to 7,500,000 citizens, which is the maximum annuity, and this was before we broadened the tax base, which will provide additional revenue.

Dr. Doane's table no. 1 disproves the unfounded statement sometimes made that the burden of raising the money would fall on the poor. He shows by income groups for the year 1935 that incomes of $1,000,000 and over each would pay $143.30 per month. These payments range down through the different incomes until they reach those with incomes of $1,000 and under, which is the much larger percentage of the population, where the estimated burden of the tax would be $1.26 per income monthly, while the per capita tax would range from $35.10 per month for those in the highest brackets to 33 cents per month in the lower brackets. What a small contribution this would be to bring about the recovery of business and improved conditions for all our people.

Dr. Doane further states that: "This form of taxation, if uniformly employed, could easily * * * decrease the tax * * * on real property, with a consequent material increase in capital value."

What greater benefit could accrue to the overburdened taxpayers and owners of real estate, homes, and farms than to have their tax burdens lightened, with a resultant increase in the capital value of real property? Dr. Doane's statement places the Townsend plan on the basis of a practical business method of recovery.

It requires no argument to establish that increased purchasing power, a stimulus to business, industry, and agriculture, reemployment and a greater volume of general prosperity would be certain to result from the enforced spending of the annuity funds. I quote from the statement of Dr. Townsend:

"Briefly the Townsend plan of old-age revolving pensions has as its objective three salient features:

"Primarily to effect and maintain complete recovery in the United States and to sustain this prosperity by a constant and sufficient supply of purchasing power, evenly distributed in accordance with the population throughout the entire Nation by means of employing citizens past 60 to make the distribution.

"Secondarily to create a condition of employment assurance by replacing those over age of 60 now employed with younger workers and by creating other employment through the expenditure of the pension money in the marts of trade.

"Dr. Doane asserts that at present levels the annual expenditure in retail trade of $1,730 will create continuous employment for one man.

"And lastly, but by no means the least desirable feature of the Townsend plan, is the creation of an adequate retirement fund for each individual who can and does qualify upon reaching the age of 60 years. It is a very significant fact that over a period of years each individual creates his own retirement fund. In effect, the Townsend plan is a collective involuntary purchase of retirement annuities, using the Federal Government as the agency of collection and distribution."

Let us not be biased against the adoption of this plan because of the apparent large sum involved. We spent $33,500,000,000 in the World War, and nearly everyone recognizes the fact we are now engaged in a war more serious and fatal to our own people—a war against unemployment, against poverty, against starvation, against sickness, against suicide, against broken lives, against revolution.

What has this present war against the depression cost us to date in loss of national income?

According to authentic sources, the figures are as follows:

National income

	Amount of income	Loss compared to 1929	Authority
1929	$83,000,000,000+		S. Doc. No. 124, 73d Cong.
1930	70,000,000,000+	$13,000,000,000	Do.
1931	54,000,000,000+	29,000,000,000	Do.
1932	39,000,000,000+	44,000,000,000	Do.
1933	40,000,000,000—	43,000,000,000	Associated Press reports.
1934 (approximate)	45,000,000,000	38,000,000,000	Do.
Total		167,000,000,000

The investors of our country lost at least $50,000,000,000 in the stock-market crash of 1929–30.

Would it be dangerous to cause, as Dr. Doane estimates would be the effect, an increase in the price level of retail goods of 10 percent, when we have in the past permitted the private bankers of the country to inflate credit and debt checks in circulation in the sum of approximately $50,000,000,000?

A retail-sales tax has been urged by big business and the most conservative Members of the House and Senate for years as a just and equitable form of taxation. Will someone point out why a tax imposed upon all business transactions would be any more unsafe, unsound, or unjust than a retail-sales tax, and wherein lies the difference which should cause us to adopt the one and reject the other? Is not the only real difference that the transaction tax would fall most heavily upon those who do the most business and are therefore the most able to pay the tax?

It is worth while to pay 2 cents on each $1 of business transactions in order to end a condition which has cost us a loss of $167,000,000,000 in the past 5 years, not to mention the billions appropriated by Congress and spent by the Federal Government for relief, the cost of charities and poor farms and homes for the aged running into many more billions, and the cost of crime caused by poverty amounting to billions of dollars, which would be substantially reduced? A transaction tax of 2 percent on every business and money transaction would be the most just and equitable form of taxation which could be devised, and there is not a single, valid, sound objection against it.

ELECTRICITY AND SOME OF ITS USES ON THE FARM

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, for long centuries man has groped his way through the wilderness of the world unaware of the great force of electricity, permeating everything, everywhere about him. And for 2,500 years of time its existence has been known without a knowledge of its force and powers.

And we are today still unconscious of many of its greatest powers and uses which are lying dormant everywhere about us and which will some day be discovered, developed, and harnessed by man to do equal or greater service than the service it is performing for him today.

Electricity is not only contained in all matter and every substance, as air, water, stone, and metal, but it is a part of all matter and every material substance.

THE THEORY OF ELECTRICITY

It is a theory that all matter is made up of small particles called "molecules", which are combinations of atoms, and the atoms are in turn made up of smaller or more minute particles called "electrons" and "protons."

Electricity is the force in matter, the attraction of gravitation, holding these minute particles of matter in form or body, adhering together, and, in theory, revolving one around the other like the force of Sir Isaac Newton's law holding or suspending the planets in space.

It is the theory of matter that each atom has its own electric system, like each animal or plant-life cell has its own nervous or mental system. The system, comprised of electrons and protons, with its positive and negative forces, operates by currents and magnetism.

NOTHING CAN BE CREATED OR DESTROYED

It is a law of physical science that no particle of matter can be destroyed; that its form only can be changed. We cannot destroy a piece of glass. We can only change its form by breaking it into smaller portions or by melting and molding it again. Nothing in existence can be destroyed and nothing in existence can be created. This is expressed in the old saying, "There is nothing new under the sun." We must accept the earth as we find it. We can neither add to nor take from.

The amount of matter in the world is fixed and certain in amount, which cannot be varied a single atom. Electricity as a part of matter is alike in amount, fixed and certain, which can neither be increased nor decreased. We speak of generating electricity or developing or creating electricity; but an electric-power generator no more generates or creates electricity than a pump creates water. The generator only accumulates electricity, brings it into a current exerting force like the pump forces a stream of water.

THE ELEMENTS OF MATTER

It is possible to change the proportions of the elements in different forms of matter, or the different elements entering into the matter, as to accumulate more water, iron, stone, or other material in one location. But this accumulation can only be maintained temporarily for the time being. And it is likewise possible by chemical action, friction, or otherwise to change the natural normal proportions of the minute structure of material and create a new form of matter.

Too many electrons in the atom in proportion to the proton elements creates a disequilibrium or unbalanced state and will start an electrical current outward, and too small a number of electrons will start an opposite force and a negative current inward.

ELEMENTS THROWN OUT OF BALANCE

And it is also a law of physical science that matter thrown out of or off its equilibrium will adjust itself to a balanced state. When water is thrown off of its general balanced level, no matter whether by natural or artificial causes, a motion sets in to restore its level or balance. The motion of water seeking its level, following in the course of natural law, exerts the force which man has harnessed to turn the water wheel of the mill which is carried to pulleys, shafts, and machinery to perform man's task and lift his burdens.

This force is exerted from a stream of water seeking an equilibrium or its balanced level whether carried, lifted in the form of clouds and precipitated as rainfall upon the earth, or carried and held by man through canals and pipes to fall from a higher to a lower level.

This is true of all forms or elements of matter thrown out of a natural balanced state, such as the unequal heating of the air at one location in the atmosphere, whether caused by the sun's rays or by artificial means by man, a current of air will set in to restore an even temperature or balanced state. Air, the ocean of atmosphere surrounding and enveloping the earth, exerts no energy in its balanced state, but, when evenly heated and thrown out of its natural balance, currents to restore its equilibrium set in, in the form of storms, gales, and cyclones, sweeping into devastating and destructive power.

RESTORING AN EQUILIBRIUM

This movement to restore a natural equilibrium from an unequal balance of the atmosphere is the force that causes the winds to blow, which power man has harnessed by the invention of the windmill and the sails spread on the ships for his navigation of the seas.

Now we come to another element, and another force of matter, as common as water, air, or earth, which has come to be called "electricity", the derivation or history of which term will not be necessary nor possible to give here.

Electricity, like other forms or elements of matter, can neither be created, destroyed, or consumed. It can only be increased or decreased at a certain given place or location. Its amount in the material world is fixed as certain as other parts of creation. Electricity can only be generated or accumulated in greater or more unequal portion in a body than when resting in its balanced state or reposing in natural equilibrium. And like water or other elements, when thrown into such unequal balance, a current sets in to restore an equilibrium, and like water and air exerts a force which man has harnessed for power as man has harnessed other currents and movements resulting from the disequilibrium of other forms of matter.

POSITIVE AND NEGATIVE ELECTRICITY

Scientists tell us that electricity includes both positive and negative forces, the protons or positive charge which remains permanent in the atom, and the electrons or negative charge which is free, to move around and within and out from the atom. When the electron and proton elements of electricity, the negative and positive forces of the atom remain in even or balanced proportion, which is called "static", or electricity at rest, electricity is in a natural or normal state. When the electrons are in excess of protons a current sets in and electricity is in motion.

If by any natural or artificial means more electricity is generated in a body of matter than exists in its normal state, there is a positive or overcharge and electricity in a current flows out to balance its relative forces.

NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL ELECTRICITY

Regardless of how electricity be thrown out of balance, whether by natural or artificial causes, whether by friction of clouds on the air causing currents called "lightning", or whether by motions of dynamos accumulating electricity in unequal balance, the same equalizing current sets in.

Lightning results from an unequal charge of electricity moving in the atmosphere, either moving from clouds to clouds, or, when the air becomes moist, from vapor or falling rain, and forming a conductor or pathway, striking down, reaches the earth to equalize its balance between earth, clouds, and atmosphere.

WATER PIPES AND ELECTRIC CURRENTS

As water is carried through canals and pipes to the point where the power is to be exerted, so electricity is carried through wire conductors, which serve as an electric canal, or pipe line, carrying electricity to where its force is to be applied.

As the canal and pipes are made watertight to prevent the escape or leakage of water, so electric wires or conductors are prepared to prevent the escape and leakage of electricity by insulation or wire coverings and by nonconductor materials to hold up the wires on the pole.

Unlike the force of air and water moving to restore their equilibrium, electricity moves only in a circuit. The circuit must be continuous and uninterrupted back to the source of the current, either through and by means of a return wire or grounded and returned through the earth. If the current by faulty insulation or otherwise is brought in touch with the return wire or earth before it reaches the place or location where its power is to be applied and exerted, in the language of the electric street it is "shorted", or called a "short circuit." If the wire carrying the electricity outward is left both without a circuit or ground wire and the end of the wire is left to terminate in the dry air, which is a nonconductor of electricity, the flow of electricity will be stopped like the water in a plugged pipe.

EXPLAINING ELECTRICITY

Scientists have analyzed water and tell us of its component parts of oxygen and hydrogen in unequal proportions and then, going into these gases to explain and describe their nature, they get into still deeper water and come back to the shore to live with others. Men talk very learned and knowing about the elements, the component parts, and the molecules made up of atoms, about the atoms with their electrons and protons, but when they try to carry their explanation further they find themselves lost in mystery and are left wondering with the people they assume to instruct.

We do not know what electricity is. We know little more of its character, its derivation or innate nature, than when Benjamin Franklin first brought electricity down from the clouds to compare it with the electric sparks produced from silk and a glass tube or from amber or a cat's back. We only know more about what it does. We only know how it can be harnessed. We only know how it can be generated and accumulated. We only know how it can be carried and directed, how its force can be exerted to work and perform useful service for man.

At first glance or impression, electricity appears to be a more complex and mysterious agency than other forces, powers, and energies. But, in fact, it is not more mysterious than other parts of the world around us. It is not more mysterious than light, than the movements of water in different forms, than the elements of water and air, or the minute atoms of the molecules, the component parts of all matter. It is not more mysterious or incomprehensible than animal and plant life about us, the cause for which we cannot explain; nor more mysterious than any other matter, not more mysterious than the immensity of space extending far away in the heavens, above and before us, a distance beyond the power and strength of the mind to follow.

We stand in bewildering mystery with all around and about us. We do not know where we are. We do not know what we are. We do not know what we are for. We do not know from whence we came. We do not know to whither we go. We do not know; we only hope and strive to know. In our helpless failure of comprehension we appeal to a higher power, in the forms of faith and religion, for guidance, direction, and understanding. And then we withdraw from the problem as beyond the mind of man and leave all without solution.

Probably no other invention or discovery or development of force and power has contributed more to the service of man, more to his comfort, convenience, and welfare, more to his pleasure, interest, and happiness, or lifted him to a higher plane of life than has the means of electricity. And yet of all the forces and powers which men have harnessed and utilized in their march to the higher planes and civilization and human advancement, electricity is the least known and understood.

The use of electricity has become even more common and general or universal than any other force or power used, yet it remains as much a mystery today as when Franklin found it in the clouds.

While men lived thousands of years unconscious of its existence of force or power, it was everywhere around them, above in the skies, below in the earth, pervading all space, and permeating all material and only manifesting itself to man when moving to balance its forces in nature, the cause of which he failed to comprehend.

We do not know what it is; we only know what it does; we only know some of its laws and applications. But we are still groping in the darkness as to its true nature as a force and what it can be made to accomplish.

ADVANTAGE OF ELECTRICITY OVER OTHER POWER

There is one great advantage in the use of electricity over other forces, over the powers exerted from water or wind or from steam or the explosion of gases. The powers developed from these forces can only be applied and used at or near the place where developed.

But electricity can be generated at one place, carried or transferred to a far distant point without appreciable loss of energy or force, and there, divided and spread into a ramifying network carrying the electric current for light and power to hundreds or thousands of different places and to serve almost as many different uses.

And even more than this advantage, inventions and developments are fast progressing in the generation of electricity for power which are destined to make this force all but as plentiful and abundant for use as air, light, and water and as cheap and available to the people.

To realize the force and power of electricity which is carried over and through one small wire, it is only necessary to observe and consider the energy exerted and many uses served. From the electric current carried through one line, far out and away from the power plant, the home, barn, and garage are lighted, the home water system is kept running, the washing and sewing machines are operated, the smoothing iron is kept hot for use, and cold storage is maintained for perishable foods. The radio is kept efficiently charged, meals are cooked, and the home is heated, water is pumped, feed is ground, other labor-saving machinery is operated, and a thousand-and-one other uses are served from the electric power exerted, all coming in over one small wire.

There is one great saving and economy in electricity for its many different uses over other farm power facilities. There is always a loss and waste of power incident to starting and stopping which often equals the power actually used. But with electricity there is no waste by priming; there is no preliminary expenditure of fuel. Turn on the switch and the power is instant. Turn off the switch and the power expense is ended. Every unit of power is efficiently utilized without loss or waste in the service. The cost is only for the time of the actual operations.

But this is not all or the only economy realized with electricity. Many duplications of power facilities are avoided, the saving of fuel not only purchased at wholesale but the economy of fuel consumed at wholesale by the one central operating power plant, supplying current over a wide territory, brings the loss and waste down to the minimum.

ELECTRICITY FOR LIGHT

Seeing is the most vital of all the faculties of all the senses guiding or directing man, groping his way through the wilderness of the world. We may listen to sound or voices coming to us, but we are not certain from which or whom. We may touch or smell a substance or form of matter, but we are not absolutely positive of its nature or source, of the cause or the object before us. We must wait for the sense of vision until we can see and be assured, before we are ready to take action to meet the object or condition. "Seeing is believing", and then we know.

Electricity brings light into the home and carries the day into the nighttime; it brings light in all of its shades and colors; it brings light in the daylight rays; it lights every room, hall, and stairway, the furnace room, the dark cellar or basement; every dark closet, cupboard, and pantry is opened for use, during the day as well as the nighttime. Electricity dispels the shadows of darkness while the earth turns away from the sun. On the farm it lights the barn and the dairy, and the dim, flickering lantern gives way to the full light of day, in the garage and the walks and driveway.

ELECTRICITY FOR OTHER USES

Next to light in the home is heat for cooking and other domestic uses and to maintain an even, comfortable temperature. Other forms of heating require the burning of fuel with ashes, smoke, soot, and waste litter, with 90 percent of the heat escaping through the chimney. But in heating with electricity all the ashes, smoke, refuse, and waste are left at the power plant, a distance of many miles away. The heat comes to the home pure, clean, refined, and free from all waste and refuse.

But this is not the only advantage of the home heating by electricity. It is not only clean and convenient; it will in time come to be the most economical. Instead of the many stoves and furnaces burning fuel, with a waste of heat escaping through the chimneys and only a partial combustion of fuel, the fuel is burned or consumed in one large efficient combustion chamber, where every particle or unit of gas and smoke is consumed into heat, and where the heat is conserved and utilized and withheld from escape through the chimney or smokestack—possible, and possible only, where fuel is burned on a large scale and with efficient equipment provided.

The development of electricity sure to be attained has made possible a form of heating not only the most convenient, satisfactory, and desirable, but the most practical and economical for maintaining even and comfortable temperature in the home. And all that remains to make electric heating general and within the reach of all, with other improved facilities at hand, is the control over the generation of electricity to secure its production and distribution at cost or one reasonable profit.

When such control of production comes, freeing electricity from monopoly and extortion, some of its general uses enjoyed in the home will be heat for cooking, heating water for the washstand and bath, as well as for the general heating of the home.

Other home uses already are for the sweeper, for the fan for air circulation and ventilation, the smoothing iron in the laundry, and for the many other uses and purposes wherever light, heat, or power can be applied and utilized, which have been steadily increasing and will be multiplied in the future.

ELECTRICITY FOR THE RADIO

There is nothing which so brings cheer to break the solitude of farm life as the radio in the home, bringing to every farm fireside music, song and entertainment, a knowledge of passing events, keeping in touch with the outside world.

Many farmers have not installed radios and many who have installed them have left them standing voiceless or inefficient because of the annoyance and inconvenience of the continued renewal of battery service.

With electricity in the farm home the efficacy of radio will be multiplied and hundreds of thousands of farmers who have failed to install radios or, if installed, have not maintained them will install modern radio sets and maintain them in continuous use. Electricity will be used on the farm to take the place of the troublesome batteries, to maintain constant radio service; and many thousands of farm families, where the radio has been denied them, will then listen with pleasure and profit to the radio programs from home and abroad.

REFRIGERATION OR COLD STORAGE

Probably no other substantial service of electricity will be more appreciated on the farm than the modern electric refrigerator. The loss, waste, deterioration, and inconvenience of the want of means to preserve for use perishable food products in consumable state is a value and service beyond realization.

The old days of storing ice in winter for use in summer has gone with a passing age. And the inconvenience and irregularity of maintaining ice in the country when needed has made the farm ice chest impracticable.

With the electric refrigerator installed conveniently and immediately at hand for use as much as needed and only as much and when needed, the problem of cold storage on the farm will be solved and at a cost so low that no farmer can afford to be without its use. And instead of a few thousand refrigerators as now installed in farm homes, there will be millions in use and the savings from waste and deterioration of food will more than pay the part of the monthly cost for electricity.

Next to light on the farm is the power coming in over the line to pump water for the stock, to run the wood-saw and feed grinders, and to serve a hundred other valuable services, ready and at hand for instant use without waiting or the waste of power after used.

THE SUPPLY OF ELECTRICITY

The supply and resources of electricity are as great as the waters of the sea, as the ocean of the atmosphere about us, as the matter of the earth itself. In fact, it is a part of all matter and fills the entire space of the whole material world, and inventions, discoveries, and developments, which are following fast by leaps and bounds, are increasing and multiplying the means, facilities, and power to produce and transmit and carry electricity to the people beyond their needs and capacities to use and at a cost almost as low and reasonable as pumping and distributing water.

SOUND WAVES AND LIGHT

A stream of light and a stream of electricity move and operate very similarly. They both travel at 186,000 miles a second. Both light and electricity are a form of motion in waves. Light waves will penetrate some materials and will be intercepted and thrown back by others. Electric waves are carried and pass through certain objects and materials called "conductors" but will be stopped or intercepted by other materials which are called "nonconductors", such as slate, glass, and porcelain used to hold wires suspended from the ground and to prevent the electricity from passing to the poles.

The sound waves carrying the voice by radio or motion current through the ether are not different from the sound waves carrying the voice by telephone through wires. By telephone the sound-motion waves are carried through wires to a certain direction; by radio they are broadcast in every direction.

To illustrate, stand on the bank of a pond and throw a stone in the center, and the water waves will go out from the center in every direction until they extend over the whole pond. This is how radio sound waves go out in all directions from the broadcasting station. Electric currents may be carried either through wires as conductors or through a fluid or medium permeating all space called "ether." The difference is that telephone wires carry sound waves with less power and frequency than is required through ether-carrying radio waves.

The waves of ether set in motion by radio-broadcasting devices are too high and rapid to be detected by the natural ear, loud speaker, or telephone. But the radio-receiver adjustments may be set to detect the different wave frequencies and reproduce them in sound from different stations. The broadcasing stations are now sending out through the ether the sound waves set in motion by voice or musical instruments, carried by high-frequency electric current, in every direction from the power station, and your radio receiving sets in your homes are detecting the electric waves in the ether and reproducing the tones of voice or instrument. The sound waves are caught up and carried by high-frequency currents traveling at the rate of 186,000 miles a second as rapidly as if borne by the wings of light, and the voice of the radio speaker is heard as it appears at the very instant his words are spoken.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFARLANE. I find on checking the RECORD in reference to the bill H. R. 9070 just passed by the House that some of the bills included in this omnibus bill were passed by the House on August 15. I therefore raise a point of order against the bill because it includes legislation already passed and sent to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The bill that was just passed a moment ago, with amendments, was passed under a motion to suspend the rules. When the bill was reported it was subsequently found that some bridge bills that had been acted upon were included. These bills were deleted.

Mr. McFARLANE. At least two of the bills included in this omnibus bill have been passed and sent to the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot determine that at this time.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the differences in the Senate bill and the bill just passed result in a conference report?

The SPEAKER. That depends on what action the Senate may take. The Chair may say to the gentleman that the bill just passed simply gives the consent of the United States Government to the building of certain bridges across navigable streams. Even if two or three bills were passed upon the same subject it would not do any particular harm.

WAGES OF LABORERS EMPLOYED ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 348

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of S. 3303, "An act to amend the act, approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Labor, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN NEAR WEST SWANSON, VT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request from the Senate of the United States:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2681) to extend the time for commencing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain, at or near West Swanton, Vt., and for other purposes, together with House engrossed amendments to the same, disagreed to by the Senate, and on which the Senate requested a conference with the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate will be granted.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 163.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask whether this is a complicated matter or one that various Members may be interested in? Several Members have left the floor with the understanding that nothing more would be brought up tonight. I do not know anything about the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. UTTERBACK. It is my understanding this is not very controversial. The resolution has passed the Senate and has been recommended by the Judiciary Committee. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], a member of the Judiciary Committee, voted against reporting the resolution, but I understand he has no objection to its consideration at this time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KNUTE HILL, for 1 week, on account of death in family.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

Bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 164. An act for the relief of Donald L. Bruner; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], who are necessarily detained from the Senate, and the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], caused by illness.

PROJECTED VISIT OF THE VICE PRESIDENT TO THE ORIENT

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged matter. The press of the country carries the announcement this morning that the Vice President will probably call at some ports in China and Japan when he goes to the Philippines for the purpose of witnessing the inauguration of the new government of the Philippines. While I understand he goes as a guest of the Philippine government, I nevertheless trust that the Vice President may visit other countries of the Far East.

The reasons which I call to the attention of the Senate why the Vice President should visit the countries of eastern Asia are: First, there are thousands of American citizens who live in those lands who will be highly honored by such a call. Second, such visits do great good. To illustrate this point I merely call attention to the visit of the American fleet during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt, the visit of former President Taft, and former Secretary Bryan, and the extended visit of President Eliot, of Harvard. Such calls result in greater understanding and greater appreciation of our civilization by eastern peoples as they learn to know us and a greater appreciation by our people of oriental civilization as we learn to know it. Above all, though, I hope that the announcement may prove to be correct and that the Vice President and his gracious lady will indeed visit those lands, because the great peoples of China and Japan base their whole culture upon the theory of the perfectibility of man. They love to honor great persons and are always anxious to meet worthy men and lovely personalities. I trust, Mr. President, that nothing may deprive the Vice President from the opportunity of undertaking this great journey.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am interested in the observations made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]; and for myself, I sincerely trust there will be no misunderstanding on the part of the citizens of the United States as to any visit that our distinguished compeer, the Vice President of the United States, may make into the Asiatic sphere. Pleased I am that the distinguished Presiding Officer of this body shall have the vacation to which he so deservedly is entitled. Pleased I am that there is an idea that his visit would tend to bring about a more fraternal and kindly feeling between Asiatic nations and ourselves. But, Mr. President, I sincerely hope that nothing from this decision for visits will invest the mind of the world public that this administration is sending any official to give favoritism by the visit of our great Vice President to one of the nations of Asia that is at war at present, unhappily, with another nation in Asia, lest from that a deduction may follow that this Nation has lent its sympathy and its cooperation to one belligerent against the other.

The visit, I trust, if it shall be made, will be one of good friendship, as a visit on the part of our distinguished Vice President to the lands of Asia for such education and benefit as may be derived by all of the delegation attending. But, sir, I trust our country will not be open at any time to the intimation that we are sending officials of this Government in any official call of any kind whatever upon one nation that may be at war at present with another, giving aspect of favor and endorsement. Our attitude must be one of complete and consistent neutrality so far as our relations of self-protection and national honor will permit.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. In connection with the visits referred to I was wondering whether we might not emulate the example of the Vice President visiting Japan on a friendly mission, and have it brought out that visits which are being made by the official staff of the President of the United States to the lobbying headquarters of the utility interests might facilitate an adjournment of Congress and brush away the differences of opinion. Would it not be a good idea to extend the senatorial approval of visits so as to eliminate this criticism and allow the White House and the lobbying headquarters to get a better set-up and eliminate this matter of misunderstanding?

Mr. LEWIS. I have no doubt that, so far as the public is concerned, they would be greatly gratified that we might remove as many of these situations as possible, including certain Members of the United States Senate, from any operations here in Washington. I take it, sir, that while it may be true, as the Senator from Louisiana intimates, that it is much to be desired, or, as Shakespeare remarked, "A consummation devoutly to be wished", I cannot see how we can accomplish anything in our own behalf without including Members of a Senate now become obnoxious to those impatient of our further session——

ANOTHER CASE OF THE SACRED GEESE

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, apropos the remarks of my friend from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] I wish to say that this is the visiting season. There is a season for everything and this is the season for visiting, not only international visitation, but it is the time for domestic visitation. In my absence from the Senate I noted with great pleasure that it appears that one of our stumbling blocks in the Congress has reached the point where there is going to be apparently a happy conclusion.

There is one lobby committee investigating in one quarter, summoning a witness and threatening him with everything from murder on down, and there is another investigating committee in another quarter which is calling upon and demanding the witness to come there and submit himself to inquisitorial processes. There is a conference being held on the one side and a conference being held on another side. The conferees are meeting, and fire and brimstone are being hurled in every quarter, criminations and recriminations, fire, blood, and murder liable to strike anywhere and strike anybody.

With all these great threatening disasters, when the representatives of the committees come to the lobbying headquarters of the utilities to find the culprit, when they go to search the devil's den, they find the Capitoline Hill of the lobbying headquarters being officially guarded by the White House.

Mr. President, this is the season for visiting. I believe I read in history once, and I have read very little history, that there was once what were known as the "sacred geese" who gave the alarm when the Capitoline Hill was in danger of attack. It seems from what I read or what was read to me that while all Rome was asleep—and if I make a mistake, I know my friend from Illinois will correct me, because he is the historian of this and the other side of the aisle——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator is quite right in his reference to the geese.

Mr. LONG. While all Rome was asleep, suddenly an attack was in process from the heathens on the outside. The geese began to cackle and quack and gave the alarm, so that Rome was awakened, brought to arms, and thereby saved from slaughter. So it was that these geese became known as the sacred geese. They were sacred to the Republic of Rome, the sacred geese which guarded the Capitoline Hill.

If I may undertake to make a comparison, though I may lack a knowledge of history and letters, there was a Capitoline Hill, it seems, rocking with the breezes of corruption and gigantic monopolistic influence which was being exerted on the Congress of the United States. There was a hell hole over here from which were being emitted the sluices of gold, the ferocious powers, the ferocious dominant control and influence, wherein, whereat, whereon, and whereabout it was alleged that at the final moment the goat would be flushed and they would bring out the great culprit Hopson. This led them to a raid on the devil's den.

I am informed by the public press, and I now make note that when this Capitoline Hill was about to be flushed some 2,000 years ago, or possibly 2,200 years ago—100 years does not make much difference when we are talking about this kind of important matters—it was saved by the sacred geese. Some 2,200 years later, when the modern Capitoline Hill was about to be flushed, what should be done? The sacred geese were dead. They are no longer here to give the alarm. Their bones have rusted for 2,000 years or more. But someone must be sent, someone must be at the most important places.

Criticism comes from the other side of the Chamber, and even from this side of the Chamber, because of what? Because of the most important man to the White House, and one of the most important men to the Treasury Department, and one of the most important men to the welfare of the Democratic Party, a prominent Democrat representing the State of Texas, representing that State which, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, would have a right to divide itself into five parts and have 10 Senators in this body instead of 2 if it so minded.

So at the crucial, pivotal moment we find the great national leader of the party from that State, a great important representative of the Treasury Department, a great official and high muck-a-muck in the person of the man who guards the portals of entry to the President of the United States, the man who says who can see the President, who can hear the President, who can know the President, all men who likewise become the guardians of the recesses and headquarters of the lobbying activities we are supposed to be investigating on behalf of the national administration.

Some have become highly excited about this situation. Why are we spending the time of the Senate? Why are they fooling themselves when the people have begun to laugh? Why become excited at the conduct of the conferees in one body as against the conduct of the conferees in this body, when the entire length and breadth of the United States feel they are being led into a mare's nest and a bad plight which had become a matter of juggling and hocus-pocus and intermeddling of 2-by-4 political tricksters which is not palatable to the people of the United States.

Honorable Senators and honorable Members of the House of Representatives, inspired by good motives, think they are busying themselves about a service of popular good, now that they have investigated Hopson. Hopson said he was spending his money, as I understand. Hopson said he was spending utility money, as I understand, trying to protect what he thought and what they think to be the interests of the utilities. All right; they have been doing that and always will do it, I believe.

On the other hand the newspapers, undertaking a defense of the utilities, say "What about the national administration spending the people's money undertaking to influence legislation?" I do not particularly say anything about that, but what I do say is, What about a national administration which is charging the utilities with spending the utilities' money on the one hand, and the utilities charging the administration of the United States Government with spending the people's money on the other hand, and then we come to find out that it is all a mere matter apparently of midnight machinations—and of misunderstanding among us, but understanding among them.

What about this report the newspapers have published that this White House leader is involved? Mind you, Mr. President, since what I am saying might some day be read by some one else, let me get this in the RECORD. It is not everybody who can see the President of the United States. He has a man who says who can see the President and who cannot.

A Member of the United States Senate can go and see Mr. Roosevelt provided Mr. Marvin McIntyre wishes him to see Mr. Roosevelt. If you ring the telephone and say, "Hello! Is this the White House? I should like to make an appointment to see the President of the United States", Mr. McIntyre will say whether you may or may not see the President. If you go and knock on the door of the White House and say, "I wish to talk to the President of the United States", Mr. McIntyre will say whether or not you have enough business to entitle you to talk to the President of the United States.

I have the greatest respect for Mr. McIntyre. I do not believe Mr. McIntyre has betrayed his chief. On the contrary, I think he is doing just what his chief would have him do if he knew all about it. I defend my friend, Mr. McIntyre, now from the scurrilous thrusts that have been made at him, wherein it has been asserted that probably he was not doing what his chief would have had him do, by making the statement that in my opinion the Chief Executive would have had him to do it if he had known about it, and has no criticism of his conduct.

If I have misstated the facts, either as to Mr. McIntyre or as to the Chief Executive of the United States, I pause to be corrected, and, of course, would accept higher authority. But Mr. McIntyre, who guards the White House and the door that leads to the President so long as the President is awake, when the time comes for the President to go to sleep guards the quarters wherein are housed the lobbyists and muckrakers for the public-utility interests, the particular headquarters in charge of the particular activities supposed to kill a bill which has the apparent stamp of approval of the national administration.

Here is Mr. McIntyre; here is an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; here is a Democratic master from the State of Texas; and, if the newspapers are to be believed, when they flush this nest in search of the particular group that is carrying on the scuttling game alleged to be going on around the Capitol, they find there these three men, and one of them says, "If you newspapermen say a word about who is here, we will see that every one of you loses his job."

Now, understand that. According to what the public press tells us, when they invade the Hopson headquarters, or the headquarters of Hopson's lieutenants, where Hopson is supposed to be, they find these three great men, who probably have more influence with what is carried on in this administration than any three men sitting in this body; and they say to the newspapermen, "If you tell anybody about it we will see that you lose your jobs." And there was my ponderous and well-beloved friend, the Sergeant at Arms of this body, pounding on a door in search of the culprit, hammering on a door, and hearing others told that they were liable to lose their jobs in case they reported whom they found there.

Imagine the qualms. Imagine the fright. For a day or two some of the newspapers did not publish the story. For a whole day two-thirds of the newspapers of the United States did not have a word in them to the effect that McIntyre and the Treasury Department and the Democratic Party were officially represented in the headquarters of the utility enterprises undertaking at this very time to control legislation in Washington.

Now I come to the bill for a moment. The bill might have done good. When it got into this body, over the objections of the Senator in charge of it, the bill had to be scalped in order to maintain the control behind it of certain influences. They took the Standard Oil Co. out of the bill, and the only explanation that has ever been given for having taken the gas interest out of the bill, which is owned more by the Standard Oil Co. than by anybody else, was that it was too strong to fight; and therefore they took the oil company out of the bill. After we had rewritten the gas interest back into the bill they went over to the House, and I understand that the first official action the House took was to take the gas and oil interests out of the bill again. Then they came back with the bill, going away beyond what the Democratic Party promised in one case, and eliminating everybody else from what the Democratic Party had promised in all other cases, interpreting "regulation" to include "destruction", which I was willing to do, because I, for one, am willing to go beyond the declaration of the Democratic Party in that matter; but, nonetheless, without any explanation whatever, they came back with the bill clearly excepting every other holding company in the United States of America from regulation or Government restriction of any kind whatsoever, just in order that they might pass a bill affecting one out of 2,000 or 10,000 companies which ought to have come under the promise of regulation of the Democratic Party.

Now we have had an investigation. While I was away, the Senate voted a subpena for Mr. Hopson, and then it voted a citation for contempt for Mr. Hopson. I understand, of course, that nothing has been done about the citation for contempt of Mr. Hopson, and I do not suppose anything will be done about it; and I am not one of those who urge that something should be done about it. In fact, I do not think anything ought to be done about it. But I do want to say to the Members of the Senate, let us stop this hokus-pokus. We have fooled around with the people until Congress has become a laughing-stock. They want us to quit, and they want us to get away from here; and I honestly believe that if they cannot get a promise that Congress will legislate along different lines than it has been doing since January of this year, they are hoping something will come up which will keep Congress from coming back here in January, or, if we do, that it will be for a very short time. They want us to quit.

The matter has come down to a condition like this: Laws are not made by Congress. They are made through the Executive penmanship that comes out of the White House. We vest control in the White House, and the White House takes the control over to the lobbying headquarters of the public-utility companies. With one hand we send all the power down to the White House—or, if not to the White House, then we send it down to the Treasury Department to be handled by the various and sundry heads—and by nighttime they betake themselves to the headquarters where all the iniquity is supposed to be in process that we are undertaking to curb all the time.

Let us stop being made playthings. It is time for Congress to be serious. We found out something that perhaps we did not know. We found out how things are done in Washington, D. C. We found out that while we are taking orders from the White House, at nighttime the White House in official representation betakes itself over to the lobbying headquarters of the very interests we are supposed to be fighting.

I have some friends in Congress. They came to me a few days ago and said, "Here: We are candidates for reelection. We know you are in favor of this bill just as WHEELER sent it from the Senate." I said, "Absolutely. That is the way I voted." "But," they said, "look here: There are certain men down in Louisiana who have been given control over the patronage of the Roosevelt administration in our own congressional districts, and those certain men are up here today working hand and foot for the utility interests in this bill. What are we going to do? These men down there in Louisiana who are dishing out the patronage of the national administration are voting against the death clause; and what are we, who are candidates for reelection, going to do? Are we to go up here and put our bodies up against a brace game that has the utilities and the national Democratic administration in the same pot to fight us?"

What kind of advice did I give those men? I told them they were more competent to exercise their own judgment under the circumstances prevailing, and they were in better shape to protect themselves than I knew how to tell them, and that they came nearer knowing what was the best and right thing to do under those circumstances, probably, than I knew how to tell them to do. So, now, those men will go back home. Some of them have voted with the leaders of the national Democratic Party. What are we to say? Are we to condemn one or the other? On the contrary, if one of us should stand up today and condemn the activity of the utility lobbyists, we should find ourselves condemning the White House in the same breath.

Any man who goes before the American people and condemns the lobbying activities of the power interests in the present Congress condemns the White House in the same breath. Be careful, therefore. Let us stop these committees from treading upon ground that is going to do damage to the party. You cannot save us from disgrace merely by not calling McIntyre before the committee. You cannot save us from our criminal culpability by failing to call Amon Carter and the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury before the lobbying committee. That will not save us.

The fact is that these men are out before the American people parading themselves as having guarded, as having protected, the very headquarters of corruption and fraud which the Congress is supposed to be ferreting. It is time that Congress realized that the people have already seen that this is a mere matter of tweedledee and tweedledum, that there is nothing to be done of substantial service, that the whole matter has involved itself into one in which the the White House has on its hands the task of explaining why the Capitoline Hill, night headquarters of the public-utility lobby, is guarded in the nighttime by the same men who guard the portals of the White House in the daytime.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the effort of the Senator from Louisiana to make it appear that the President of the United States is in sympathy with or responsible for the utilities lobby will not succeed. The Senator from Louisiana in characteristic fashion has denounced one of the President's assistant secretaries as guarding the lobby headquarters. Uttered anywhere else, that statement would be recognized by everyone who heard it as silly. It must have been made for the purpose of attempting to prejudice the public against Mr. McIntyre, and, through him, also prejudice the public against the President.

No honest individual in this country is going to believe that the President is not sincere in his efforts to promote legislation to control utility holding companies. With all his genius for expression, with all his disposition to distort facts, the Senator from Louisiana will not succeed in making the American people believe that the President is dishonest, and while pretending to the public to desire legislation on the subject of utility holding companies, he has been secretly conniving with the lobby agents who have desired to prevent such legislation. The statement is absurd.

In another feature it is ridiculous. The President does not direct Mr. Carter and Mr. Roberts and Mr. McIntyre with whom they shall go to dinner. He does not direct them as to what rooms they shall visit. It is absurd to take the time of the United States Senate to try to make a national issue of a visit of a gentleman to an individual room, on his way to dinner, for the purpose of getting a cocktail.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the Senator from Arkansas realize that a candidate for the Presidency has to have some issue, and that that probably is responsible for this one?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and that is a great issue to precipitate before the American people.

Then the Senator from Louisiana reads a lecture to the Senate about adjournment. He says that we ought to get away from here and not come back at all. He bases that statement on the conviction that the legislation which is enacted by the Congress is not desirable and not to be approved. Nevertheless, the function of legislating devolves upon the two branches of the Congress; it does not devolve solely on the Senator from Louisiana, and the illustrations we have of his fitness to perform his functions as a legislator are not calculated to inspire confidence in his ability to perform the whole task.

We have enacted much important legislation during this session, and we are trying to get away, and the one thing which interrupts us in that process, and hinders us more than anything else, is the consumption of time by the Senator from Louisiana in talking about irrelevant matters. He comes before the Senate after long absence and speaks for an hour on irrelevant subjects when the pending question is the motion of the Senator from Montana to proceed to the consideration of the railroad bankruptcy amendments. Then he tells us that we do not know what we are doing; that we have not sense enough to represent our constituents; that we ought to close up shop, and, by implication, let him enact the legislation that is necessary for the country, as he has been doing in the State of Louisiana.

He may have that supreme confidence in himself, but he will certainly pardon us if we do not feel the same measure of confidence. If you will take the number of pages in the RECORD of irrelevant matter, as well as relevant matter, which the Senator from Louisiana has filled by his absurd speeches, most of them absurd, during the present session, you will find that he, more than any of us, is responsible for the delay in the adjournment of the Congress; and if he will just take a little advice from me, he will quit talking so much and give the Congress a chance to perform its duties and go home.

IN REPLY RELATIVE TO THE THREE GUARDSMEN

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, in reply to the Senator from Arkansas, that instead of having undertaken to keep the Senate from legislating I have tried to get it to legislate. I preferred to have the Senate legislate rather than to pass a law providing that if the President wishes to cut the value of the dollar, he may do it; but the course suggested by me was not followed. I was against the bill providing that if the President wishes to lower the tariff or raise the tariff he may do it, but it was passed. I said we ought not to pass a bill providing this is a law if the President wants it to be or that this is the crime if he wants it to be and this is the penalty if he wants it to be. I have tried to get the Senate of the United States to legislate, but up until this time the Senate of the United States, with rare exceptions, has declined to legislate, and our industrious leader has not been out of company with that kind of a policy. I would have had the Senator be the legislator, which his title as a United States Senator would indicate he is, rather than to have laws passed providing that things shall be done by the President.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas makes the same speech about me he has made several other times. I made a speech about this White House guarding of the Capitoline Hill of the public-utility lobby headquarters. I did not make a speech about the Senator from Arkansas, nor did I make a speech about myself. I will have to do the speaking for myself, perhaps, some few weeks from now; but the Senator from Arkansas undertakes just to pass over this thing which I undertook to have the Senate consider.

I want the Senate to consider whether or not the portals of the lawmaking headquarters—and by lawmaking headquarters I refer to the White House, because we have given over our authority to make laws to that headquarters in most cases—whether or not the portals which guard the lawmaking and other executive functions shall be guarded and protected by the same hands that guard and protect by night the lobby headquarters of the public utilities. If that is all right, I do not object, but let us not be spending money of the Senate investigating how the White House tries to beat them and how they try to beat the White House when, while we are off fighting among ourselves, they are all up there having a good time together.

Here we are raising Cain among the people. The Senator from Alabama is almost at the point of blows with the Representative from New York over who is going to have Hopson, and "Where is Hopson?" The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], doing a good job, is almost at blows with the majority of the conferees of the opposite body, who will not agree with him. And lo and behold, when we begin to search out the situation at nighttime, there is the White House officialdom and the utility officialdom all lumped up together having a good time and saying to the boys, "If you say a word about it you are going to lose your jobs."

I do not want Senators to lose their jobs. They are likely to put me out of here this coming election if they find out I go around and undertake to authorize the Sergeant at Arms to flush their nests. I want the Senator from Arkansas to protect us, tell us where we stand, tell us how we are going to get into the White House if we find at utility headquarters at night the man who guards the port of entry to the White House.

I do not want any personal row with the Senator from Arkansas. I have tried my best to get along with him on fine terms, but, unfortunately, when I am trying to give advice here, as much for him as for anyone else, he takes up all of his time telling about what a bad man I am likely to be if I do not stop advising him and others.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3050) granting the consent of Congress to the States of New York and Vermont to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Lake Champlain between Rouses Point, N. Y., and Alburg, Vt.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. KELLER, Mr. SECREST, and Mr. TREADWAY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71 to the bill and concurred therein with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9070) to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and/or completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2681) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt., and for other purposes, with the accompanying papers.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions;

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 9070) to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and/or completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RAILROAD-BANKRUPTCY RELIEF

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8587.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8587) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation of the bill and the reason for the amendment of section 77 of the bankruptcy act.

A. The history of the bill is as follows:

First. The bill was passed by the House August 15.

Second. It was the subject of long hearings before the House Judiciary Committee, which considered the bill in executive session for a month and rewrote many of the paragraphs.

Third. The bill was prepared originally by the staff of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation. It was supported before the House committee by the Coordinator, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the 21 standard railroad labor organizations, the associated life-insurance companies, the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, and the American Short Line Railroad Association. It was opposed by representatives of the Van Sweringen lines among others.

Fourth. The President recommended its passage in a special message to Congress on June 7, 1935, dealing with the transportation problem.

B. What section 77 is:

First. It was passed early in March 1933, after hurried consideration, just before the former administration went out of office.

Second. It was an attempt to get away from the inefficient and expensive equity reorganizations, the maladministration of which had been notorious.

Third. The act was a good step in the right direction because—

(a) Sec. 77, which it is sought to amend by the pending bill, brought the I. C. C. into the active development of plans, enabling a proper consideration of the public interest, and the development of reorganizations according to a common pattern. The Federal judges have been notoriously derelict by reason of their failure to scrutinize reorganization plans.

(b) Section 77 provides for the control of expenditures and fees—a source of extravagance and brigandage.

Fourth. Section 77 was followed the next year by similar companion statutes: Section 77B, which applies to business corporations generally, and section 80, which applies to municipal corporations.

Fifth. The constitutionality of this sort of legislation was abundantly sustained in Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co. v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway (55 Sup. Ct. Rep. 595), decided in April, where the Court declared that the bankruptcy power was a broad, progressive power amply adapted to meeting the growing necessity of business.

C. Why an amendment of section 77 is necessary:

First. Two years' experience in its administration shows the act to be unworkable in many respects.

Second. There are now 85 railroads with a mileage of something over 58,815 miles involved in bankruptcy or receivership proceedings. Other insolvencies may be in prospect. In fact, most everyone appreciates that they are inevitable. The law must be effective for reorganizations of such magnitude as the country has never seen before.

Third. The present law contemplates hasty reorganizations. The courts have held that, unless there are prompt reorganizations under this statute, the cases must be dismissed, in which event they go back into the old-fashioned equity procedure, from the inefficiencies of which it was the purpose of section 77 to escape. The Federal judges are restive, and in a number of cases have issued orders indicating that unless the reorganizations are promptly accomplished, the cases will be thrown back into equity. This puts an unfortunate emphasis upon speed rather than soundness when the act is unworkable.

D. H. R. 8587 is the result of a general overhauling of the act and includes the following important amendments:

First. The most important changes are provisions permitting making present plans effective. Under the present law, if more than one-third dissent or fail to vote, a plan which is fair and equitable is blocked—the act requiring that two-thirds of each class must approve the plan. There are said to be 72 classes of creditors and stockholders in the Missouri Pacific case and 35 or 40 classes in the Rock Island case. In the instance of the Missouri Pacific, J. P. Morgan Co. has a bank loan of $6,000,000—I am merely citing this case as an illustration—classified in a single class, and has in hock the controlling stock interests of the Van Sweringens. This means that it is impossible to get through a plan without either meeting the Morgan's terms or paying the value of their interest in cash.

In other words, it makes it possible for a man who holds something over one-third of some one small class of debt absolutely to say that no reorganization plan can take place no matter how fair it may be, "Unless you either buy me out or pay me the full amount of my debt to the detriment of the other classes."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is there any provision in the bill which might be characterized as confiscatory of property and as authorizing, through the courts or otherwise, proceedings which would deny due process of law to persons who have interests in railroads, either stocks or bonds?

Mr. WHEELER. None whatever.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I wish to make certain that I heard the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WHEELER. I will come soon to an explanation of that point. Let me say to the Senator from Delaware that I shall cover that specific point in my statement.

It is not possible under the present law to overcome the obstruction of the equity holders without a valuation which will establish that they have no equity in the property. The valuation hearings are almost without any equal in jurisprudence for size and expense. Consequently, in the pending Frisco reorganization, the Commission has found it necessary to postpone any further action until the act is amended; otherwise they would have to go through a complete valuation of the Frisco system, and it would take years for them to complete that valuation in order to get a reorganization as the set-up is at present.

These difficulties are overcome by the amendments which are proposed, as follows:

The bill provides that if two-thirds of each class approve the plan it will bind the minorities.

It also provides that the court may make effective a plan where two-thirds do not agree, provided the court finds that the plan is fair and equitable, affords due recognition of the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, will conform to the requirements of the law of the land, and that the rejection of the plan is not justified in the light of the respective rights of those rejecting.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. The old bill provided that two-thirds of any class should be controlling, but this bill provides that two-thirds of those voting shall control; is that not correct?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; that is, of each class.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. In the Van Sweringen case there are said to be 72 different classes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I am not complaining about it, but I desired to point out to the Senator, as the Senator went along, that there has been a change now, so instead of being two-thirds of the class, it is two-thirds of the voting in the class.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Second. As already stated, the present law contemplates hurried procedure. Your committee feels that time ought to be taken to work out these reorganizations with careful consideration. The amended bill carries a provision in paragraph (g), page 28, line 24, which gives the judge discretion as to when he shall dismiss these cases.

Third. It is intended to protect the stockholders and creditors against injustice due to reorganizations based on depressed conditions which may be transient. Paragraph (b), clause 3, page 6, line 11, authorizes the issuance of options or warrants to receive, or subscribe for, securities—these being so-called "rain check" securities.

In a recent reorganization of an industrial concern many of the stockholders were completely wiped out. They were given no new stock. They received nothing at all.

Then after reorganization business began to pick up because of more prosperous conditions, but these stockholders who had invested their money remained completely wiped out, while other investors reaped the reward. This so-called "rain check" device is to protect that class of stockholders.

Fourth. Irregularities and abuses have occurred in the activities of protective committees, an extreme case being that of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, which the Commission unsuccessfully attempted to prevent. The bill in subsection (p) carries provisions enabling comprehensive regulation of such committees, the purpose being to protect the public and the companies against exploitation, such protection being impossible under the present law.

In other words, at times so-called "protective" committees have been organized. As a matter of fact, some of these protective committees have exploited the stockholders rather than protected them, and the Commission had no authority over them. This seeks to protect the investor when these so-called "protective" committees are not acting to his best interest.

Fifth. Under the present section 77 trustees need not be appointed. It has been found that the courts are inclined to leave the properties in the hands of the old managements. This prevents the exposure of irregularities, fraud, or mismanagement by the old management. It is unfair to the bondholders and creditors, for the old management represents the equity interests or the bankers. The amendments require the appointment of trustees and provide that where a trustee is selected who is an officer, director, or employee of the company an independent trustee shall be also appointed (p. 9, line 21).

Sixth. In order to insure that irregularities, misconduct, or mismanagement shall be disclosed, the judge is required to direct the trustee or the Commission to report to him the facts with reference thereto (p. 15, line 13).

Seventh. Certain banking firms have enjoyed an advantage through inside information as to the names and addresses of security holders, which should be a matter of common knowledge, and which under the existing law cannot be required. The bill allows the judge to order the divulgence of such information (p. 13, line 14).

Eighth. The foregoing are the important changes, but there are a great many minor changes resulting from a general reconsideration and overhauling of the whole act.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana if it is his judgment that the pending bill, if enacted, would remove the Federal court from jurisdiction of appointing receivers or taking charge of the organization in a foreclosure proceeding?

Mr. WHEELER. No; quite the contrary. As a matter of fact, it would give the court more power than is given under section 77. Under the present law a panel is created and the court selects trustees from that panel. That has worked unsatisfactorily.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if there is available a printed report on the bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have been trying to get one for some time, but have not succeeded.

Mr. WHEELER. Both the House committee and the Senate committee submitted printed reports. Copies of the reports should have been here several days ago.

Mr. ROBINSON. The information was sent to me by the clerk at the bill desk that there was no report available.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senate report on S. 1634, which is practically identical with H. R. 8587, has been printed.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is the more necessary to have it available, because I have been interrupted some 15 times since the Senator began to speak, and it has been impossible for me to hear what he is saying because of such interruptions. Senators come to my desk and ask me questions, which makes it impossible for me to following connectedly the Senator's remarks.

Mr. WHEELER. There is a printed report on S. 1634.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have now been handed a copy of the report. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. Under the present law, let me say to the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. Are the House bill and the Senate bill exactly similar?

Mr. WHEELER. They are practically the same, with a few minor exceptions. There are really only two changes from the House bill of any importance. The other changes involve commas, and so forth. The House bill contains a provision offered on the floor of the House which reads as follows:

(6) If a lease of a line of railroad is rejected and if the lessee, with the approval of the judge, shall elect no longer to operate the leased line, it shall be the duty of the lessor at the end of a period to be fixed by the judge to begin the operation of such line, unless the judge, upon the petition of the lessor, shall decree after hearing that it would be impracticable and contrary to the public interest for the lessor to operate the said line, in which event it shall be the duty of the lessee to continue operation on or for the account of the lessor until the abandonment of such line is authorized by the Commission in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

This is an amendment providing for the operation of property which is the subject of a lease where the debtor, as lessee, repudiates the lease. The effect of this amendment is plain on its face. It provides for the operation of the property by the lessor, or by the lessee on account of the lessor. This is not an important amendment. It is a mere detail of the bill.

The other amendment reads as follows:

(12) Within such maximum limits as are fixed by the Commission, the judge may make an allowance, to be paid out of the debtor's estate, for the actual and reasonable expenses (including reasonable attorney's fees) incurred in connection with the proceedings and plan by parties in interest and by reorganization managers and committees or other representatives of creditors and stockholders, and within such limits may make an allowance to be paid out of the debtor's estate for the actual and reasonable expenses incurred in connection with the proceedings and plan and reasonable compensation for services in connection therewith by trustees under indentures, depositaries, and such assistants as the Commission with the approval of the judge may especially employ.

The present provisions of section 77 allow both expenses and fees to be paid to the designated interested parties out of the debtor's estate. This was regarded as an invitation to exploitation. The House Judiciary Committee, consequently, eliminated fees entirely, allowing only expenses. On further investigation it found that this was too rigorous. The effect of the amendment is to allow expenses to all the interested parties and fees only to trustees under indentures, depositaries, and such assistants as are especially employed by the Commission with the approval of the judge.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the Senator from Montana seeking to have the House bill or the Senate bill passed?

Mr. WHEELER. My motion was to proceed to the consideration of the House bill, and that motion has been agreed to.

Coming now to the question of due process:

Before the reorganization can take place the court must make the following findings:

That the plan is fair and equitable, affords due recognition to the rights of each class of creditors and stockholders, does not discriminate unfairly in favor of any class of creditors or stockholders, and will conform to the requirements of the law of the land regarding the participation of the various classes of creditors and stockholders. These standards require that the plan be prepared with scrupulous regard for the rights of all the parties. The plan, if thus approved by the court, will then be submitted to the creditors and shareholders. If two-thirds of each class consent, the plan will bind the remainder of each class. But the judge may make the plan effective, even if not so accepted, if he finds that it conforms to the requirements just stated, provides fair and equitable treatment for the interests of those rejecting it, and that their rejection is not reasonably justified in the light of the respective rights and interests. These provisions give complete due process of law from a procedural standpoint, there being provision for full hearings both before the commission and the court. Within the broad powers of Congress under the bankruptcy clause as recently declared by the Supreme Court in Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co. v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Ry. Co. (55 Sup. Ct. Rept. 595), the provisions also afford due process of law in fully protecting the property rights which are involved.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I should like to review very briefly the history of this legislation.

The Senate may remember that early in March 1933 the amendment of the bankruptcy law, embodying section 77, was passed by the Senate. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I presented it to the Senate, and it seems to me it would have been a little more logical to have referred the pending bill to the Judiciary Committee instead of to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the Judiciary Committee having heretofore had all bills referring to the bankruptcy law referred to it. However, since I am a member of both committees, I have no particular complaint to make.

The Senate may remember that the original section 77 of the bankruptcy law was passed by the Senate hurriedly, and almost without debate, and without any Senator except myself knowing very much about it. At the time I congratulated myself on having the Senate take my word in passing that bill upon the explanation which I then made of it.

It was urged by the railroads; the administration approved it because of the necessity of taking care of the railroads, and everybody agreed that it was a step in the right direction. All of us knew at the time that section 77 of the bankruptcy law would at some time necessarily have to be revised. I so stated to the Senate at that time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator used the words that the railroads were to be taken care of. Does he mean by that that they were to be taken care of financially by the Government of the United States?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. KING. Or was it merely for the purpose of enabling the railroads to be placed in the hands of receivers or of the courts or to be reorganized under the administration of the courts?

Mr. HASTINGS. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it. The purpose was to permit the railroads to reorganize more effectively and more easily.

There is some criticism of this bill now before us. My recollection is that the committee had no hearings upon it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. While technically the Senator is correct, and the Senate committee did not have a hearing on it, the House committee held long hearings on the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. I was about to state that.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senate committee had the benefit of the House hearings, and the only objection that was raised by anybody was by an attorney for one of the railroads, as I recall; and the only point he raised was with reference to the court appointing an independent trustee where an officer or director had been appointed.

Mr. HASTINGS. I was not complaining, and I was going to explain why there were long hearings held in the House.

The original draft of this section was made under the direction of the Solicitor General, who had given long study to the matter before drafting it. In the same connection was the section permitting corporations to reorganize, and at the same time a provision with respect to the smaller debtors, the purpose being to relieve persons and corporations of the stigma of being declared to be bankrupts. It was a very clever plan, and everybody was very much interested in it.

With respect to the particular section, my understanding is that Mr. Craven, counsel for the Coordinator, who has been working diligently for at least a year upon the subject, found, as the railroads have found, many difficulties. For instance, I doubt whether anyone who knew little or nothing about it would suspect that there could be 72 classes of creditors of any great railroad corporation in the country. It is realized, of course, how difficult it is to get 66⅔ percent of the creditors of 72 classes to agree.

Originally the question was—and, of course, it was to be decided by the Congress itself—whether or not one-third of the creditors should be compelled to agree with the opinion of two-thirds. Anyone who has had anything to do with the matter of reorganizing a corporation has had the experience of having some man or some few people standing out, demanding 100-percent payment of their claims, and thereby preventing reorganization of the corporation. It was sought to get away from that difficulty.

I do not recall that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] emphasized this point, but I wish to emphasize it and express my own opinion with respect to the change proposed to be made in the law. The original law provided that 66⅔ percent of all classes must agree to the plan of reorganization; and if they should not agree, the court would have the right to ascertain the value of their claims and to pay them in cash. The bill changes that in two particulars, and this is of great importance.

In the first place, the bill provides that 66⅔ percent of those voting shall decide the question. That, I believe, is not unreasonable. It must be realized that in railroad corporations, with the securities scattered all over the country, it is frequently very difficult, even if the security holders agree, to get in touch with them and to get 66⅔ percent of a particular class. I think it is not unreasonable to provide that 66⅔ percent of the class which is represented shall vote and shall determine whether that class shall agree with the plan or whether it shall not.

There is a matter in the bill which is of greater importance. Even if no vote at all is obtained from a certain class, even if the whole class objects, it is provided that the court, if it finds the plan to be equitable and fair for that particular class, may force that class to agree even though all in that class object. The court, of course, will go a long way before agreeing to that if there be a real controversy. Of course, if the court should find some particular class refusing to participate simply for the purpose of holding up the reorganization, it could deal with the situation under the amendment proposed in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Suppose the 1 class out of the 20 or 30 or even 70 held a preponderating interest in the corporation, either in the stock or the bonds or as a creditor, and the corporation or person holding the preponderating interest objected, could it or he be forced to accept the terms?

Mr. HASTINGS. They could be under this plan, always with the approval of the court and with the right of appeal if the court dealt unfairly with them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Not only must it be approved by the court, but it must be approved also by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; I had overlooked that fact.

Mr. WHEELER. There is a double check upon the situation under that provision.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; there is a right of appeal to the circuit court from the decision of either of them.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. As the Senator from Delaware pointed out, if we have as many as 72 classes of creditors, one class may come in and say to all the rest, "Unless you pay us out in cash we will hold up any reorganization." Everybody appreciates that the bill which the Senator from Delaware introduced originally was a step in the right direction. As he said, it was passed hurriedly toward the end of the session for the purpose of permitting reorganization, but it was found it did not work out practically.

Mr. HASTINGS. I may say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that Congress is undoubtedly giving to the courts and to the Interstate Commerce Commission very great power. There is no doubt about that. However, so far as I am concerned, I have always been willing to leave such questions as are here involved to the Federal courts of the land, which, I think, constitute the finest branch of our Government, with the right of appeal. Occasionally the courts will make a mistake and occasionally an injustice will be done, but some place we have to leave that authority.

In this particular instance there is a double check. It is necessary to have the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the approval of the district judge before whom the matter is being tried, and then there is always the right of appeal to the circuit court. Although we are giving this very great authority, I am quite satisfied that it has become necessary in order to make the bill workable that we should give that unusual authority.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Suppose a majority of the bondholders—and I suppose there would be a mortgage or trust deed to secure the payment of the bonds—should determine to go into court and foreclose for the purpose of obtaining judgment relief for the creditors. Under the bill they would be denied that opportunity, would they not?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; that is not quite true. I should think if a majority of the bondholders insisted upon their rights it might be that the court would have the authority under the bill to force them to do something else other than to foreclose their mortgage. I think that is probably true. The Senator from Montana can clear up that point.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill provides just the same as the ordinary statute for composition of the debts of the railroad company.

Mr. KING. Does it provide for composition of the creditors by selling the assets and then making distribution according to their respective claims?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, no; that of course would not be a reorganization. I take it if a railroad concern was not in position to reorganize, under the terms of the bill it could take the ordinary course of bankruptcy and be wiped out and everybody paid in accordance with his rights.

Mr. President, the objection has been made by the railroad executives to the appointment of a trustee. I have very great sympathy for their suggestion because when we were considering the matter in the first place we avoided so far as possible—and I think the provision is made with respect to individual debtors of the corporation and the railroads—requiring the court to appoint a trustee in the first instance, the idea of all this legislation being that because of the depression some extraordinary measures were needed to pull the business concerns out of the hole and to let them continue without having the handicap of being declared a bankrupt. The idea of the trustee which goes with every bankruptcy proceeding was eliminated in all these instances. It was one of the principal factors in the bill to eliminate the appointment of a trustee wherever possible, and let the person who is trying to come back operate his own property in his own way.

I had in mind offering an amendment striking out that provision, but there is another side to it; and my hope is that if the bill shall pass in its present form the judges who administer it will do so with great common sense, and that it will not, therefore, do any great harm.

There is this side of the matter: It is undoubtedly true, in a few instances—and I hope they are very few—that railroad management has resulted in doing things which were not right. Of course, if an application to reorganize be made by a railroad corporation whose management has been guilty of doing wrong things, it is very important for the railroad to avoid the appointment of a trustee, and to leave the railroad in the hands of its present directors. I say that with some care. Personally, I do not know of any such instances, but information comes to me that they exist; and if they do, even if they be very rare, the Congress ought to do what it can to uncover fraud and to punish those who have been guilty of fraud; and, of course, the only way in which that may be done is by the appointment of a trustee.

I dread tremendously to see trustees appointed for distressed railroads where the management has done the best it could under all the circumstances. I think in such instances it would be a serious mistake to displace the present management; but when we bear in mind that it is necessary to make one rule for all, I hope the courts will see where the honesty is and where the dishonesty is, and discriminate between the two, and appoint as one trustee the president of a railroad whose only fault is that he has not been able to live under the depression, and, as the bill provides, appoint as another trustee some reasonable outside man.

While I see difficulties on both sides, after the great study with respect to the subject which has been made by the House, and by Mr. Craven, who has been working with it for a year, I am quite convinced that the Congress would not be justified in rejecting the proposed amendment to section 77 of the Bankruptcy Act; and, upon the whole, I think a good job has been done.

Of course, other objections might be raised; but I beg the railroads that are objecting now to bear in mind what Congress did for them 2 years ago. We then did an act which we hoped would help to revive them and to save them. Let them be patient now; and if later we find that we have made a mistake today, we shall undertake to correct it.

The suggestion has been made that section 77 of the present law has been declared constitutional, and that we should not, by changing the act, do anything which would cast any doubt upon the reorganizations now going on. I was very much impressed with that suggestion, and I must confess that I have some doubt whether or not the Congress may compel compliance with the provisions of this bill by a class that stands out and says, "We desire the value of our interest in this property in cash. We do not wish to go along with this reorganization." I call attention, however, to the fact that we have enlarged the present Bankruptcy Act. If it be true that we have not the right to enlarge it, it seems to me that our action will not in any way affect the old act, and we shall still have left whatever is good in the old act.

Mr. President, speaking generally, I am not prepared to offer any amendment which I am sure would improve the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think this rather revolutionary, drastic measure, which may warrant an apprehension that it possesses the taint of unconstitutionality, will lead to such disorganization and confusion as will inevitably result in governmental ownership?

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, no; not at all. I am always suspicious of the chairman of the committee with respect to governmental ownership. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. So am I.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wish to say in defense of him in this case, however, that I do not think this measure even tends that way. If it did, I should turn my back upon the whole proposal. I do not think there is any tendency in this bill toward governmental ownership, to which I am as thoroughly opposed as is the Senator from Utah, but the mere fact that the Senator from Montana had the bill referred to his committee gives me no reason to suspect that he has in it a purpose to further his object of governmental ownership. I am sure that is not involved in this proposal.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that there cannot be any question of constitutionality as to this bill unless the whole theory of our bankruptcy laws is unconstitutional, because the bill merely permits the railroads to do what the Federal courts may authorize now under the general bankruptcy law. The Supreme Court has gone a long way in holding that the present law is constitutional. The only thing which makes me suspicious about this measure is the fact that the Senator from Delaware agrees with me with reference to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the measure under consideration consists of 42 pages. It contains many involved provisions and should call for most careful consideration. Unfortunately many of the measures which pass the Senate, in my judgment, do not receive adequate consideration, and as a result we may anticipate unfortunate, if not serious, results when they are put into effect.

A measure dealing with the railroads of the United States and their reorganization is of primary importance. Billions of dollars have been invested in our railroad systems, and the securities issued by them are held by banks, insurance and investment companies, and by hundreds of thousands of American citizens.

I doubt whether all the members of the committee reporting this bill have examined it, or at least are thoroughly familiar with its terms; and I am quite certain that but a very few of the remaining Senators have read the bill or understand its provisions; and yet we are called upon to hastily pass it through the Senate. We did have, however, the benefit of the rather full and illuminating statement made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WHEELER] and the clear and convincing factual statement submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. The fact that these two Senators substantially agree upon the terms of the bill and the objects sought to be accomplished, and join in requesting its passage, furnishes rather persuasive reasons for voting for this measure.

I confess that I should feel better satisfied to vote for it if opportunity had been afforded to examine it and to become familiar with the reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Coordinator dealing with the condition of the railroads, and particularly their financial condition, the exact nature of their obligations, the steps which have been taken and are being taken to effect reorganizations, and generally to have been fully advised as to the probable results which will follow the enactment of this measure which it is stated is supplemental to the original bankruptcy act.

It is not certain that some of the legislation of Congress dealing with railroads has proven of advantage to them or beneficial to the stockholders and those holding their bonds and other securities.

Certain it is that for a number of years the condition of the railroads has been unsatisfactory; in some instances their plight has been the result of mismanagement and other causes which could have and should have been averted. Undoubtedly the excellent National and State highway system which has been established has affected in a rather serious way the railroad companies, and it is manifest that the competitive forces to which the railroads are being subjected not only in the transportation of freight but of passengers has contributed to the unsatisfactory situation of railroad lines, both transcontinental and local.

There are those who believe that the restrictions imposed upon our rail transportation lines have proven injurious rather than beneficial. I have frequently thought that if Congress had enacted a statute dealing with rebates, discrimination, and unfair, and, indeed, illegal practices, of many of the railroad companies and had created a commission with quasi-judicial functions to hear complaints of shippers and to render enforceable decisions for the protection of the public that more satisfactory results would have been obtained and the public would have been better satisfied and the railroads would have escaped many of the financial and other difficulties with which they have been beset.

Many of the railroads adopted unsound practices and pursued unwise fiscal policies. They incurred in many instances unnecessary expenditures and loaded themselves with oppressive indebtedness. Their condition became so serious that appeals were made to the Government, and loans amounting to several hundred million dollars were made to them. Upon a number of occasions during the past 2 or 3 years the wisdom of the Government in extending such large credits has been questioned, and in the Senate, as I recall, the senior Senator from Michigan, whose temporary absence because of illness we all deplore, expressed some doubts as to the wisdom of the policy which the Government was pursuing. It has been claimed by many that some of the railroads should have been denied such aid, even though it would have resulted in their bankruptcy and their being forced, as was expressed by some, to go through the "wringer." At any rate, the condition of some of the railroads was such as to call for legislation that would prevent their complete destruction and permit reorganizations.

The Bankruptcy Act, of which the measure before us is supplemental, was designed to aid the crippled railroads and to bring about, if possible, reorganizations so that they might render improved service to the public and prevent the stockholders and the owners and holders of securities from sustaining irreparable losses.

What the future of the railroads may be is difficult to determine. There are some persons who own stock and bonds of railroad companies who would be glad to have the Government purchase their holdings and securities and take over and become the owner of our railroad system. Personally I should regret to have this plan, socialistic in form, adopted by the United States.

There is developing a rather strong socialistic current and its strength is being increased by the activities of a considerable element in our country. The Government, in my opinion, is transcending the authority which it possesses, and is embarking upon policies socialistic and paternalistic, and undeniably bureaucratic, that will result, if continued, in modifying the structure of the Government which was given to us by its founders.

I suppose, Mr. President, that the situation is such as to justify the passage of the measure before us, and I shall therefore no longer detain the Senate so that it may take such action as it may deem proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] spoke to me about an amendment which he desired to offer to this bill. I told him that I felt he should have an opportunity to offer the amendment and that I had no particular objection to it. He did not offer it, and I ask unanimous consent that the votes just taken be reconsidered for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Kentucky to offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Without objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed will be reconsidered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say that I was called to the rear of the Chamber on an important matter while the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] was speaking, and I did not know the bill would be passed so rapidly.

I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 21, after the word "forthwith", it is proposed to add the following:

(and, in pending proceedings, immediately upon the effective date of this amendatory section).

And on page 10, line 15, after the period, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 21, in the following words:

Where proceedings are pending upon the effective date of this amendatory section, the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply, but the provisions relating to the appointment of trustees and substitute trustees contained in clauses (1) and (2) of subdivision (c) of this section as it existed prior to the effective date of this amendatory section shall apply.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Montana that this merely makes applicable to pending proceedings, as well as to those which may be instituted in the future, the provision with respect to trustees provided in the former bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 1832. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to provide by agreement with Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, a subdivision of the State of New Mexico, for maintenance and operation on newly reclaimed Pueblo Indian lands in the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., reclaimed under previous act of Congress, and authorizing an annual appropriation to pay the cost thereof for a period of not to exceed 5 years; and

S. 3336. An act to repeal titles I and II of the National Prohibition Act, to reenact certain provisions of title II thereof, to amend or repeal various liquor laws, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7167) to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, authorize appropriations, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. PALMISANO, Mr. ELLENBOGEN, and Mr. DIRKSEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC GRAZING LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3019) to amend sections 1, 3, and 15 of "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"That the first sentence of section 1 of the Act entitled 'An Act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes', approved June 28, 1934, is amended by striking out the words 'eighty million' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'one hundred and forty-two million'.

"SEC. 2. Section 7 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to examine and classify any lands withdrawn or reserved by Executive orders of November 26, 1934 (numbered 6910), February 5, 1935 (numbered 6964), and May 20, 1935 (numbered 7048), or within a grazing district, which are more valuable or suitable for the production of agricultural crops than for the production of native grasses and forage plants, or more valuable or suitable for any other use than for the use provided for under this Act, and to open such lands to entry, selection, or location for disposal in accordance with such classification under applicable public-land laws, except that homestead entries shall not be allowed for tracts exceeding three hundred and twenty acres in area. Such lands shall not be subject to disposition, settlement, or occupation until after the same have been classified and opened to entry: Provided, That locations and entries under the mining laws, including the Act of February 25, 1920, as amended, may be made upon such withdrawn and reserved areas without regard to classification and without restrictions or limitations by any provision of this Act. Where such lands are located within grazing districts reasonable notice shall be given by the Secretary of the Interior to any grazing permittee of such lands. The applicant, after his entry, selection, or location is allowed, shall be entitled to the possession and use of such lands: Provided, That upon the application of any applicant qualified to make entry, selection, or location, under the public-land laws, filed in the land office of the proper district, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause any tract to be classified, and such application, if allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall entitle the applicant to a preference right to enter, select, or locate such lands if opened to entry as herein provided.'

"SEC. 3. Section 8 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 8. That where such action will promote the purposes of the district or facilitate its administration, the Secretary is authorized and directed to accept on behalf of the United States any lands within the exterior boundaries of a district as a gift, or, when public interests will be benefited thereby and such action will promote the consolidation of the land holdings of any owner, he is authorized and directed to accept on behalf of the United States title to any privately owned lands within or without the boundaries of said grazing district, and in exchange therefor to issue patent for not to exceed an equal value of surveyed grazing district land or of unreserved public land in the same State or within a distance of not more than fifty miles within the adjoining State nearest the base lands.'

"SEC. 4. Such Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"'SEC. 8–A. Upon application of any State to exchange lands within or without the boundaries of a grazing district the Secretary of the Interior shall and is hereby directed to proceed with such exchange at the earliest practicable date in the manner now provided by law for the exchange of lands with the States and to cooperate fully with the States to that end, but no State shall be permitted to select lieu lands in another State. In making such exchange the United States shall patent to such State an equal value of surveyed grazing land or of unreserved surveyed public land. Areas and values of unsurveyed lands within or without grazing districts may be approximated by protraction or otherwise for the purpose of effecting exchanges of State lands. No State, however, shall select public lands within a grazing district in furtherance of any exchange except for the purpose of consolidating its land holdings located in such area. No fee shall be charged the State for any exchange of land made under this Act except one-half of the cost of publishing notice of a proposed exchange as herein provided.

"'Before any such exchange under this section or under section 8 hereof shall be effected notice of the contemplated exchange, describing the lands involved, shall be published by the Secretary of the Interior once each week for four successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county or counties in which may be situated the lands to be accepted, and in the same manner in some like newspaper published in any county in which may be situated any lands to be given in such exchange; lands conveyed to the United States under this Act shall, upon acceptance of title, become public lands, and if located within the exterior boundaries of a grazing district they shall become a part of the district within the boundaries of which they are located: Provided, That either party to an exchange under this or the preceding section may make reservations of minerals, easements, or rights of use, the values of which shall be duly considered in determining the values of the exchanged lands. Where reservations are made in lands conveyed to the United States the right to enjoy them shall be subject to such reasonable conditions respecting ingress and egress and the use of the surface of the land as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of the Interior. Where mineral reservations are made in lands conveyed by the United States, it shall be so stipulated in the patent, and any person who acquires the right to mine and remove the reserved mineral deposits may enter and occupy so much of the surface as may be required for all purposes incident to the mining and removal of the minerals therefrom, and may mine and remove such minerals, upon payment to the owner of the surface for damages caused to the land and improvements thereon.'

"SEC. 5. Section 10 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 10. That, except as provided in sections 9 and 11 hereof, all moneys received under the authority of this Act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, but 25 per centum of all moneys received under this Act during any fiscal year is hereby made available, when appropriated by the Congress, for expenditure by the Secretary of the Interior for the construction, purchase, or maintenance of range improvements, and 50 per centum of the money received under this Act during any fiscal year shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State in which the grazing districts or the lands producing such moneys are situated, to be expended as the State Legislature of such State may prescribe for the benefit of the county or counties in which the grazing districts or the lands producing such moneys are situated: Provided, That if any grazing district or any leased tract is in more than one State or county, the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said district or leased tract shall be proportional to its area in said district or leased tract.'

"SEC. 6. Section 15 of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15. The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized, in his discretion, where lands of the public domain are so situated as not to justify their inclusion in any grazing district to be established pursuant to this Act, to lease any such lands for grazing purposes, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe: Provided, That preference shall be given to owners, homesteaders, lessees or other lawful occupants of contiguous lands to the extent necessary to permit proper use of such contiguous lands, except, that when such isolated or disconnected tracts embrace 760 acres or less, the owners, homesteaders, lessees or other lawful occupants of lands contiguous thereto, shall be entitled to receive such leases thereto: Provided further, That the issuance of such a lease shall not be construed to prevent the sale, exchange, or other disposition of lands as authorized by this Act.'

"SEC. 7. Such Act is further amended by adding the following new section:

"'SEC. 17. The Secretary of the Interior shall have power to select a Director of Grazing and such assistant directors of grazing, graziers, and such other employees, as shall be necessary to administer this Act without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws. The Secretary of the Interior shall give consideration to the practical range experience in public land States of the persons selected for such positions.

"'No assistant director of grazing, grazier, or other employee shall be appointed who is not at the time of appointment or selection a bona fide citizen and resident of the State, or of one of the States, in which such director, grazier, or other employee is to serve.'

"SEC. 8. Such Act is further amended by adding the following new section:

"'SEC. 18. (a) All vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved nonminerals lands of the public domain which are situated in isolated or disconnected tracts of seven hundred and sixty acres or less which, at the expiration of two years after the passage of this Act, as amended, are not included within the boundaries of any grazing district established pursuant to this Act, as amended, and which during such period have not been ordered into the market for sale under the provisions of section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, or leased under the provisions of this Act, or selected for exchange under the provisions of this Act, are hereby granted to the several States in which such lands are situated for the use or benefit of the common schools of such States.

"'(b) No part of the grant made by this section shall become effective as to any State until such State, through its legislature, shall have accepted such grant, and such acceptance, duly certified, has been received by the Secretary of the Interior. Upon the receipt of such acceptance, which must be made within a period of four years after the date of enactment of this Act, as amended, the grant shall immediately become effective as to such State, irrespective of the action of other States, and the Secretary shall immediately notify the local land offices in such State of such fact. The Secretary shall also cause to be delivered to the proper officials of such State, such maps, records, books, and documents as may be necessary for the enjoyment, control, use, administration, and disposition of such lands.'"

"TITLE II. BADLANDS NATIONAL MONUMENT

"SEC. 1. The boundaries of the Badlands National Monument, as established by the Act of March 4, 1929 (45 Stat. 1553), shall be, and are hereby, extended to include such lands adjacent or contiguous thereto, in the State of South Dakota, including, but not being restricted to, lands designated as submarginal by the Resettlement Administration, as may be determined by the President, by proclamation, within five years following the approval of this Act, to be necessary for the proper rounding out of the boundaries of said Monument or the administration thereof, providing the entire area of such Monument shall not exceed 250,000 acres.

"SEC. 2. That the provisions of the Act of August 25, 1916, entitled 'An Act to establish a National Park Service and for other purposes', as amended, are hereby made applicable to and extended over such lands as may be added to the Monument under the authority of the foregoing section."

STABILIZATION OF BITUMINOUS COAL-MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. NEELY. I move to take from the table and proceed to the consideration of House bill 9100, a bill to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9100) to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous-coal resources of the United States; to provide for the general welfare, and for other purposes; and providing penalties.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Lewis	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Costigan	Logan	Reynolds
Austin	Davis	Lonergan	Robinson

Connally	La Follette	Pittman	White

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], who are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I announce also that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] is absent on account of illness.

I ask that these announcements stand in the RECORD for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9100.

Mr. BONE and Mr. MCNARY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I inquire what is the purpose of the bill, and what is the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is the so-called "Guffey coal bill."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the so-called "Guffey coal bill."

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, it is the House substitute for the Guffey coal bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it Senate bill 2481?

Mr. NEELY. No; it is the House substitute for the Senate bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean, is it the bill reported by the Senator from West Virginia, or is it an identical bill?

Mr. NEELY. The bills are not identical. The differences between these measures will at the proper time be explained.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether or not the antitrust laws are repealed by the House bill?

Mr. NEELY. The bill contains certain exemptions from the operation of the antitrust laws.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand the answer to be "yes." Is that correct?

Mr. NEELY. The bill does not propose to repeal the antitrust laws.

Mr. TYDINGS. I find this provision in the bill:

> The provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States shall not apply to any producer of bituminous coal who has accepted and obligated himself to comply, and who complies with the provisions of this section.

In other words, as to all those who comply with the code, the antitrust laws are suspended; as to all those who do not comply with the code, the antitrust laws are still in effect. If that does not mean that the antitrust laws are to apply to only one group of our citizens, and are not to apply to others, I am badly mistaken.

I have just been informed that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] has the floor. I did not understand that. I therefore reserve my interrogatory until later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has been recognized.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to proceed to the consideration of House bill 9100.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. KING. The mere fact that a motion is made to proceed to the consideration of a bill does not deny opportunity for addressing the Senate upon a subject, pertinent or otherwise, and the Senator from Washington addressed the Chair and had recognition, and he desires now to speak upon the bill, I assume.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is debatable, but the Chair has recognized the Senator from West Virginia. It was not the understanding of the Chair that the Senator from Washington had been recognized.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia states that he does not desire to occupy the floor. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Pennsylvania whether or not the antitrust laws are suspended by the bill which has come over from the House?

Mr. GUFFEY. I hand the Senator a copy of the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask the Senator—it is his bill—whether or not the antitrust laws would be suspended if the bill were enacted into law?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho for a question.

Mr. BORAH. I can advise the Senator that the House bill contains the same provision found in the bill which was reported by the Senator from West Virginia, and it reads——

Mr. TYDINGS. On what page?

Mr. BORAH. Page 8, section 4:

> While this act is in effect and for 60 days thereafter, the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States shall not apply to any producer of bituminous coal who has accepted and obligated himself to comply, and who complies with the provisions of this section, or to any marketing agency or board created under and operating in compliance with this section.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, Mr. President, my observation is that if the bill shall be passed as it came from the House it will mean that those who comply with the codes which are set up by a regulatory board, by virtue of that board's clearance, will be exempted from the antitrust laws, but all other producers of coal not cleared by the regulatory board will be under the antitrust laws. In other words, half of those engaged in the coal business will be living under the antitrust laws, while the other half, which will have been approved by the bituminous coal board, will be living without the antitrust laws. That is what the bill provides. That may be good law; but if it be constitutional—and I am not going to make any legal argument—then I think that hereafter all constitutional debates had better be omitted, because, in my humble judgment, the bill will not hold water 3 minutes after it gets to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is class legislation and group exemption, not made by law but made by a group of appointive officials called the Bituminous Coal Board, who make the code. In other words, we are now proposing to exempt people from the operation of the antitrust laws, not by act of Congress or even by Presidential proclamation but by a board appointed by the President, who can say, "The antitrust laws do not apply to you because we have given you clearance, but they do apply to everyone else who has not obtained clearance."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, not only that but under this provision the antitrust laws would apply to all citizens of the United States except a group selected by this board, which would be exempt.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. I venture to say that there may not be found in the history of civilization in any nation where the rule of law obtained in any respect whatever, any such provision as this enacted into law.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure that observation is correct. Mr. President, I am in a very embarrassing situation. The coal industry in my State is a large industry, and I have been asked by practically all the miners and by most of the operators to vote for the bill, but I do not intend to vote for it as it stands, and, if that means that I must suffer the consequences of that vote, I am content to suffer them rather than to support any such legal monstrosity as that provision. I am taking these few moments to point out just a few of the things in this bill so that those who vote to consider it may act with intelligence.

As I understand the bill, all coal is to be taxed 25 percent of its value—where? At the mine. Not in interstate commerce, but the moment that the coal comes out of the mine it is subjected to a tax of 25 percent.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The House bill proposes a tax of 15 percent and a rebate of 90 percent.

Mr. TYDINGS. What page is that on?

Mr. GUFFEY. Has the Senator a copy of the new bill?

Mr. TYDINGS. I have a copy of the new bill, but I marked the old bill.

Mr. NEELY. I am referring to the House bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. I have the House bill, but I have marked the Senate bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that provision is found on page 7.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say, whether it is 15 percent or 25 percent does not make any difference. As a matter of fact, it is 15 percent, and 90 percent of the tax paid is to be returned to all coal operators who obtain the approval of the bituminous board, but the full tax is to be paid by and not returned to producers who are not approved by the board. In other words, there is class taxation. We tax one coal operator who does not desire to come under the board and let another coal operator get 90 percent of his tax returned because he does come under the board. That is nothing more nor less than an attempt to coerce every producer of coal to put his business under this board. In my judgment, that proposition will not stand the test of the courts, first, because there is no power in the Federal Constitution to tax the coal at the mouth of the mine. It is not in interstate commerce. It is not regulating or controlling interstate or foreign commerce. It is just the same as if we tax a tree or a house.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes, of course, that the taxing power of the Federal Government does not rest upon the commerce clause of the Constitution. Congress may tax anything regardless of whether or not it goes into interstate commerce.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know whether I agree with that statement; but whether it be true or not, the preamble of the pending bill is so drawn that the basis upon which the whole structure rests is that coal not moving in interstate commerce affects coal which does move in interstate commerce, and for that reason, according to the preamble of the bill, there is a necessity for the bill. The provision to which I refer is as follows:

> It is further recognized and declared that all production of bituminous coal and distribution by the producers thereof bear upon and directly affect its interstate commerce and render regulation of all such production and distribution imperative for the protection of such commerce and the national public service of bituminous coal * * *

So that the reason for the bill is the interstate feature of coal, not the intrastate feature of coal.

Even if this measure should be advantageous for the miners or the operators, which for the sake of argument I will concede for the moment, it must, perforce, increase the cost of soft coal, not to industry particularly, although the cost will be increased to industry, but it will increase the cost to every individual consumer. Who burns soft coal? The poorest people in the United States are the users of soft coal for heating purposes; those who cannot afford hard coal; and the first thing we know in these United States we are going to have a buyers' strike of some proportions. If, as is claimed, 20,000,000 or 22,000,000 people are out of work and on relief, then the way to get them off relief is not to increase the cost of the things they must have in order to live. We are taking hold of our bootstraps and pulling on them so hard that we will pull the soles off our feet, and our heads will be lower than our feet, if we do not stop this futile effort.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator think that the price of bituminous coal has been unreasonably high since the enactment of the national-recovery legislation?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe it is the function of the Congress to fix prices. The purpose of this bill is to fix the price of coal, and I see no more reason to fix the price of coal than to fix the price of shoes, or overalls, or clothing, or plows, or milk, or wheat, or corn, or any other commodity.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator has not answered my question. Before he answers it, may I remind him of the fact that labor represents approximately 65 percent of the cost of producing bituminous coal. The hearings on the Guffey coal bill disclosed the undisputed fact that the average income of a miner in the United States before the N. R. A. was declared to be unconstitutional was only $56.20 a month.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not favor such low pay.

Mr. NEELY. The cost of coal is inseparably connected with the wages of the 350,000 coal miners of the United States, and unless there is some substantial increase in the price of coal the miners cannot be paid a living wage.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why not have a minimum-wage scale then and be done with it? Why come in with this bill which controls or attempts to control and tax a commodity from, so to speak, the cradle to the grave? If the miners are entitled to more money—and I think they are—then the way to give it to them is to pass a law fixing minimum wages, if that is the proposition. Certainly all the roundabout procedure which is adopted by this bill does not do that, in my humble judgment, and it certainly makes distinctions and discriminations which have no part in national legislation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator from Maryland believe that it will be possible at this or the next session of Congress to enact such law as he has suggested relative to minimum wages?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is attempted to do it here because the bill gives to the Commission the power to fix minimum wages, and if we are doing that for the miners, let us give the commission the power to adopt the minimum wage and sink the rest of the bill. If the miners ought to have relief, let us go at it honestly and directly and forthrightly. There is no need to have all of this ramified code work and all the other parts of the bill if the purpose of the bill is to give the miners more wages.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator from Maryland mean to say that he thinks this bill is dishonest?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not mean to say it is morally dishonest, but I mean to say it is intellectually dishonest. The bill is an indirect attempt to weave a law in and around and about the Constitution which could not be sustained in the courts if the naked statement of the proposition were made by its authors. Every Senator knows that an effort has been made to do by indirection something which the Constitution forbids. It is nothing more than the statement of the naked truth so to assert. In my humble judgment, we will have passed this bill for no good purpose, because I have no doubt whatever that the Court will knock it higher than the sky once the bill comes under judicial scrutiny.

The Court, for example, in the Schecter case, in connection with the N. R. A., among other things denied to Congress the right to fix the price of chickens in New York State, but under this bill, if enacted, we may fix the price of coal in New York or any other State, and that will be constitutional.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator recall that, when the Webb-Kenyon Act—I think it was that act—was under consideration, Chief Justice Taft, not then a member of the Supreme Court——

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I am familiar with that story. Mr. Taft said it was unconstitutional.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the then Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Knox, rendered an official opinion that it was unconstitutional.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the Supreme Court subsequently held it to be constitutional.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That has nothing to do with the bill before us at all. The Supreme Court of the United States said Congress had no power to go into purely intrastate commerce and tax an article under the guise of regulating commerce. Yet now, in the case of coal, it is attempted to tax it at the mouth of the mines. What is the difference between chickens and coal if we are going to talk frankly about this measure?

I have tried a few lawsuits in my time, and I know it is possible to make a pretty good argument out of a very little fact; one can weave around it and sometimes he can influence the jury to decide a case contrary to the evidence; but we are not here as a jury to win a lawsuit; we are here as legislators to put all the facts on the table and enact a law accordingly. We are not here to see if we cannot so find, by some sort of defense in the game of polemics, that our position may be justified. We are here to pass a bill which, beyond any reasonable peradventure of a doubt, will stand the test of the courts, so that we will not abuse the exercise of power which each and every one of us is sworn not to abuse.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I rose to observe that the Senator from Maryland, with his usual ingenuity, is demonstrating with the certainty of the solution of a problem in mathematics that one can make a very good argument on practically no foundation of fact to support it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Now that the Senator has spoken, he has proved by his own eloquence and example what he attempted to apply to me.

Mr. LONG. Who is right, Mr. President?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, consider, for instance, this provision:

> (a) All code members shall, in their respective districts, report all spot orders to the district board and shall file with it copies of all contracts for the sale of coal, copies of all invoices, copies of all credit memoranda, and such other information concerning the preparation, cost, sale, and distribution of coal as the commission may authorize or require.

The units of the industry are to be put to the expense of installing a certain system of bookkeeping, and any information the whims of the proposed commission may require.

I do not want to be misunderstood. I know that the coal industry has suffered, perhaps, as much as any other industry in America, and I am not finding fault with the authors of this bill in their attempt to do something for the victims who are engaged in wringing a livelihood from the coal industry. My objections to this measure—and I want the Senate to know a little of them before it votes to consider the bill—are, first of all, that I do not think, and I believe no reasonable man will think if he reads the bill, that it is a constitutional measure which will stand the test of the courts, but rather one that will go the way of the N. R. A.

The second point is that it proposes to repeal the antitrust laws. I know many Members of this body do not want the antitrust laws repealed.

Having given this brief picture, as I see it, I would much rather see this bill go back to the committee and something sound and something that would stand the test of the courts come back in its place, so that whatever could be legally and properly done to assist the miners and others engaged in the coal business might be done. In my humble judgment, the bill at best is nothing more than a futile gesture filled, for numerous depressed and unfortunate men, with a hope which will be blown away like autumn flowers at the first wintry blast by the Supreme Court.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Purely as a matter of information, does the Senator know to what extent the antitrust laws have been applied to the production of coal in the United States since the enactment of those laws? In other words, assuming that this bill, if enacted, suspends the antitrust laws insofar as they may apply to coal companies producing coal that are complying with the code set out in detail in the bill, what, as a matter of practical fact, does the bill do to interfere with the actual enforcement or observance of the antitrust laws? I do not recall any case in which a coal company has been involved in a prosecution or a suit for violation of the antitrust laws. I may not be accurate about that, but I think it is true.

So, while in a measure, theoretically, we may be suspending the antitrust laws respecting one industry, as a matter of parctical fact this measure is, I believe, limited to 4 years, and during the entire existence of those laws the coal industry, as such, has been involved in a very small degree in the matter of the antitrust-law enforcement.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is to the credit of the coal industry, and let us hope that they never will transgress the antitrust laws; but that is not a sound reason for the repeal of those laws; that is all the more reason why the antitrust laws should remain on the books, because apparently the coal trade has abided by them and has carried out the purposes for which they were created. I think it is a very fine tribute to the coal industry, and we should not repeal these laws or encourage the coal industry to violate them.

Finally, as I take my seat may I say that, from a personal standpoint, I have a great deal of additional reluctance in voting against this measure as it now stands because one of its authors in the House of Representatives is from my State. He is a very warm personal and political friend of mine; he spent the early days of his life in a coal mine, and I know that that big heart of his has expressed itself in the philosophy of this bill, and he has tried to do something to better the conditions of the miners of the country. But, notwithstanding that, as I read the bill, which I have done for the first time yesterday and today, I cannot, much as I should like to do so on personal grounds, bring myself to vote for a measure which I do not believe to be sound or within the Constitution.

ANNIVERSARY OF EXPEDITION OF HERNANDO DE SOTO

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando De Soto, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. NORBECK conferees on the part of the Senate.

SPECIAL COUNSEL FOR GOVERNMENT IN ASTOR TAX CASE

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I assure the Senators in charge of the coal bill that I have no disposition to interfere with its consideration, and if what I am going to propose shall consume more than 5 minutes, I shall withdraw the request I am about to make.

At the request of the Department of Justice, I introduced a bill authorizing that the Department employ an attorney in a case of great importance. I will ask the clerk to read a letter from the Attorney General of the United States addressed to me. I do so because, following the reading of the letter, I am going to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3433, which is no. 1461, on page 18 of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

AUGUST 17, 1935.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am submitting herewith a draft of a bill relative to the employment of special counsel in the cases involving the estate tax on the estate of William Waldorf Astor.

A tax has been heretofore imposed on certain transfers made by William Waldorf Astor in his lifetime on the ground that they were made in contemplation of death. Suits were brought by the estate in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York against the collector of internal revenue to secure a refund of the tax on the alleged ground that they were improperly assessed. The amount involved is very large and aggregates, with accrued interest, approximately $20,000,000. The district court determined the issues against the Government, and an appeal was taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. The Honorable William Stanley, who was then the Assistant to the Attorney General, represented the Government on the appeal. The circuit court of appeals reversed the decree and rendered a decision in favor of the Government.

Further proceedings in the Supreme Court are now in contemplation, as well as a possible retrial of the issues in the district court. I feel that it is essential for the proper protection of the interest of the Government, in view of the large amount of money involved, as well as of the intricacy and importance of the questions of law in controversy, that there should be no change in the personnel of Government counsel, but that Mr. Stanley should continue to represent the interests of the United States. Mr. Stanley has, however, resigned from the Department of Justice and is now in private practice. It is my desire to retain him as special counsel in these cases; but in order to enable him to accept the appointment, an act of Congress is indispensable relieving him from the statutory prohibitions precluding Government officers or employees from handling cases against the Government.

The enclosed bill is intended to accomplish this purpose. Similar statutes have been heretofore enacted in respect of the employment of special counsel in other important Government litigation (act of Dec. 24, 1931, 47 Stat. 4; act of Apr. 14, 1934, 48 Stat. 590).

I shall be very glad if you will be good enough to introduce and urge the enactment of the bill, and strongly hope that it may pass before the close of the present session of the Congress.

With kind regards, sincerely yours,

HOMER CUMMINGS, Attorney General.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which considered it, and was unanimous in reporting it favorably. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3433?

Mr. ASHURST. It might be well to have the bill read. It carries out exactly the desire expressed in the letter of the Attorney General.

Mr. MCNARY. Is this a House bill?

Mr. ASHURST. No; it is a Senate bill, and that is the reason why I am presuming to ask the Senate to consider it now so it may go to the House. Unless I can secure action today I fear it will not pass the House.

Mr. MCNARY. May we have the bill reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3433) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have been asked to introduce a similar bill with respect to an attorney in the city of Washington, whom the Department desires to employ in certain insurance matters in connection with the Department of Justice. Because of the rush of other business and my inability to confer with the Assistant Attorney General, who is in charge of these matters, I have not actually introduced the bill. Would the Senator be willing to accept an amendment to his bill to include the other gentleman whose employment is contemplated? Failing in that, will the Senator give me his assurance that if I introduce a separate bill he will have his Committee on the Judiciary act upon it immediately?

Mr. ASHURST. I assure the Senator that anything I can do to promote his desire in the matter will be done. His word would be sufficient for me in this case, but if the Senator will introduce a separate bill I shall try to bring a report from the Judiciary Committee tomorrow. I rather think under the circumstances it would be better to put this bill through alone, but I give the Senator my assurance that if he will introduce a bill I shall try to secure action on it tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3433) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States", approved March 4, 1909, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or in section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99), or in any other act of Congress forbidding officers or employees or former officers or employees of the United States from acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for another before any court, department, or branch of the Government or from receiving or agreeing to receive compensation therefor, shall be deemed to apply to attorneys or counselors to be specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the conduct of the cases entitled The Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (a corporation), as trustee under a deed of trust made by William Waldorf Astor, etc., against Frank C. Bowers, etc. (L 35/74 and L 35/75) pending in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York and in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, including all proceedings to review any judgment or decree that may be rendered therein, and any other case or proceeding involving the matters or any of them involved in the said cases.

ACCEPTANCE OF DECORATIONS FROM FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 169. If it takes more than 2 minutes, I shall withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. GLASS. I can state in a word what the joint resolution proposes. It authorizes Surgeon General Cumming and other medical officers of the Public Health Service to accept certain decorations conferred upon them by South American countries because of their great assistance in sanitation and health matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 169) granting permission to Hugh S. Cumming, Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service; John D. Long, medical director, United States Public Health Service; Bolivar J. Lloyd, medical director, United States Public Health Service; and Clifford R. Eskey, surgeon, United States Public Health Service, to accept and wear certain decorations bestowed upon them by the Governments of Ecuador, Chile, Peru, and Cuba was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That Hugh S. Cumming, Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, be authorized to accept and wear the decoration of the order Al Merito, bestowed by the Government of Ecuador; the order of Carlos Finlay, bestowed by the Government of Cuba; and of the order El Sol de Peru; that John D. Long, medical director, United States Public Health Service, be authorized to accept and wear the decorations of the order Al Merito, bestowed by the Government of Chile; the order Al Merito, bestowed by the Government of Ecuador; the order of Carlos Finlay, bestowed by the Government of Cuba; and the order El Sol de Peru; that Bolivar J. Lloyd, medical director, United States Public Health Service, be authorized to accept and wear the decoration of the order Al Merito, bestowed by the Government of Ecuador; that Clifford R. Eskey, surgeon, United States Public Health Service, be authorized to accept and wear the decoration of the order Al Merito, bestowed by the Government of Ecuador, the foregoing decorations having been conferred upon these officers by the Republics mentioned in recognition of assistance rendered by them, as representatives of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau, in matters relating to sanitation and health; and the Department of State is hereby authorized and permitted to deliver the above-mentioned decorations to the said Hugh S. Cumming, John D. Long, Bolivar J. Lloyd, and Clifford R. Eskey, respectively.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of two bills, Senate bill 3389 and Senate bill 3414. These were discussed momentarily a few days ago in connection with other judgeship bills.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there is so much confusion in the Chamber that the Senator is not making himself heard on this side of the aisle. Will he kindly repeat his request?

Mr. COPELAND. I am asking unanimous consent to consider two bills providing additional judges for the State of New York. There was discussion the other day of these bills in connection with other similar bills, and I was begged not to press them at that time. Since then the Judiciary Committee has heard the Attorney General, who has requested two judges in the southern district of New York and one in the eastern district of New York. Abundant reasons are given in the reports of the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Are these the bills to appoint two or three judges in certain judicial districts in the State of New York?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; two judges in the southern district of New York and one in the eastern district of New York.

Mr. McNARY. I thought that a few days ago on the call of the calendar all these judicial bills were considered at the same time.

Mr. COPELAND. No. It so happens that the bills to which I refer were not on the calendar. They had been on the calendar, but because of a controversy early in the session were returned to the committee. The Judiciary Committee had a message from the Attorney General on Monday and the chairman of the committee will testify that the committee gave unanimous approval to the bills.

Mr. McNARY. Has the bill been considered by the House?

Mr. COPELAND. No; it has not been considered by the House. That is the reason why I am asking action today. It has been discussed with those in authority in the House, and we are hopeful that if the bills are passed here they may be acted upon by the House.

Mr. McNARY. Did the Senate Judiciary Committee report the bills unanimously?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

There being no objection, the bill, S. 3389, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. COPELAND. I ask now that the second bill may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3414) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional district judge in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York.

ROCKLAND-WESTCHESTER HUDSON RIVER BRIDGE, NEW YORK

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to ask one more favor of the Senate, and then I shall be through for the day. There is on the calendar a bridge bill which I am very desirous of having passed. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3030) granting the consent of Congress to the Rockland-Westchester Hudson River Crossing Authority to construct a bridge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I may say that this is a New York State bridge. It is not an interstate bridge. It does not involve the State of New Jersey. It is a bridge entirely within the boundaries of the State of New York. The bridge authorities are in the city of Washington today.

I beg my friend from New Jersey to withdraw his objection, because this does not involve his State and does not touch his State. If it were a matter affecting an interstate bridge, it would be different. This is a bridge which is wholly within the confines of the State of New York, and I beg my friend to withdraw his objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. I regret very much that it is impossible for me to do so. I am compelled regretfully to ask that this bill of my good friend, the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], go over. This proposed new bridge, suggested to be built half way between the Bear Mountain Bridge and the new George Washington Bridge, certainly does affect the State of New Jersey, for by the same token it will affect adversely the George Washington Bridge, which is, as all know, a New Jersey-New York bridge.

I could, if the Senate would give me time, explain fully my position, which I feel in all earnestness and sincerity has great merit.

As I have said, though I do so with regret because of my friendship for the author of this measure, I must ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 3030, Calendar No. 1423, be considered immediately. I have spoken to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], and he has withdrawn his objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3030) granting the consent of Congress to the Rockland-Westchester Hudson River Crossing Authority, State of New York, to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge and causeway across the Hudson River between a point in the vicinity of the village of Nyack, Rockland County, and the village of Tarrytown, Westchester County, N. Y., which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Rockland-Westchester Hudson River Crossing Authority, State of New York, to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge, causeway, and approaches thereto across the Hudson River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in the vicinity of the village of Nyack, Rockland County, and the village of Tarrytown, Westchester County, N. Y., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge and causeway, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge, causeway, and its approaches under economical manangement, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge, causeway, and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge and causeway shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge, causeway, and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge, causeway, and its approaches; the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same; and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

ADDITIONAL FEDERAL JUDGES FOR MISSOURI

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2075.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. Is the motion of the Senator from Missouri debatable?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if debate of any sort ensues, I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. LONG. What is the bill?

Mr. CLARK. It is a bill to create an additional judgeship in the State of Missouri.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Has not the Department of Justice declined to give its support to the bill?

Mr. CLARK. I have never understood that the Department of Justice did so decline. I have a letter from the presiding judge in that circuit in which he says that not only this judge is very urgently needed but an additional judge for another district.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Missouri in view of the fact that consent has been given to the consideration of similar bills, but I give notice now that I shall demand the regular order when his bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is withdrawn. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. BONE. I have yielded so much now that if I continue to yield I might as well yield the floor entirely.

Mr. NEELY. If there is to be no additional debate in opposition to my motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill mentioned in my motion, will the Senator yield until a vote on that motion may be had?

Mr. BONE. Yes; if there is to be no debate, and I may have the floor, I am willing to yield.

Mr. KING. There will be some further debate.

Mr. BONE. In that event, I will not yield for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What occurred as to the request made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] with respect to the consideration of a bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. The request was withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request was withdrawn. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

COMMERCE IN MUNITIONS, ETC., IN TIME OF WAR

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress is drawing to a close, and it now appears that a measure or measures which, in my judgment, are the most important that could be considered by this body are to remain in committee at a time when the whole civilized world threatens to break into flames of war. I am referring to the so-called "neutrality joint resolutions."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not know whether or not the Senator is advised of the fact, but the Committee on Foreign Relations this morning ordered three provisions reported in a single measure.

The first provision relates to the shipment of arms. The second provision relates to the travel of American citizens on belligerent vessels and prohibits it. The third provision relates to belligerent submarines entering ports of the United States or establishing bases there.

These three provisions were incorporated in one joint resolution and ordered reported by the Foreign Relations Committee this morning, a subcommittee having been actively engaged for some time in the consideration of the matter. I thought perhaps the Senator would like to be advised of that fact.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I am very happy to have this information from the floor leader on this side, but I should like to have assurance from our able floor leader and from my brethren in the Senate that before this body adjourns to go home and before we make a report of our stewardship to the mothers of the country, whose boys may possibly be dying before long, there is going to be action on the joint resolution which the Senator from Arkansas says will be reported out, because this matter has been pending for months.

As a member of the Munitions Committee of the Senate I have been patiently waiting to see some action on this subject before the session ends. I do not know how my brethren feel, but I cannot go back to the State of Washington and look into the faces of the mothers of that State whose boys may be called to the colors before long, whose sons may be shouldering muskets and becoming participants in another world war, without having fully and completely discharged my duty; and I am trying to discharge it now as I stand here on my feet urging the immediate consideration of the joint resolution which the Senator from Arkansas says is to be reported out. I think it will be a high crime against humanity, against the mothers and the fathers of the country, if the present Congress does not act speedily and quickly on this joint resolution before the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

I cannot imagine Congress leaving Washington without meeting this issue head-on. Let me read a few of the headlines that appeared in the newspapers last night, indicating all too clearly the purpose of certain powerful forces in the world again to dip their hands into the blood of innocent persons and to plunge the world into another vortex of chaos similar to and even worse than the Great War of 1914–18.

Here are one or two typical headlines. These are from the Washington Evening Star of yesterday:

Europe's peace feared.
League doom and strife feared.
Britain and France unite to make final stand.
Stage seen set for struggle as in 1914.

And then follow statements through the press associations of such gloomy import as to be positively horrifying and staggering.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. I do.

Mr. LONG. I merely wish to assure the Senator from Washington that not only will the people of the State of Washington appreciate the effort he is making but I know the people of my State, and I hope of others, will appreciate this effort to see something done about these joint resolutions.

Mr. BONE. In response to the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana, I desire to say that if Congress does not go home at all, if we stay here until the 1st day of January to convene again in the second session of the present Congress, I for one am perfectly willing to do it; and I should cast my vote right now to compel the Senate and the House to remain in Washington until this neutrality issue shall have been settled as fully and completely as we can settle it.

Some peculiar intimations have been made in connection with this whole subject that have seemed very startling to me, as I attempted to render service on the Munitions Committee. Frankly, I have not been able to understand why there has been so much silence here, so much pussyfooting on an issue which involves more serious consequences than anything else that has been handled in the entire first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. Of what avail is it to us to settle the utility issue, as close as that is to my heart, to settle monetary policies, to settle strike issues, or anything else, when the peace of the whole world is involved in what we may do here and our civilization may be at stake?

I desire to say that no apology, no alibi that any Member of this body may present to the people of the country, will ever wash the stain from his hands and his conscience if we go out of this place without having discharged our last, full, and ultimate duty and without giving our last full measure of devotion to the proposition that we ought at all costs and at all hazards to keep this country out of war.

I have had assurances—how reliable they are, or how reliable is the source from which they come, I know not—but there have been intimations that this country of ours has "commitments"—"commitments", forsooth!—which may, in the event of war, again bring the tread of marching feet in our streets, and once more compel us to listen to the martial voice of the bugles. I wonder who, in God's name, in this country, under the American flag and under our form of government, has a right to make commitments which may take the life of my boy or the boys of other millions of fathers in this country? Who, in the city of Washington, has the unholy power under our Constitution to put the boys of America in uniforms, and, if need be, and against their will, send them across the seas to die in some foreign land? I wonder how we could ever answer to American mothers for such a crime. In 1917 we sent thousands of them to their deaths on foreign soil. What sort of an answer will there be in the hearts of American mothers to the echoes of the bugles when they again sound the horrible call to arms?

We have pending here three measures to which I desire to refer. I do not wish to have my country again plunged into war, and I am willing to do anything to prevent that cataclysmic horror again overcoming this country as it did in 1917. These measures may prevent such a hideous thing.

Senate Joint Resolution 99 was introduced, as I recall, in April of this year. At the same time there was introduced Senate Joint Resolution 100; and Senate Joint Resolution 120 was introduced shortly afterward by my colleagues on the Munitions Committee of this body.

These joint resolutions have lain in committee ever since, although this ghastly fire of internation strife and hatred was sweeping closer and closer to our borders all the time; and here at the last moment, when we are assured in the columns of the press that this body is going to go home in a day or two, we are told that a joint resolution is coming out embodying certain phases of these three joint resolutions introduced by the members of the committee named to investigate the munitions business. I say, however, that it will not do for us to leave here without prompt action on this matter, and to that end I rise to speak to this body.

I am not impugning the views of anybody else. The love of humanity and a due regard for my colleagues impels me to voice my own views. I am concerned chiefly, however, in trying to voice the hopes of mothers whose boys may have to die in some war that we might prevent.

Let us go back for a moment to the Great War of 1914–18 and examine some of the factors which led us into that war—factors of business, economic impulses, and economic rivalries which are present right now; inflammable material which may set off the new bonfire which threatens to engulf the world.

A short time ago two of the able and honorable members of the Munitions Committee, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], addressed a letter to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, calling attention to the very grave nature of the crisis which was confronting us. This letter was dated August 18, 1935, and I am going to read the letter to my colleagues:

AUGUST 18, 1935.

MY DEAR SENATOR PITTMAN: The subcommittee of which you are chairman has been studying for months the problem of keeping this Nation out of another war. The State Department has studied the subject for a year and a half. The United States Senate Munitions Committee has been considering the problem for over a year. We understand that you are ready to recommend such legislation to Congress this week.

In view of the overwhelming importance to the United States of blocking at this session of Congress the roads which might lead us into war for purely economic reasons, we wish to transmit forthwith for your consideration certain documents recently released to the Munitions Committee by the Department of State.

If Congress imposes no restrictions on munitions sales and shipments before a war breaks out in Europe, it will be impossible for Congress to form a policy later without incurring representations that such a new policy involves the taking of sides against one particular belligerent.

President Wilson saw this very clearly. Only a brief year after the opening of the European war he wrote to Secretary Lansing (Aug. 5, 1915) concerning a change in our policy in regard to the shipment of arms.

I am quoting now the letter which was written by Mr. Wilson:

* * * Of course, we are arguing only to the special case, and are absolutely unanswerable in our position that these things cannot be done while a war is in progress as against the parties to it. * * *

In other words, that is, to change the policy with respect to shipment of munitions.

This position was later expressly declared in the well-known note to Germany in 1915, in the course of which the United States stated:

This Government holds—and is constrained to hold in view of the present indisputable doctrines of accepted international law—that any change in its own laws of neutrality during the progress of a war which would affect unequally the relations of the United States with the nations at war would be an unjustifiable departure from the principle of strict neutrality by which it has consistently sought to direct its actions. The placing of an embargo on the trade in arms at the present time would constitute such a change and be a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States.

I digress at this point to call attention to the fact that this statement referred to a change in policy after this Government had committed itself to the unrestrained policy of shipping munitions abroad to the belligerents.

I now continue with the committee letter to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]:

As your committee is aware, every embargo after a war is declared affects belligerents unequally. With these official statements before us, it is an inescapable conclusion that the policy of the United States must be fixed before the declaration of a European war or not be fixed at all. In that event we face the definite danger of drifting into another European war as we did before.

The letter of Secretary of State Lansing to President Wilson of September 6, 1915, will indicate to you the importance of immediate action on the subject of foreign loans and credits.

As you are aware, the Munitions Committee has been studying the financing of munitions sales. In 1915 four of the country's major banks had raised the question of floating foreign loans in the United States to finance the purchase of munitions. The American policy had been expressed repeatedly that the floating of foreign loans to belligerents was unneutral. In 1915 that policy was quietly reversed without discussion in Congress.

I digress again to ask my colleagues what they think of a political system that will permit some bureaucrat to retain within his power, or arrogate unto himself the power, to take the boy of any citizen and put a uniform on his back and a gun in his hand and send that boy to bloody shambles across the seas without submitting the questions of policy which might lead to that hellish thing to this body for adjudication, as befits a civilization such as ours.

Again I go back to the letter, and read:

The Lansing letter, attached hereto, indicates fairly clearly why that policy of neutrality was reversed.

Secretary Lansing, who was probably one of the Nation's ablest officials, describes in this letter the mushroom growth of war purchases by belligerents with the consequence that the European governments would go bankrupt if they tried to pay for those purchases in gold. Any demand to make them pay in gold would result in an industrial depression in this country. The alternative to this foreign-made depression was for us to loan money to the belligerents. This had previously been declared to be "inconsistent with the true spirit of neutrality" by the Department of State. In view of our financial entanglement with Europe, this policy of neutrality was now "a source of embarrassment." Neutrality could no longer stand in the way of economic interests. President Wilson acquiesced in this analysis.

One month after this letter the first great Anglo-French loan of $500,000,000 was floated by a syndicate headed by J. P. Morgan & Co. Other loans followed. André Tardieu, former Premier of France, commented that after these foreign loans had been floated, "from that time on, whether desired or not, the victory of the Allies became essential to the United States."

Since the matter of an embargo on foreign loans and credits to belligerents is before you now, we specifically invite your attention to the danger of allowing a repetition of the same historic development which led to entangling foreign economic alliances, and for which the United States still has to pay billions in uncollected war debts.

Mr. President, I shall now read to the Senate a letter of Secretary of State Lansing, dated April 6, 1915, addressed to President Wilson, and this, in my judgment, will take its place among the great historic documents of this country. This is a letter which is very, very revealing. It shows the imminent danger which we confront now by not formulating a cold, hard policy concerning neutrality, declaring the policy of Congress, and laying down inexorable, rigid rules, which will guide anyone in the Department of State or in any other department of this Government, so that those men by some improvident act shall not take the boys of this country out and have them shot to death in a war which the people of this country do not want.

I think I can say here without fear of contradiction from any Member of the Senate that the people of this country do not want war, and I think we are recreant in our duty to the people of America if we leave the city of Washington, D. C., without doing everything in our power to make war impossible. That duty is plain and inescapable.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Entirely agreeing with the Senator's general analysis of the situation, I should like to add this conclusion, to which I think he might subscribe with equal emphasis.

It seems to me perfectly clear, from any critical analysis of our war record from 1914 to 1918, that the absence of a specific neutrality policy which was effective in its proscriptions, absolutely robbed us of any chance to direct our own subsequent destiny. In reality, we were sucked into that war irresistably in spite of anything we could do to prevent the ultimate process. It was the failure to have an affirmative neutrality policy which effectively quarantined us against the results of our own previous pseudo-neutrality, which ultimately created a situation in which we were the victims of our own failure to have the precise kind of a rule which it is now proposed the United States shall announce and announce in time.

Those who want the United States to be the captain of its own soul must want a neutrality rule written ahead of the necessity to apply it. Otherwise, we cannot be the captain of our own soul. We cannot control the events which will grip us to our doom. The time to act is now.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the able Senator from Michigan has so accurately and so succinctly stated this proposition that it would be a futile thing for me to attempt to improve or restate it. I heartily agree with his conclusions and the formula he lays down. Of course, we got into that war because we did not then have a definite policy respecting neutrality. The crime, the high crime, we may commit against the American people now—the crime this Congress, the Seventy-fourth Congress, the first session, may commit against the people of this country—is in not now laying down a clean-cut policy such as that prescribed and referred to by the able Senator from Michigan.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. NYE. It seems to me the Senator from Washington might go a step farther and make the point that since that experience of 1916–17 we have not as a Government, or as a legislative body, taken a single step to remedy the evil which existed then and which permitted our being drawn and sucked into that conflict, as was the case at that time.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I do not wish to fill the RECORD with a lot of material from the newspapers, but I should like to have incorporated in my remarks at this point an editorial from the Washington Daily News of today which is headed "Declare Neutrality Now", a very forceful and enlightening editorial. It calls upon the Congress of the United States not to go home, but now to lay down definitely and specifically a neutrality policy which shall guide us if, before we return, this country unhappily may be placed in a position where its peace will be endangered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECLARE NEUTRALITY NOW!

Everyone agrees there is danger of Italian-Ethiopian war and of a world war growing out of it. Everyone agrees that we should stay out. Everyone agrees that our neutrality and munitions policies will determine largely whether we stay out or get dragged in, if there is a general war.

But almost everyone has a different idea about an effective policy. That is why there has been all of the talk about this subject and no action.

With Congress winding up to go home only a few days are left in which to pass the much-needed neutrality and munitions law. The old alibi, that we must investigate before we act, no longer holds. Congressional committees have been investigating for many months. While they may not have reached the point of complete and final wisdom, they know enough about the subject to provide minimum and temporary safeguards to meet the present acute danger.

Unfortunately, the administration cannot make up its mind that quick and incomplete legislation is better than none in this emergency. It is tangled in State Department red tape and the traditional desire of Presidents to have a free hand in foreign affairs. But just how embarrassing and expensive this executive freedom may be is proved by the Lansing-to-Wilson letter, which Senators CLARK and NYE have uncovered as a prod to congressional action now. That letter of 1915 led to reversal of the Wilsonian policy of discouraging loans to belligerents, and the new policy of making America the allied banker in turn led America into the World War, partly to protect war investments.

The point is that neutrality to be neutrality must be declared as a basic policy in advance of hostilities, otherwise it has inevitable partisan results and is resented by one of the belligerents as such. For instance, a general arms embargo would not weaken Italy but would seriously injure unprepared Ethiopia. On the other hand, an arms and credit embargo against Italy alone would be in effect a participation in the war on Ethiopia's side.

The only reason for leaving the embargo and neutrality power discretionary with the President is to permit discrimination against an aggressor. That was intelligent some years ago before the international peace machinery had been almost completely destroyed by Japan and Germany. But it is not practicable now—not unless we are ready to back up our economic weapons with American troops.

Strict neutrality is one thing. Joint international action against an aggressor is the opposite thing. For better or for worse, the American people now favor strict neutrality in foreign wars.

Neutrality, as history shows, is hard to maintain. Once America gets a stake in a foreign war, through trade or credits, we are apt to be drawn in as we were in 1917. There is no certain escape from this danger. But we at least can take obvious precautions.

While postponing the controversial question of nationalization of the munitions industry, Congress, this week, should pass a neutrality law banning American travel on belligerent ships and prohibiting munitions sales and all loans or credits to belligerents.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I am sorry that every citizen of this Republic has not been privileged to read Emil Ludwig's famous book, July Fourteen, referring to the month of July 1914. He tells the somber and sordid story of how the peoples of Europe were dragged into that great holocaust through the stupidity and ineptitude of old men in the chancelleries of Europe, and there are still a lot of doddering old men over there in positions of power, along with a sorry lot of confirmed megalmaniacs, egomaniacs, and psychopaths, who are literally preparing to dip their hands in blood and drag the whole world into the frightful mess they are creating for themselves.

Mr. President, I shall now read this letter from Secretary of State Lansing, addressed to President Wilson, on September 6, 1915, which proves the correctness of the views expressed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and which serves to further illumine the matter I have been discussing.

However, previous to reading this letter I wish to refresh the memories of Senators by referring to a telegram which Ambassador Walter Hines Page sent from London before we got into the war. The famous Page wire indicated a very grave concern for the welfare and the possible lack of payments of the debts due to New York bankers representing war loans for the purchase of munitions, and that debt, Mr. President, was one of the outstanding factors in putting this Nation into war. Let us read this refreshingly frank and candid letter of Secretary Lansing to President Wilson:

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Doubtless Secretary MCADOO has discussed with you the necessity of floating Government loans for the belligerent nations, which are purchasing such great quantities of goods in this country, in order to avoid a serious financial situation which will not only affect them but this country as well.

Let us, as we begin to read this letter, look at the effect of this economic relationship which we were establishing with the countries of Europe, which inevitably led us into war, and piled up our monstrous war debt. Everything we do today is colored and threatened by the existence of the hang-over of this gigantic war debt, which, if things continue as they are now, may never be repaid. I continue reading:

Briefly the situation, as I understand it, is this: Since December 1, 1914, to June 30, 1915, our exports have exceeded our imports by nearly a billion dollars, and it is estimated that the excess will be from July 1 to December 31, 1915, a billion and three-quarters. Thus for the year 1915 the excess will be approximately two and a half billions of dollars.

It is estimated that the European banks have about three and a half billions of dollars in gold in their vaults. To withdraw any considerable amount would disastrously affect the credit of the European nations, and the consequence would be a general state of bankruptcy.

If the European countries cannot find means to pay for the excess of goods sold to them over those purchased from them, they will have to stop buying and our present export trade will shrink proportionately. The result would be restriction of outputs, industrial depression, idle capital and idle labor, numerous failures, financial demoralization, and general unrest and suffering among the laboring classes.

Probably a billion and three-quarters of the excess of European purchases can be taken care of by the sale of American securities held in Europe and by the transfer of trade balances of oriental countries, but that will leave three-quarters of a billion to be met in some other way.

Furthermore, even if that is arranged, we will have to face a more serious situation in January 1916, as the American securities held abroad will have been exhausted.

I believe that Secretary MCADOO is convinced—and I agree with him—that there is only one means of avoiding this situation which would so seriously affect economic conditions in this country, and that is the flotation of large bond issues by the belligerent governments. Our financial institutions have the money to loan and wish to do so. On account of the great balance of trade in our favor, the proceeds of these loans would be expended here. The result would be a maintenance of the credit of the borrowing nations based on their gold reserve, a continuance of our commerce at its present volume and industrial activity, with the consequent employment of capital and labor and national prosperity.

Mr. President, let me digress in the reading of this letter to point out to my fellow Senators the thing which happened after the war, which is, of course, too obvious to require comment. We saved the bankers, but in so doing, we pushed the world toward the edge of the abyss, and it finally went over with a crash resembling the crack of doom, and now every nation of the world nears bankruptcy as the result of that crushing war.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does it not follow, from the facts—and they were facts rather than theory—set out in the letter of Secretary Lansing, that during the war, in order for us to continue our trade in munitions and other supplies to belligerent nations, it became necessary for us to loan the nations the money with which to buy supplies, and the loans we made them were never paid back, and that as the result of those loans and the policy then inaugurated it later became necessary for us to expend billions of dollars in the prosecution of a war of our own, and also to finance the nations which were already engaged in the war, which sums have also never been and doubtless never will be paid?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is absolutely accurate. What the Senator has stated so well and so ably is a fact known even to school children in this country. Everyone has come to recognize that the Great War was utter social insanity, and was a crazy war, and we had no business in it at all. Oh, yes; we heard a great deal of talk then about freedom of the seas. Whose seas? The seas upon which were being shipped munitions of war which served only to enrich a comparatively small group of men, and whose enrichment cost this country a staggering price, the enrichment of this group brought down upon our heads the terrible economic problems with which we wrestle right here today and we find it wellnigh impossible to solve some of them. Freedom of the seas! Out with such nonsense. For the sake of this fantastic theory that could at best serve the few and not the many, thousands have died, and our hospitals are filled with insane boys who had a right, under God's providence, to live their lives in peace. What a distortion!

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, is it not true, as a mere matter of dollars and cents, to say nothing of the loss of lives and the loss of morale, that for every dollar of profit made by the citizens of the United States out of the munitions business during the war the American people have paid and are paying and will in the future pay a thousandfold?

Mr. BONE. Exactly; and the men whose greed for profit was the occasion of most of it come trooping blithely along and prate of their 100-percent Americanism and their patriotism. There were vast fortunes piled up out of the blood of our boys, and every drop of blood shed on a foreign battlefield was by the alchemy of big business metamorphosed into a dollar that clinked into the cash register of some war profiteer in this country.

Senators, the time has come to put an end to that sort of hell-born business if we wish to preserve the Republic. I do not want my boy to die to further enrich some American millionaire, whose conception of patriotism is the dollar sign and whose conception of proper international relations bears close resemblance to the ethical standards of old Harry Morgan.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. May I ask, where is this bill we have been looking for?

Mr. BONE. There are three bills here. I do not know what sort of a combination bill is coming out of this committee, but I know that if we are men and not mice we ought to scrutinize it with a magnifying glass to see if there is enough dynamite in it to stop this war business in its tracks before the boys are again tramping in our streets with guns on their shoulders.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I understood from the Senator from Arkansas that this bill had been reported this morning. Perhaps I misunderstood him.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as I stated in the beginning of the remarks of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], there was an order made by the Foreign Relations Committee to report a joint resolution comprising three important provisions, one forbidding the shipment of arms, munitions, and implements of war, when a state of war exists, to any belligerent or to any neutral port for transshipment to a belligerent. The second provision forbids American citizens to travel on belligerents' ships, except under certain conditions. The third denies the right of a belligerent to send its submarines into any American port or to establish a submarine base in any American port.

The Foreign Relations Committee has been giving consideration to the matter through a subcommittee which has met almost daily. The subcommittee completed its task 2 or 3 days ago, and the full committee began the work of revising and preparing a report, which was completed at the meeting this morning; and the report will be submitted by the chairman of the committee in due course.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Was there a bill to prevent what was held to be a violation of the law by the Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, namely, making loans to one of the belligerent countries? Was there a bill of that kind?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I can supply the information on that subject. There was a provision advanced at the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho. No final action was attempted on that provision, because it was believed that the subject was affected with considerations which would require more deliberation. The report on that subject has not yet been made, for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Louisiana that one of these resolutions called for the regulation of the issuance of passports to American citizens in time of war, and sought to make it impossible for citizens going into a war zone to go there in such fashion as to jeopardize the peace of this country. A man who goes into a war zone in time of war ought to go there only at his own peril, and if he gets killed it is his misfortune. He ought not to exercise the right to drag a nation into war by reason of his going into a war zone. He has no business to go into a war zone, and by any misfortune there involve this country and its people in a war. I may have the legal right to cross the street where a knife fight is under way. I probably have such a constitutional right, but I would be a silly ass if I did so. If American citizens do not have brains enough to keep out of the war zone they should take the risk of being killed upon themselves. Their indifference to the welfare of millions who may become involved is antisocial.

The second was to prohibit extension of credits and issuance of foreign loans under certain conditions.

The third was to prohibit export of arms and munitions.

I say these things about Americans going into a war zone for the reason that I do not think any man has the right to bring about international strife when he is involving millions of helpless people. If he were involving only himself it would be a matter of small moment, but by some overt act he may involve this country in a war in which millions of boys may pay the price, and such a monumental war debt be created as may absolutely drag down and utterly destroy our financial structure and hopelessly involve our western civilization.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BONE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. What does the Senator's joint resolution propose to do with the shipment of commodities which are not per se munitions or arms of war?

Mr. BONE. I can only briefly answer the Senator—I do not want to take the time to go through the whole list—by saying that it deals with arms and ammunition.

Mr. TYDINGS. Could cotton be shipped into a war zone?

Mr. BONE. I think the joint resolutions are so framed that any American vessel going into war zones would go at their peril; at least, I would have the measure so provide, if I could.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I should like to answer the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BONE. I am happy to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. The three joint resolutions offered by the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and myself have been thought by us to constitute a well-rounded program of neutrality. One contemplates the prevention of the sailing of Americans into the war zone upon the vessels of a belligerent nation.

The second, Senate Joint Resolution 100, forbids the extension or the issuance of loans and credits to nations engaged in war.

The third resolution, being Senate Joint Resolution 120, undertakes to forbid and prevent the exportation of munitions of war to nations engaged in war and contain a further provision respecting contraband commodities which are not considered under international law as being strictly munitions.

As respects contraband, Senate Joint Resolution 120 proposes that when American contraband shall be sold to nations engaged in war there shall be no undertaking to ship such supplies in American bottoms or under the American flag, but that the nation buying shall come and take its own chance respecting delivery to ports where it desires delivery made. That, in brief, is the general purpose of the three joint resolutions.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator if a commodity such as cotton or wheat or corn or iron or any other commodity could not be shipped to either of the belligerent nations except in bottoms belonging to the belligerent nations?

Mr. NYE. Not exactly that. The belligerent nation might get some carrier of another nation to make delivery.

Mr. TYDINGS. We could ship it, but not in our bottoms, to the belligerent nation.

Mr. NYE. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. If a belligerent nation should send its ship into our ports, how long could it stay in time of war under these proposed neutrality laws?

Mr. NYE. There is no effort made to alter the provisions of the law that related to that subject during the last war.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think they had to leave within a certain time; I do not know whether it was 1 day or 3 days or 36 hours. Does the Senator from Washington know?

Mr. BONE. I have forgotten just what the limitation is.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I take the liberty of interrupting to say that each country has a different rule on that subject?

Mr. TYDINGS. But we have our law.

Mr. LEWIS. By regulation we undertook, I take the liberty to say to my able friend, to limit the stay of such a vessel to 12 hours, with the understanding that the time could be extended to 18 hours if it were shown that the vessel could not sail in less time than that.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator from Washington will yield to me for a moment further, I should like to make one concluding suggestion. If the Senator wants to cut off all possibility of a conflict by the three joint resolutions he now has before us, he should not let the ships of belligerents come in, because there might be a fight by the belligerent vessels in our territorial waters, particularly within the 12-mile limit.

Mr. NYE. The Senator raises a question which has received a great deal of consideration, but it seems to me we might better apply ourselves to the measure which we understand will be reported to the Senate by the Foreign Relations Committee, as told us by the majority leader, who is also a member of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The action taken by that committee this morning ignores the matter of contraband; it ignores all matters relating to the issuance of loans and credits to nations engaged in war. So the question which the Senator raises is not a point at issue at the moment, at least.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I inquire whether the committee proposes to make any distinction between the aggressor nation and the nonaggressor nation?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, under the three joint resolutions offered by the Senator from Missouri and myself, there is no provision made for determination as to who is the aggressor; and in respect to the program which we understand to be now on the way from the Foreign Relations Committee, there is no provision made for anyone to determine who is the aggressor, but the action is alike upon the belligerents at war.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the bill which has been ordered reported by the Foreign Relations Committee requires all exporters and importers of arms, munitions, and implements of war to register. It provides for licenses for the shipment of arms and munitions. It forbids the issuance of licenses for shipment to or for import from any country at war.

It does not undertake to discriminate between belligerents, to favor one as against the other, but undertakes to preserve the neutrality of the United States by forbidding its citizens to ship to or import from any belligerent country arms, munitions, and implements of war. It also extends the prohibition to neutral ports when the shipments are made for the purpose of transshipment to belligerent ports.

Mr. BONE. That is merely an amplification of the "cash and carry" principle applied to foreign countries in time of war.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I be pardoned at this moment to call the attention of the able leader of this side, who is also a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to the fact that the action to which he has just referred as having been taken by the Committee on Foreign Relations was not unanimous?

I desire also to say that it is well understood by us all that the action of the committee is not intended to bind the action here on the floor of Senators who are members of that committee. I ask the able Senator, the leader on this side, if that be not a correct statement?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. Any Senator is at liberty to vote as he pleases on the bill referred to just as he is at liberty to exercise his judgment on any other bill that comes before the Senate. For the benefit of the Senator from Illinois, I may say that it is my understanding that in the committee he opposed any action by the committee on any of these subjects matter; he opposed any report by the committee.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator's statement is absolutely correct, and I abide by it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The provisions of the proposed law relating to financial arrangements were postponed, as I have suggested, largely at the instance of the Senator from Idaho, who thought there was not sufficient time in which to work out the matter satisfactorily.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the committee has done anything in the matter or loans and credits?

Mr. ROBINSON. That is just exactly what in my last sentence I said had been postponed, largely acting at the instance of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] because it was not felt that there was opportunity to frame a satisfactory provision.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, if any Member of this body feels that my indictment has been too harsh, if I have exhibited an attitude here that is not justified, I wish to call his attention to the statements made by witnesses before the Munitions Committee who represented the greatest business institutions in America, men who were called down here as witnesses representing such organizations as the Du Ponts and the shipping and steel combines of the country. One of the questions tendered these outstanding witnesses was:

> What, in your judgment, will happen to our western civilization if the world becomes embroiled in another great international conflict?

I assure the Members of the Senate that without a single exception those men stated unhesitatingly that, in their judgment, another great international conflict would probably destroy our western civilization. That is not my conclusion. I elicited that answer from these business leaders, and they were dishonest if they did not answer truthfully. Certainly a man who would come down here and stultify himself in an answer of that kind ought to be summarily kicked out of American business life. He has no right to write that kind of an answer into a public document and lay that sort of challenge as to the ruinous consequences of such a war unless he meant it. And they did mean it, and they were sincere in their answers. If gentlemen of the vicious disposition of certain European dictators today are able, like another blind and desperate Samson, to lay brawny arms around the pillars of the social temple and pull it down around our ears, there is little hope of preserving this segment of our western civilization which we call the United States of America. If this is not a challenge to the United States Senate, then a challenge cannot be formulated that would make the slightest impression on the mentality of Senators.

I am going to return now to the Lansing letter and resume reading it. Mr. Lansing had this further to say to President Wilson:

The difficulty is—and this is what Secretary McAdoo came to see me about—that the Government early in the war announced that it considered "war loans" to be contrary to "the true spirit of neutrality." A declaration to this effect was given to the press about August 15, 1914, by Secretary Bryan. The language is as follows: "In the judgment of this Government loans by American bankers to any foreign nation at war is inconsistent with the true spirit of neutrality."

In October 1914, after a conference with you, I gave my "impressions" to certain New York bankers in reference to "credit loans", but the general statement remained unaffected. In drafting the letter of January 20, 1915, to Senator Stone I sought to leave out a broad statement and to explain merely the reasons for distinguishing between "general loans" and "credit loans." However, Mr. Bryan thought it well to repeat the August declaration and it appears in the first sentence of division 13 of the letter, a copy of which I enclose.

On March 31, 1915, another press statement was given out from the Department which reads as follows:

"The State Department has from time to time received information directly or indirectly to the effect that belligerent nations had arranged with banks in the United States for credits in various sums. While loans to belligerents have been disapproved, this Government has not felt that it was justified in interposing objection to the credit arrangements which have been brought to its attention. It has neither approved these nor disapproved—it has simply taken no action in the premises and expressed no opinion."

Manifestly the Government has committed itself to the policy of discouraging general loans to belligerent governments. The practical reasons for the policy at the time we adopted it were sound, but basing it on the ground that loans are "inconsistent with the true spirit of neutrality" is now a source of embarrassment. This latter ground is as strong today as it was a year ago, while the practical reasons for discouraging loans have largely disappeared. We have more money than we can use. Popular sympathy has become crystallized in favor of one or another of the belligerents to such an extent that the purchase of bonds would in no way increase the bitterness of partisanship or cause a possibly serious situation.

Now we can begin to see just what sort of menace this thing becomes. It reminds me of Pope's statement:

> Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
> As to be hated needs but to be seen;
> Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
> We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

As we go into these matters we find the bankers were lending money to England and France, and little by little, little by little, this stealthy process was taking us nearer and yet nearer to war, and the banking interests were pushing this Government nearer and yet nearer to the point when it became hopelessly enmeshed in the net, and finally the boys had to don the uniform, put guns on their shoulders, and pay the last price on the fields of France to make the world safe for democracy and the New York bankers.

I resume the letter:

Now, on the other hand, we are face to face with what appears to be a critical economic situation, which can only be relieved apparently by the investment of American capital in foreign loans to be used in liquidating the enormous balance of trade in favor of the United States.

What a terrible thing when they accomplished it! What a mess! Here is Lansing telling what would be in store for us; and here were these wise, long-headed bankers laying out a gloomy financial future for boys and girls yet unborn, generations yet not with us, who will have to stagger under the heritage of debt created by that sort of abandoned conduct on the part of the bankers and politicians.

I resume the letter:

Can we afford to let a declaration as to our conception of "the true spirit of neutrality" made in the first days of the war stand in the way of our national interests, which seem to be seriously threatened?

National interests! In God's name, whose interests were they? They were the "interests" of the business profiteers and bankers. They were not the "interests" of those boys who are now in insane asylums as the result of war hazards. They were not the "interests" of the boys whose broken bodies lie in French soil. They were in the potential interest, if not the then direct interest, of the 23,000 new millionaires whose fortunes were soon to be coined from widows' sighs and orphans' tears.

I continue with the letter:

If we cannot afford to do this, how are we to explain away the declaration and maintain a semblance of consistency?

In order to be consistent they become utterly inconsistent, and finally wound up by plunging the country in war.

Then Mr. Lansing proceeds:

My opinion is that we ought to allow the loans to be made for our own good, and I have been seeking some means of harmonizing our policy, so unconditionally announced, with the flotation of general loans. As yet I have found no solution to the problem.

Secretary McAdoo considers that the situation is becoming acute and that something should be done at once to avoid the disastrous results which will follow a continuance of the present policy.

Faithfully yours,

ROBERT LANSING.

This letter was written September 6, 1915, and the last line of this faithful letter by Mr. Lansing was:

Secretary McAdoo considers that the situation is becoming acute and that something should be done at once to avoid the disastrous results which will follow a continuance of the present policy—

A policy which was not a policy at all. It was merely the thing the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] referred to a moment ago when he said there was no policy but of drift, drift, drift, drift, until finally the Nation became enmeshed in a web of circumstances from which there could be no escape.

Who pays the price? We find the newspapers today bawling to high heaven about the heavy taxes we are levying. Those taxes are the heritage of that war. We have a pension burden in this country which is staggering. That burden will not end in your time, Mr. President, nor in mine. It is a direct heritage of that war. We are told by the ablest men in the country that another war will destroy and wreck our civilization, and yet we are going home. We have solved some problems. If we get into a war all the work we have done may be in vain.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will recall that in the last war, when the United States had permitted the war to develop without the establishment of any definite neutrality policy of its own, when the late Senator from Nebraska, Mr. Hitchcock, the ranking member of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, in 1914 introduced a resolution in this body seeking to establish a definite neutrality policy having to do with the exports of munitions and supplies to the belligerent nations, protest was then made by the British Government to our Ambassador at London that the passage of any resolution after the existence of a state of war, establishing such definite neutrality policy, would itself be an unneutral act. When that protest was transmitted by Ambassador Page to the State Department, the Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, replied to Ambassador Page disavowing responsibility for Senator Hitchcock's resolution, stating it had been introduced without any consultation with the State Department or the President, and tacitly admitting the contention of the British Government.

Mr. BONE. That is precisely the case. Such a step in time of war would unquestionably be regarded as an unfriendly act, perhaps a definitely hostile act. If we can find nations, such as one great power today, asserting that national honor is violated because some little fellow in some far-away corner of the world says something distasteful, we can understand how supersensitive great nations may become. The Senator from Missouri tells us an unhappy truth. The moment they are in war, they would regard as distinctly unneutral and unfriendly any effort to change the policy of this Government toward warring countries and belligerents.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I wonder if the Senator noticed the comment of the public press, or by experts in the press? They take the position that war is much nearer than the Senator from Washington seems to view the matter; that we are practically on the threshold of war right now; that the relationships are such that our sales and exchanges necessarily are so treated in European countries that if they become involved over the conquest of Ethiopia by Italy, we likewise may become involved. That being the case it rather appears that as they view the matter now, and they have always been right in the past, we are almost on the brink of conflict.

Mr. BONE. I do not think there is any question about it. Let us see something about the reaction of the press. One does not have to assume the papers are always right, but news associations have men all over the world gathering news, and they keep their fingers on the pulse of things. Read the leading editorial in the Washington Star of yesterday, entitled "Europe Approaches a Crisis", and beginning:

Collapse of the three-power conference at Paris on the Ethiopian crisis has resulted from Mussolini's specific rejection of a proposal put forward by France and England. * * * There is little ground for hope that this further study will be successful—

Referring to some negotiations under way—

nor is there any prospect of effective action by the League Council to avert the catastrophe of conflict.

The editor is talking about war as though it were almost upon us. The grisly phantom of war stalks in our midst. The newspapers assume that it is right at our doors and may be upon us tomorrow, and unhappily, they may be correct.

Referring to some negotiations under way the editorial continues:

Mussolini rejected this even as a ground of discussion, demanding instead a protectorate over the major portion of Ethiopia, extensive annexation of territory, and Italian military occupation of most of the country. * * * In the present temper of Italy and in view of its evident purpose to proceed regardless of any national influence—

Imagine what a country like that would think about a shift of policy in respect to neutrality, in the middle of a war. Here is Italy going right ahead regardless of the Kellogg Peace Pact and the League of Nations and all other salutary restraining influences of an international character—

it is hardly likely that either course would serve to check Mussolini's war plans. There is a decided sentiment in England for a virtual participation through the closing of the Suez Canal to Italian troop transports and supply ships. Such an action might well result in an enlargement of the sphere of conflict, the involvement, in short, of Great Britain and possibly France. It is this possibility that causes the apprehension felt today in Europe lest the Ethiopian crisis may lead to a general conflict on the Continent.

Obviously, a general European war is going to compel us either to take sides between the two parties to it and recognize one as a belligerent who is to blame, or else do what we have suggested here and keep out of that kind of business.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. It has been 17 years since we ended the war with Europe, and we have not done a thing in the world, have we, to keep from being drawn into another one? Seventeen years have gone by, and we are still just where we stood then.

Mr. BONE. Exactly. There is not a line of law that should have reflected some of the concern which Lansing and others felt because of this country's lack of preparation in the way of legislation to define policies of neutrality in case of a European war.

Now I desire to call attention just briefly to some facts which show what the inspiration was for a lot of this stuff. Here was a great market for American manufacturers, and they wanted the market, and they did not care what it cost. We have now learned the price, and we are the most inordinately stupid people under the sun—never, in all the infinite spaces of time, could a people be so stupid as we, if we permit ourselves to be dragged into another mess of that kind merely for the sake of profit in business.

Exports of domestic produce from the United States to the Allies jumped from approximately $825,000,000 on June 20, 1915, to $3,214,000,000 on June 30, 1916, an increase of almost 300 percent.

That was one of the motivating forces which dragged us into the war—the profit in the war business.

To the Central Powers they dwindled from approximately $169,000,000 on June 30, 1914, to $1,000,000 on June 30, 1916. Trade with the Allies was largely in munitions, war materials generally, and foodstuffs. This enormous trade in munitions and war supplies between the United States and the Allies presented unprecedented opportunities to American commercial interests.

There you have the whole story.

When the Allies could no longer finance the trade, the United States had to do it. The quiet change in this Government's policy regarding loans to belligerents made possible the flotation of the first big war loan—the Anglo-French loan of $500,000,000 of October 1915. That was merely a beginning. When the financial needs of the Allies could no longer be adequately met by private banking agencies, Ambassador Page in London wired an alarming telegram to this Government on March 5, 1917, in which he pointed out the threatening financial situation of the Allies, and the dire results that would befall not only the Allies but the United States if we did not go to their aid. The commercial and financial interests in the United States could not then risk any chance of failure for the Allied cause when such failure spelled economic disaster for those interests.

That is just about as blunt a statement as one may make. For the sake of profit, for dollars, to protect the loans of certain commercial interests in this country, 50,000 boys now lie buried in France. Thousands of others are in insane asylums. We have pension rolls here which will be a staggering burden when all of us in this body shall have passed away; and we now face a possibility of repeating the supreme economic and social folly of 1917.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BONE. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was at a picture show last night, and I saw on the screen the statement that Lloyds was betting 500 to 1 that America would not be involved in this trouble. Lloyds, as the Senator knows, is a pretty good business institution, or, I might say, a pretty good gambling institution. Those are very long odds; and I am inclined to think Lloyds is probably right.

Mr. BONE. I know the Senator's memory is sufficiently acute to recall the statement which I heard before we got into the World War. "Oh, nothing could get the United States into one of these messes in Europe. This imbroglio will not bring us in." Am I correct? Let any Senator here rise and tell me if I am wrong. I heard it said a thousand times from the platform, from churches, from every other agency under the flag, that we would not and could not get into that flaming hell that was the Europe of 1917. But in we went.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. Yes.

Mr. LONG. We inaugurated a President on March 4, and declared war on April 17, I think. Those things do not make any difference.

Mr. BONE. Yes; the Democratic Party elected a President because the people believed that he had kept us out of war! Oh, yes; we were perfectly safe! We elected a President in 1916 because he had kept this Nation out of war. And a few months later armies of our boys were marching down the streets with rifles on their shoulders. That is how much the American people were deceived by the vicious thing they faced. They did not know. They had no way of knowing or learning the truth. I wonder if the mothers of America would have voted for Woodrow Wilson, with the lamp of hope burning so brightly in their breasts, if they had known that a national administration would soon put this country into war and that their boys would soon be in uniform and dying on French battlefields? I wonder if many of these mothers would have voted for him with that mother love in their hearts if they had questioned the sincerity of this implied promise for the future?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to disagree with the general plan of the Senator's thought, but I think it ought to be stated that in the campaign referred to President Wilson himself never promised the people that he would keep them out of war. Those who campaigned for him referred to the fact that up to that time he had kept the country out of war; but I think the Senator or anybody else will fail to find that Mr. Wilson himself definitely promised such a thing in order to be elected or to get votes in that election.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Since we are beginning to get down to real cases on the question of staying out of another war and the general attitude of the American people toward the last war, while I do not recall that President Wilson himself ever said anything on the subject in the campaign, we all know that he sent Martin Glynn out to St. Louis to read the keynote speech as temporary chairman of the St. Louis convention; we all know that President Wilson read over Martin Glynn's speech before he went there; we all know that the Democratic Convention at St. Louis in 1916 deliberately pitched the campaign upon that issue; and we know that the American people elected the Democrats to power on that issue, and that within 2 months afterward we were in war.

Mr. President, I am not criticizing President Wilson for that; I am not criticizing the Democratic Party for that; but I do not wish to see another situation develop in which, if Congress should adjourn without taking action to establish a definite neutrality policy, and war should develop elsewhere before the next meeting of Congress, a chain of circumstances would be set in motion which would make some future President—President Roosevelt or any other future President—as helpless to keep the United States out of war as President Wilson was in 1917 by reason of the chain of circumstances which had been set in motion by the sailing of the first American munitions ship in 1914.

It does not involve any criticism of President Wilson or his administration to state those facts for the protection of Americans in the future.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not out of sympathy with the purpose of the Senator from Washington nor the attitude of the Senator from Missouri; but, as a matter of history, I do not think it ought to be stated here, or that the impression ought to be left, that President Wilson went out in the campaign and deliberately promised the American people that he would keep them out of war in order to secure his reelection. Of course, it was legitimate for him or for his friends or for the Democratic Party to refer to the fact that up to that time he had kept them out, in spite of very annoying and embarrassing circumstances; but what I wish to impress upon the Senator is that Mr. Wilson did not himself guarantee to the American people that he could keep them out of war.

Mr. BONE. I think if the Senator will read my remarks he will see that I stated that American mothers would not have voted for Woodrow Wilson, as they did in my State, by the thousands if that slogan had not been ringing in their ears, and if they had not been going home day after day, looking into the eyes of their boys, and wondering what would happen to those same boys in case of war. They went to the ballot box in my State and voted for Woodrow Wilson because they believed that slogan, whether it was sincere or not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Because they believed it would be possible for him to pursue the same policy in the future.

Mr. BONE. Yes; and that is all the more reason why the same Democratic Party should now be brave and bold and courageous. I believe that the American people would destroy any political party which gets in the pathway of peace. Do not make any mistake about that. I would not be afraid to campaign this country on that issue. God help any political party that gets in the way of peace. I hope the mothers of America would root it out and destroy it, so that there would not be any evidence of it left, and, as in the case of Carthage, that they would sow salt over the grave of a party too cowardly to meet this issue head-on.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I am in full accord with what the Senator says about his joint resolution, but I think it would be well to remind the Senator that at Cincinnati, during the Wilson campaign in 1916, he warned the American people that it might not be possible to keep them out of war, and called their attention to the fact that we might be drawn into it in spite of all that could be done.

Mr. BONE. I accept that statement as true. The trouble is that we all agree with one another around here, but we are not going to do the thing that ought to be done. Of course we all agree with this. God have mercy on the political life of a man who would not at least publicly agree that this infamy called war ought to be met head-on, but the fact that we ought to agree does not get us anywhere. I want something practical done in this respect. It is possible to keep this Nation out of war and that duty rests squarely on our shoulders.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BONE. Just a moment, and I will yield.

Why should we have been dragged into that war? I am trying to read now, for the benefit of the American people, some of the reasons why we were dragged in and why we should eliminate elements that provoke war. The bankers had loaned this money, and they were involving us. The munition makers were selling munitions to the Allies at fabulous prices, as was revealed before the Munitions Committee, and they were involving us. Does anyone believe that the humble little homes in this country had anything at stake in these war loans? But big business interests had at stake the millions they were making in profits out of this sordid business of mass murder, and they were seemingly willing to desolate the hearthstones of this country, and politicians were willing to say that we were being dragged in. How were we being dragged in? Who dragged us in? I wonder if we could have been dragged in if we had had a Congress with intestinal stamina enough to keep us from being dragged in by such subversive and antisocial forces?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think one of the bills or joint resolutions prohibits American shipping from going into the war zone of a belligerent. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. BONE. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I realize that the Senator's resolution cannot define what a zone is, but I am wondering whether the zones would be the zones which the belligerents declare are the war zones, or would be the zones which we declared to be the war zones. The Senator can see what I mean, I am sure.

Mr. BONE. I understand. I think we can avoid much confusion by the formula for which I have always battled, that is, that any American who goes over where fighting will occur goes at his own risk. That is the thing for which I am battling. I do not care about technical differences which may exist in men's opinions as to what is a zone and what is not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me point out to the Senator a little better, by way of illustration, what I have in mind.

Under the rules of modern warfare, a submarine can operate two or three thousand miles from its native country, and, therefore, unless a zone is pretty well defined, no ship at all could leave an American port, because as soon as it got out beyond the 3-mile limit it would be in the zone where in the last war German submarines sometimes operated. Therefore, it looks to me as if we would be surrendering not only freedom of the seas in the actual theater of operations near the country, but surrendering the freedom of the seas on all the seven oceans, because under present conditions submarines have a cruising radius of over 5,000 miles; and, therefore, if any ship were to leave an American port the minute it got out beyond the 3-mile limit it would run into a zone of possible war activity.

I say this not by way of criticism, but to point out to the Senator the circumstance so that he may take it into consideration in his argument and in his resolution.

Mr. BONE. I am fully aware of the fact that the marvels of science has made the world so very small that what the Senator says is true. Assuming it to be true, on the one hand we are confronted with a proposition of getting some trade and thereby violating or not violating this policy of neutrality which the Senator suggests, or saving ourselves from the possibility of war by cutting loose from the whole crowd, if need be.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am wondering, in pressing my inquiry a bit further, if the next war should be something like the last war, and submarines should operate on a wide scale from the home base, whether or not it is the purpose of the Senator's resolution, or the one to which he is addressing himself, to allow no ship flying the American flag to leave our ports, even though it was headed for a neutral country.

Mr. BONE. I do not think that would apply. If war were imminent in Europe, or were going on in Europe, I do not think there would be any question raised about the right of American ships to go into South American ports.

Mr. TYDINGS. But where would the war zone be?

Mr. BONE. The Senator is asking an impossible question.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I am not, Mr. President.

Mr. BONE. Then the Senator presents an alternative so dreadful that there is no answer.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I do not present an alternative.

Mr. BONE. I do not for a moment admit there is no answer to this difficult problem.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is not discussing his resolution with me. Assuming another war like the one we had in 1917, and assuming that supplies should start to move from South America and from North America toward Europe, and the Germans should have their submarines and should operate all along the North Atlantic and South Atlantic, I ask whether or not it is contemplated by the Senator, in such a situation, that we should have no shipping going out, because the zone of war would be the entire North and South Atlantic Oceans?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. May I say to the Senator from Washington and to the Senator from Maryland that the resolution which will be reported this afternoon from the Committee on Foreign Relations does not involve the point which is raised by the Senator from Maryland. The resolution has deliberately avoided one or two highly difficult phases of the situation, including the question of complete prohibition of all American shipping, for the purpose of attempting to lay down a few fundamental rules which are more or less incontrovertible. So far as the resolution which soon will be before the Senate is concerned, the effort is to summarily embargo the use of American ships for the shipment of arms and munitions and implements of war only, on the theory that this at least would relieve the maritime situation of its martial challenge and the justification for hostile attack on the theory upon which the enemy attacks in such circumstances.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator from Michigan. If the Senator from Washington will yield a moment further, I understand that, but as I look at it, we want to draw a policy so broad that there will be no opportunity whatsoever for the United States to be drawn into another world war.

It occurred to me that if there is to be war on a large scale, and if we are to pursue the policy referred to to its inevitable conclusion, the only sure way by which we can stay out of war, if this philosophy is sound, is to have no shipping whatsoever because in another world war the Atlantic and the Pacific, North and South, and the Indian Ocean, to say nothing of the air, will all be used as a means of communication, and therefore my interrogatory is addressed to the Senator from Washington, not by way of criticism, or to belittle his efforts, but by way of showing him that if his philosophy is to be pursued not to the point of absurdity, it ought to be so broad, if he wants to present the issue clearly to the Senate, that we should even go so far as to stop all commerce rather than embroil this Nation in another war.

I may say to the Senator on that point, in conclusion, that I believe the human being is so constructed that while everybody will be for the resolution now, when the time comes that the cotton farmers cannot export their cotton, exporting, as they do, 50 percent of the entire crop, those men will demand the markets back which give them a living, particularly when cotton, in such a situation, will be bringing an abnormally high price. Therefore what we do, well intentioned though it is, is apt to degenerate into a set of New Year's resolutions, which will be broken about as soon as war is declared.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it certainly does not inspire us with any great hope for the future when, as the Senator from Maryland suggests, the fact that some cotton growers in the South are going to make a lot more money out of war may wipe off the statute books by one fell swoop, any effort of ours, however ineffective or weak it may be, to meet this situation.

It is not my fault that the world has become so small that an airplane leaves San Francisco and in a few hours is out at the Midway Islands. That is a condition which the march of science has established. It is not the fault of anyone. The fact that the world may be so much smaller tomorrow that we can circumnavigate the globe in hours instead of days is the fault of no one, but it is a harsh condition which we must confront, and if it be necessary—and I do not say that these resolutions to which I have adverted present the necessary answer to the problem—I say that if we face a condition due to scientific achievement which has made the oceans of the world nothing but mere puddles in someone's back yard, so that a ship may go across them with safety under any conditions in warfare, then we had better adopt harsh remedies and abandon our world commerce—for a short time, to preserve our civilization. I say that frankly. I would rather temporarily abandon all our world commerce than to have this Republic, which my father fought to preserve, destroyed or irreparably injured by another great war. I would rather see that than see the youth of this country don uniforms again and go out to die, only to leave a heritage of evil, financial and otherwise, in the train of a war far worse than the one we saw in 1917 and 1918.

The Senator from Maryland is a soldier and he knows what I am talking about.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have no desire to prolong this debate, but I cannot help being a bit philosophical. Many people level criticism at the President and the administration, and at the Members of the Senate and the House who sat here and declared war in 1917. They imply that the Congress acted wrongly. But none of us can calculate what would have happened if the Congress had been so paralyzed by fear that it would not have declared war. Who can tell what the consequences of silence would have been in that time, whether or not there might not have been another map of the world made, whether these United States of America would be the country for which the Senator's forefathers fought and died?

It is always easy to criticize what someone has done, but it is very much harder to do better, and particularly when we have only the one consequence physically before us on which to base our judgments. Therefore, hating war as I do, and sympathizing with the philosophy which the Senator from Washington is expressing, I think that sometimes it is easier on humanity to fight than not to fight. I submit that for whatever it is worth.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I feel that the Senator from Maryland, who has experienced the hardships of soldiering, and who has discussed them on this floor repeatedly, sympathizes with my point of view. During one of his speeches a short time ago I felt tempted to speak a word to that learned Theban about the thing he has discussed here so frequently, that is, the war debts and our mounting national debt, to which he has adverted so frequently and in such an illuminating way. I know he appreciates what another war would mean to this country. It would probably mean the destruction of our national financial system. It could not stand the strain of another war. I am not speaking of sentimental things—although I think sentiment ought to play a great part in our lives. If we should abandon all things sentimental, God help us. Look at Europe, which has crucified sentiment. Look at the condition over there and ask yourselves why we should immerse ourselves again in that old world hell broth.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. We exported only about 3,000,000 bales of cotton last year; our exports are not so large as they used to be. But there is no sacrifice in the way of trade that I can imagine—and the South, of course, leads by reason of its exportation of cotton—there is no sacrifice, temporary or permanent, which we would have to make to avoid war which would approach the sacrifice we would have to make to go into a war.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to occupy the time of the Senate for just one moment to suggest that the philosophy expressed by my friend the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is precisely the philosophy, precisely the complacent regard for war as inevitable, which has actually made war inevitable since time immemorial.

In further reference to what the Senator from Maryland said, it is not the purpose of the proponents of these joint resolutions, it is not the intention of the advocates of the establishment of a definite neutrality policy, in any way to reflect upon the President of the United States or those who made up his administration, or the Congress which voted for war.

We simply recite the facts of the last war in which we were engaged to establish the proposition that it was the lack of a definite neutrality policy established by law, which would automatically go into effect upon the declaration of war, which made war inevitable, and which tied the hands of President Wilson and the members of his administration and the Members of the Congress who finally inevitably voted for war. We seek to avoid a situation whereby the Senator from Maryland, the Senator from Washington, and other Members of this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol, may be forced into a similar impasse.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I rise only to take particular and special and personal exception to the remarks of the Senator from Missouri insofar as he passes upon my mental processes, commenting that the philosophy I was expressing made war inevitable. I may say to the Senator that since the World War we have had a League of Nations, a World Court, and we have had the Kellogg-Briand peace pact, and I do not know how many Locarnos, and many other pacts, and those connected with such conferences have all been working to avert war; yet it looks as though we are again on the brink of war.

I desire to point out to the Senator that my philosophy is utterly different from his.

Mr. CLARK. I am glad it is.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator assumes that the way to end war is to pass some resolutions here in the Senate. Within the past 2 months on this floor, in an address of over 2 hours, I expounded in full my philosophy as to how to prevent war; which, boiled down, is this: Not the path of fear, but the path of courage. Not the path of an inferior nation, but the path of a superior nation. Not the path of isolation, but the path of cooperation.

The Senator knows that tariff trade embargoes carried to an extreme, the depreciation of the money system, such international questions as the failure to settle the war debts, and inability to agree upon a method to bring about disarmament, are a thousand times more responsible for the conditions existing between Ethiopia and Italy and all the other countries in Europe than any particular philosophy embraced in these joint resolutions.

I do not propose to have the Senator say that I want war or that I like war; but I think I have as much intelligence as the Senator from Missouri has, and I ought to be permitted to approach the peace question from a different angle than he does without any aspersions being cast upon my mental processes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. It would be farthest from my thoughts to set up any poor opinion of mine, or any simple deduction which I may draw from a study of events of the last war, or a study of events happening before and since that war, against the colossal intellect and the vast experience of the Senator from Maryland, who, I entirely agree, is the last word on international as well as fiscal questions. My philosophy, as the Senator says, does differ very essentially from his. The Senator considers it a mark of superiority, of being a superior Nation, to assert principles of international free trade which would be violated by both sides as they were in the last war, and the result would finally be that by reason of community interest with one side we should declare war on behalf of that side, which also would have violated our rights, rather than the other.

The Senator thinks it is a mark of weakness or fear to say that a few paltry dollars of profit should not be permitted to drag the United States into war, to jeopardize the future of our civilization, and to assist in pulling down the civilization of the world. When I said that the philosophy of the Senator from Maryland was certainly the philosophy which had made war inevitable and perpetuated it from time immemorial, I took that statement from the words of the Senator from Maryland himself; and I am willing to submit this issue and my case on the words uttered just a few moments ago by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should ask to take some of the time of the Senator from Washington were there any need to answer; but I think the answer is contained in the Senator's own remarks.

Mr. CLARK. And also the remarks of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No one who has listened to him can doubt the timeliness, importance, and deep sincerity of the address of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]. What I am specially concerned to discover is whether in the course of his research the Senator has found any war-making factors existing at the time when the letter of Secretary Lansing was written which are not essentially in existence at this hour?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think I can better answer the able Senator from Colorado a little later. Our Munitions Committee investigators are working on certain files now, and their labors seem to have stirred up a veritable hornet's nest of opposition in certain quarters because of fear which seems to have been engendered in certain quarters that it may reveal a condition that is not pleasant to be shown to the country. I am sorry I cannot give the Senator and the Members of the Senate more information about that. I may say that I hope the Munitions Committee of the Senate will a little bit later be able to make some revelations of fact concerning those matters which will be very illuminating and probably very startling to the country and fully answer the able Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is there not evident an extraordinary parallel between the drift toward world war in the years from 1914 to 1917 and the drift which is perceptible at this hour?

Mr. BONE. Yes; there is a parallel current of events. Of course, the sales of munitions of war are not so marked now as they were then, but we are again drifting in the same deadly current which, in 1917, carried us toward the shoals of war. That is what has so alarmed members of the Munitions Committee, who have sought to have some action taken on the neutrality bills in this session.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, what the Senator from Colorado said calls to my mind something which it seems is almost a parallel.

Italy now threatens to jump on Ethiopia under circumstances almost like those when Austria threatened to jump on Serbia. The situations are similar. Twenty years ago one strong nation started in on another one, and the whole world burst into war flames. I see no difference in the laws, and no difference in the rules, and no difference in the customs. I may say further that there is hardly a headline in a newspaper today which does not draw the parallel as to the likelihood of the four continents being involved in a war if those conditions and the laws remain as they have remained during the 17 years since the last war.

My friend from Maryland a few moments ago, in private conversation, called my attention to one thing. Congress, for 17 years, has resisted every effort to pass a single law which would prevent this country from being drawn into war as it was in 1917.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, a statement like that from the Senator from Maryland of course challenges not only our attention but it ought to challenge the attention and interest of the whole country, as to what strange fear or influence it is which keeps the Congress of the United States from passing this legislation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have listened with interest and admiration to the speech of the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE]. It is timely and important. If the Senator will permit me to occupy a moment of his time, I shall expatiate as to some views of my own. I do this because of the suggestion made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. It is a fact that the parallel is observable between a great nation now advancing upon an independent government 3,700 years old, and the advance that was made by Austria upon Serbia in 1914.

I have just finished reading with mute amazement the book written by David Lloyd George, who was Chancellor of the Exchequer in England when the World War broke out in 1914 and later became the Premier. He gives it in his book as his deliberate opinion that had there been a Gladstone or a Disraeli as Prime Minister of Great Britain, had there been a Clemenceau as Prime Minister of France, and had a certain man named by Mr. Lloyd George been President of the United States, or had any one of these contingencies existed, there would have been no war, or at least it would have been sterilized and localized.

Mr. President, the world is now sitting by watching not only the planting but the watering and the cultivating of the seeds of a world war. What is the world doing to sterilize that potential world war? Nothing; nothing.

If we choose peace and tranquillity, safety and security, rather than to assert our right, it is our lawful privilege to do so. I am in favor of the neutrality resolution.

If we pass this resolution, let us pledge ourselves and our consciences that we shall live up to it. But what will be the temptations? As soon as war begins wheat may go to $2 a bushel. Let us agree that not a bushel of wheat shall be exported. As soon as war begins copper may go to 30 cents a pound. As soon as war is declared cotton may go to 40 cents per pound, but let us agree not to export a pound.

As soon as war begins the price of mules from Missouri will quintuple. That will be true of other articles of commerce. Let us live up to the resolution if we shall pass it.

Mark my word, the speech of the Senator may become historic. I am going to vote for the joint resolution.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I would set off against all of these trade advantages the bodies of the boys who will surely have to go abroad along with the cotton, the steel, and the iron. I would rather that every cotton magnate in the country and every steel magnate in the country be compelled to abandon war traffic than to traffic in the lives of our boys. I would rather the whole fabric of war traffic be rent asunder than to sacrifice more boys. If we have reached the point where desire for gold supersedes our common-sense desire to save our boys, we have reached a sad stage indeed. There must be some statesmanship in the Government and in the Congress. If there is not, let us go home and abdicate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BONE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know whether I read it in the speech of the able Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] or the speech of the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], but I did read somewhere the statement that after a war is started, after a casus belli has originated, we are too late, we are foreclosed on changing our policy, we have sinned away our day of grace. If we are going to set up a policy, we must do so now and not after eventualities have occurred.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I can give the Senator a reference which establishes that proposition as a matter of policy and conduct on the part of the United States.

In December 1914, Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, introduced a resolution in the Senate aimed at the exportations of munitions of war to any belligerent. On December 11, 1914, the American Ambassador in Great Britain, Mr. Page, cabled the Secretary of State as follows:

> Sir Edward Grey unofficially expressed the hope to me that the bill introduced by Mr. Hitchcock in the Senate will not pass, aimed to prohibit the exportation by private firms of munitions of war to any belligerent. He calls attention to the fact that this would be special legislation passed while war is in progress making a radical departure from a long-established custom and that for this reason (it would appear?) an unneutral act toward the belligerents that can profit by it.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs of Great Britain, at that time engaged in war, expressed to the American ambassador the hope that a measure introduced in the United States Senate by the ranking member of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations would not pass—a resolution designed to preserve the neutrality of the United States and to keep us from that policy of drifting into war to which we have referred.

To this cable, Mr. Bryan, then Secretary of State, on December 14, 1914, reported to our Ambassador:

> I have explained to Ambassador Spring Rice that Mr. Hitchcock did not consult the President or the State Department in regard to his resolution. Being from Nebraska he is not personally friendly to me.

In other words, the Department of State specifically disavowed the resolution of Senator Hitchcock in response to a demand communicated to the United States Government through the American Ambassador at London.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BONE. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I want confirmation from the Senator as to whether or not in his judgment I am correct in my conclusion that after we shall have entered the war or the eventuality shall have come to pass, it is too late.

Mr. CLARK. There is no question about that.

Mr. ASHURST. If we act it must be preceding the war.

Mr. CLARK. There can be no question about that. From the date of the sailing of the first munitions ship in 1914, even the name of which nobody remembers, the United States was helpless to prevent entry into war.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think the colloquy has made it very plain that the suggestions which have been made on the floor relative to shipments of cotton, of wheat, of copper, and the like, will be inevitably followed by a shipment of bodies of our boys who go along to make the world safe for democracy and collect the loans which we may be stupid enough to make.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I was unaware of the international law which the Senator from Arizona mentioned and the Senator from Missouri read. If that is the law, as I know it is, it seems to me the Congress has but very few days in which to pass this resolution. We have very few days regardless of how willing we might be to debate the matter. It ought to be a very hurried matter. Apparently there is going to be war somewhere pretty quick unless everybody else is being misled.

Mr. BONE. I am trying to take a very practical view of this matter. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] says we cannot solve this matter by passing a resolution. No; but we can pull the financial teeth out of some of these fellows who are trying to make money out of war. If I may be pardoned for lapsing into vulgar vernacular to illustrate my point, I want to completely pluck their financial tail feathers. I am not interested in a lily-fingered resolution about amity and good faith. I want to make it impossible for the business racketeers of this country to set in motion forces which may again send the boys across the ocean. I hope that is plain enough. I have endeavored to make my statement clear.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not mean at all to say or imply that the Senator was not doing the best he could to bring whatever peace is possible out of the situation. My remarks were not in criticism at all.

Mr. BONE. I fully understood that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I expect I shall vote for the Senator's resolution. I was simply trying to point out the possibilities of war occurring anyhow under the Senator's resolution, and how futile it is many times to try when there are so many avenues through which war could be declared.

Mr. BONE. I think the logical answer to that, as there can be a logical answer to it, is that all we can do is to do our best. I do not want to stop at 90 percent of the way. I want to go the whole route toward peace in this thing and utilize every single agency which a parliamentary government can employ to prevent war. If that cannot be accomplished wholly, we will at least have done our duty by doing all that we can. But if we weasel and become frowzy little politicians and pull our punches, then history will treat us exactly as we ought to be treated.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BONE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. As one of the authors and introducers of the resolution I should like to say to the Senator from Maryland and to the Senate that it has never been the contention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] or myself, or of anyone else so far as I know, that any resolution or any act or any legislation which can be enacted by the Congress would give us a positive assurance against war. Of course, the only way to prevent our entering a war is to keep a war from occurring, which we are helpless to do by ourselves. I do say that in my judgment the measures we have proposed here will tend very much to minimize the danger of our being drawn into a conflict in which we originally have no reason to participate.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that may be conceded, and I do not wish to repeat what has already been said; but the Senator from Arizona selected only a few examples to illustrate his very well-taken point. Not only will cotton and copper and hog meat and mules and metals and coal and everything else that goes into the life of a nation be cut off by an embargo, which may be the logical thing to do, but the steamship lines and the railroad lines will likewise be forced to lay off a certain number of men as the volume of freight decreases, and business houses of all kinds will be forced to lay them off. Perhaps that would be a good thing in the end rather than to have war; but, if I understand the human being pretty well, while this seems a very easy and pleasant discussion this afternoon, when we are talking here with no war on, if it shall become necessary to put an embargo on all exports I apprehend that many persons who are now in favor of the joint resolution, particularly outside of the Senate, will start passing resolutions which will make the lobby telegraph volume look very small indeed, asking us to give them their markets at the high prices which will prevail for all manner of commodities.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BONE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I address myself to the Senator from Maryland as well as to the Senator from Washington, who is ably presenting, in a most eloquent manner, his viewpoint. In the era in which we are now living, contemplating the world in its situation and the American in his rights, does my able friend from Maryland feel that the United States can ever be wholly and completely neutral in any conflict of the world where the rights of her people and their property would be, and would have to be, protected?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, since the Senator asks me the question, of course, if a man deliberately, with malice aforethought, as it were, puts himself in the position of drawing his whole country into a controversy, that is one thing; but I still believe that the American citizen, subject to certain reasonable restrictions, ought to be pretty well permitted to walk over the globe in countries that are not fighting, and not be a boy who has to sit on the back porch and behave himself when he is a citizen of a nation of the strength and power that we have.

Mr. LEWIS. And the rights that we have.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should not oppose a mild restriction on these rights, drawn with reason; but I certainly should oppose complete isolation for this country as having evils almost as great as any I can think of.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have known what it is all my life to espouse unpopular causes.

I do not care how unpopular this sort of proposal might be; if my conscience dictated that I should vote for it, I would do it regardless of its effects on my future. I cannot hope for a future if I do not serve my honest impulses. We cannot fool with this thing called war. I, for one, am willing to pay any kind of a price to avoid war so long as that price tends to preserve our civilization, the heritage of 6,000 years of human progress, this fragile thing that is in our hands today.

Now I wish to read what Mr. Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, said during the war, because this goes back to that same sordid money business which plunged us into the war.

Bernstorff said:

He—

Referring to Colonel House—

told me at that time that, as matters had turned out, Wilson no longer had the power to compel England to adhere to the principles of international law. That the reason for this was that American commerce was so completely tied up with the interests of the Entente that it was impossible for Wilson to disturb these commercial relations without calling forth such a storm of protest on the part of the public that he would not be able to carry out his intention.

That statement confirms in part what the Senator from Maryland has said, and what the Senator from Arizona has said. There is no gainsaying that; but the challenge I lay at the root of this matter is that we should start now, in advance, and make it impossible for any set of men to inaugurate these commercial and economic ventures and relationships that become set and jelled, so that it is impossible to dislodge them without danger of international conflicts.

The Anglo-French loan of $500,000,000 was effected in October 1915, and that was just the beginning. After that, time after time, other loans were effected.

On August 15, 1914, the Department of State of the United States issued a public circular regarding neutrality, contraband, and the seizure of ships and cargo, which stated in part:

> The existence of war between foreign governments does not suspend trade or commerce between this country and those at war. This right to continue to trade with belligerents is upheld by the well-recognized principles of international law, subject to the exceptions herein noted.

These exceptions had to do with the rules governing the sale or shipment of contraband of war. On the same day, in answer to an inquiry from J. P. Morgan & Co. as to the attitude of this Government in case American bankers were asked to make loans to foreign governments during the war in Europe, the Department of State announced that:

> There is no reason why loans should not be made to the governments of neutral nations, but in the judgment of this Government loans by American bankers to any foreign nation which is at war are inconsistent with the true spirit of neutrality.

That was in August of 1914.

The legitimate trade of the United States with the belligerents as well as with other neutrals was to continue, subject, of course, to the laws of maritime warfare. Loans to the belligerents, however, would be unneutral in spirit. The World War, as it progressed, illustrated conclusively the inseparable relationship between our war trade and the necessity of loans to finance it, and the utter impossibility of maintaining and increasing that trade and still remaining completely neutral.

Trade in all materials of use in the conduct of war grew to great figures. In explosives alone—and in that field we can understand the very intense interests of the great Du Pont Powder Co., which was supplying powder to the Allies at almost fabulous prices—in explosives alone, as a part of the munitions trade which is here specifically under consideration, the export figures jumped from approximately $10,000,000 on June 30, 1914, to $189,000,000 on June 30, 1915, to $715,000,000 on June 30, 1916.

I merely call the attention of Senators to the fact that the export figures on explosives alone, propellants and the like, rose from June 30, 1914, from a figure of $10,000,000 to $715,000,000 on June 30, 1916, a period of 2 years.

It is not strange that Germany found it difficult to look upon our policy in this regard as particularly neutral.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. Yes.

Mr. LONG. I desire to make this observation, though the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has left the Chamber:

Our foreign business has never, in good times, averaged more than around 7 percent of our total business. Even though we were to have something that struck paralysis to as much as half or two-thirds of our foreign business, it would not be stifling or paralytic in its general effect, and I am not so sure that it would not furnish the American people with an experiment that would be much to their advantage.

In other words, if we had a few less imported products right now, and had more of our own manufactured goods consumed, I believe we should be a good deal better off than we are, even though we have been trying to dig up an export business. But, be that as it may, regardless of its outcome, our export business is never more than 7 percent of the total in good times; and even though we were to have the consumption of our own goods decreased to the extent of 7 percent, and even though there were no increases in this country, which there would most surely be, to offset that, none the less it would be sacrificing a percentage of trade which would be more than recompensed, through the avoidance of other losses and expenditures, to say nothing of the loss of life.

Mr. BONE. I think it is obvious that if the United States of America has to rely on foreign trade, in default of which the Republic will crash economically, we are obviously in a sad position. Our foreign trade has declined now to a point where it is of no great consequence; and if we lost what we had now, it were infinitely better to lose that in toto than to plunge the Nation into war. Certainly, if we get into another war, the tax problem will not be solved here on the floor of the Senate and in the House of Representatives. The tax problem will be settled by gentlemen who do not have much reverence for parliamentary forms such as we exhibit here.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I should apologize for again injecting myself into the able Senator's remarks. Manganese is one of the prime metals used in war as well as in peace. For some years I vexed the ears of the Senate and of the country urging a high tariff on imported manganese, not that I had in view solely and only the idea of aiding the producers of manganese, for I had also in view making our country self-sufficient.

Senators cannot be oblivious to the fact that we lost some ships—notably the Cyclops, whose fate is unknown—ships laden with manganese bound to our country.

If we desire to be self-sufficient, we ought so to develop our own American manganese deposits so that in time of trouble we shall not, forsooth, have to send to China, Japan, Norway, Sweden, Brazil, or Russia for manganese.

With due respect to others who hold different views, I believe that in a high-protective-tariff policy is not only wrapped up a great measure of prosperity for our people, but likewise a stimulation of those energies and enterprises which makes us self-sufficient so that we may practically observe neutrality in a world war. I am glad to say that I have had the assistance at all times of the able Senator from Washington in my feeble efforts to promote the development of the manganese interests of our country.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, there are manganese deposits in my own State, I am advised, and I have joined with the Senator from Arizona in trying to induce mining interests in this country to explore those fields and to exploit manganese deposits in this country, and I quite share the Senator's viewpoint that it is necessary to do that in order that this country may become self-sufficient in time of war.

If the United States hopes to avoid being drawn into another world war, it must decide promptly upon a policy to safeguard its neutrality. Such a policy must be determined in advance. Our experience in the last war shows plainly that it cannot be improvised after the war breaks out. In August 1914, there were no laws on the statute books forbidding American citizens to sell munitions or other war materials, to loan money, or to regulate trade with belligerents. Under international law, as generally accepted at that time, the United States was not compelled to adopt such measures. The State Department sought to lay down rules governing trade in war materials and commerce. Its decisions, however, were made hurriedly under the pressure of events, and these decisions created precedents which could not be set aside later and established policies which could not be changed without committing an unneutral act. As a result, before the end of the first year of the war, the United States found itself deeply involved in a one-sided trade in war materials with the Allies, American bankers were advancing large loans, and the Government was involved in serious controversy with both the Allies and the Central Powers over alleged violation of neutral rights. By the end of 1916, neutrality had ceased to be possible.

Today, informed observers agree that the conflict between Italy and Ethiopia carries the threat of imminent war. Such a war would have repercussions in Europe and might easily start a general conflagration. If this should happen after Congress had adjourned and before the enactment of new neutrality laws, the United States would find itself in much the same situation as in 1914. While the President has fairly wide discretionary powers, there are still no laws on the statute books to forbid trade in arms and ammunition, the extension of loans and credits, or the regulation of contraband trade.

If our national policy against foreign economic entanglements is not determined by the time the first munitions ship sails to the war zone, then our situation is absolutely no different than it was at the beginning of the last war. This situation compels us to face realities and to discharge our responsibilities before it is too late.

There are those who will object to these resolutions. Some will protest the surrender of our rights as a neutral to trade in munitions and other war materials. Others will say that a small country, which is attacked by a powerful aggressive nation, should have the right to buy arms in our market. They overlook the fact that the big country can always prevent the weaker State from getting arms in any case. Still others will object to anything which recognizes the right of belligerents to declare foodstuffs or other articles "contraband of war." They will ask why we should not stand up for our rights and protect our merchants and exporters. We are prepared to meet these objections and to answer them.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS IN FAVOR OF THE RESOLUTIONS

The development of a large munitions traffic must almost inevitably be one-sided, as it was during the Great War.

There will presumably be a general agreement that such a one-sided traffic violates the spirit of neutrality in its effects.

This was the German contention throughout our period of neutrality in the last war. On the basis of a policy of strict neutrality the United States Government felt it could do nothing to interfere with this one-sided traffic. Woodrow Wilson justified the policy of the administration on the ground that embargoes on munitions and other measures of similar nature could not be adopted while a war is in progress as against the parties to it.

Therefore, the administration persisted in its attitude of the strictest neutrality which, in actual effect, had all the advantages for one set of belligerents and none for the other, and the development of the very profitable United States-Allies' trade throughout 1914, 1915, and 1916.

The impossibility of remaining strictly neutral toward both sides was pointed out by André Tardieu.

We remember the notes to London and Berlin during the war protesting to both sides against the violation of our neutral rights. Public opinion in the United States became inflamed at the ruthless destruction of unarmed merchant ships and passenger vessels. When the Lusitania was sunk in May 1915 with the loss of 124 American lives our patriots began to shout for a strong policy. President Wilson parried with the diplomatic notes and for a time Germany offered to compromise. No one, it seems, thought of asking whether private American citizens in pursuit of fat profits had a right to involve us in war. In the end we were led to the point where we had to choose. We could try to defend our neutral rights by force of arms or we could give up those rights and stay out. On April 6, 1917, Congress declared that a state of war existed between the United States and Germany.

The only logical result of attempting to enforce those neutral "rights", as they were described, is to get us into war with both sides or to force us to join hands with one violator of our rights against another. It is logical and it is crazy.

In the last war we got into the war on the side of those with whom we were doing a business of billions of dollars, yet they, too, had violated our neutral rights.

Let us see this logic ahead of time instead of later, when the only way we can be logical is to be illogical.

Let us foresee that our ships will be seized by England or bombed from the air by Germany.

Let us not claim as a right what is an impossibility.

The only way we can maintain our neutral rights is to fight the whole world.

Failing that, we can only pretend to enforce our neutral rights against one side and go to war to defend them against the other side.

The development of a large munitions traffic with one belligerent and the sinking of ships carrying munitions and contraband of war by the other belligerent tends to create a balance of industrial opinion and later of public opinion favoring our entrance into war on the side of the belligerent power which is our customer.

In addition to our general knowledge of this fact, this proposition was stated by André Tardieu and Admiral Sims.

Tardieu has written that:

> The increasing volume of Allied needs afforded the Americans almost unlimited trade possibilities. Prices had risen enormously. Profits had swollen tenfold. The Allies had become the sole customer of the United States. Loans the Allies had obtained from New York banks swept the gold of Europe into American coffers.
>
> From that time on, whether desired or not, the victory of the Allies became essential to the United States.

That, gentlemen of the Senate, is precisely what other loans of similar character may lead us to if another war comes on.

Admiral Sims has recently stated the situation in 1916 as follows:

> Thus the enormous pressure of the golden stream of war profits made us insist upon our right to make money out of the vital needs of nations fighting for their lives, and to insist upon being protected in this trade.

He added:

> The point of the whole business is this: We cannot keep out of a war and at the same time enforce the freedom of the seas—that is the freedom to make profits out of countries in a death struggle. If a war arises, we must therefore choose between two courses: Between great profits, with grave risks of war, on the one hand, or smaller profits and less risk, on the other.

The danger of having our munitions- and contraband-carrying ships sunk is greater today than ever before, because—

In a modern war almost everything is contraband and, consequently, subject to attack.

During the last war the submarines alone were so successful in sinking merchant vessels that Winston Churchill stated that toward the end of the war 1 British ship out of 4 never returned (vol. 4, p. 351, World Crisis).

During the next war the bombing of merchant ships by airplanes will supersede their destruction by submarines in volume. Merchant ships are unable to defend themselves against bombing from the air. The convoying of merchant ships by destroyers will not protect these merchant ships from aerial bombers, since destroyers cannot prevent aerial bombers from getting low enough to be effective.

The question of contraband involves the present status of international law. Mr. Charles Warren, former Assistant Attorney [General] of the United States, has summed up the present status of international law:

> When the United States entered the war in April 1917 there were at least 10 major subjects of controversy then existing between us and the Allies, and about half that number with the Central Powers, involving claims of violation of our neutral rights under international law. At the end of the war no one of these controversies had been settled. Thereafter no attempt was made to settle them by international arbitration or by diplomatic agreement (so far as is known). And on May 19, 1927, Secretary of State Kellogg exchanged notes with Great Britain, deliberately giving up any attempt to ascertain the validity of our claims against that country for violation of our neutral rights. * * *

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. When I hear the remarks which have been made about the desire to engage in the trade which brings such great profits while foreign countries are aflame with war, I am almost tempted to try to make a mathematical calculation to explain the situation.

General Sherman said, "War is hell." Anyone will, of course, have a profitable business peddling ice water in hell, and if we insist that we must have our right to engage in the hellishness going on when war breaks loose, it simply means that we desire to profit from the destruction of humanity.

That is a crude way, as I see it, of getting at the problem of whether or not we are so interested in our profits that we shall keep going to the destruction of humanity, and risk our own destruction as well.

Mr. BONE. Mr. Warren goes on to say:

> Some American writers on international law have now accepted the British claims as law, and American naval officers very generally take the same position. Thus Admiral William L. Rodgers has written, "The British practice will be the basis of the rules for the next war, to be modified during the war under the pressure of belligerent need and neutral outcry * * *." And again he has written, "So it is that at the close of each war, the international law of war is the practice in force at the end of the war. * * *"
>
> Such being the situation, it is evident that one must be a hardy optimist to expect that the United States as a neutral in any future war will be able to argue Great Britain or any other major sea power out of the views now held, or to expect any substantial modification of the policies pursued in the last war.
> It behooves this country, therefore, to be planning now, in advance of war, how it might adjust itself to the new conditions of warfare, and may obtain some benefit without making a direct challenge of the lawfulness of belligerent actions. The United States should now be considering whether it may not be necessary for us to make an entire readjustment and revision of our views as to neutral trade in time of war, and especially of our views as to the subject of contraband.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator will not think I am critical of his joint resolution or his aim or his ideal, with which I am generally in accord; but if a strong Asiatic power—a purely hypothetical case—were to attack Mexico, for example, I wonder, under those conditions, whether we would have in effect the embargo while the Asiatic power and Mexico fought it out.

Mr. BONE. I cannot answer all the hypothetical questions which the Senator may propound. It is possible that the whole world may go crazy, but I do not anticipate anything of the sort. I think any Asiatic power has plenty of troubles at home right now. Certainly disadvantages appalling to even such a power would face a nation promoting a war 6,000 miles away from its home base. But we do have a problem in Europe which is a real problem at this time.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not wish to disconcert the Senator.

Mr. BONE. I will say that the Senator from Maryland does not disconcert the Senator from Washington.

Mr. TYDINGS. The question was not a fair one to bring into the discussion to which the Senator is addressing himself. I simply mentioned it in passing to show the difficulty which might arise in connection with the passage of something which is all-encompassing.

Mr. BONE. The difficulty as I view it, Mr. President, is that any alternative to the philosophy we have discussed is terrifying in itself. The philosophy I anchor to is that inspiration and that desire which burns in the hearts of every mother and father in this country; and if there is any alternative to that, the alternative itself is so extremely terrifying that it is like another Banquo's ghost, shaking its gory locks in our international highways.

I may be wrong, and if I am, God help everybody, because certainly I know that what I am suggesting is the only humane and decent way out. It may be that the alternative will have to be adopted; and if so, we must needs pray very earnestly for our country in that sad hour.

It may be that the alternatives will have to be adopted. However, I am telling the Senate that the suggested alternatives are a challenge to our civilization. We adopted those alternatives in 1917 and 1918, and observe the tragic results. I wonder if anyone honestly wishes to continue to pay the price those alternatives now exact from our civilization? I did not find anyone coming before our Munitions Committee who viewed those alternatives dispassionately. Almost every man who appeared before us literally held up his hands and said, "God help us and save us from another war." If that philosophy is true—and nobody challenged it—then I presume to assert that every man here ought to do his utmost to prevent another war. Certainly, there cannot be a legitimate challenge to that proposal. I do not care whether that philosophy gets athwart the bows of any philosophy, big or little, or whether any politician or an group of politicians, big or little, agree with it. Humanity comes first.

I cannot believe that our people sent us here believing that we would waste these precious hours fretting over the lost profits of prospective war profiteers when the welfare of the Republic is at stake and the lives of boys are in our hands. If that be treason, then these charming fellows who put profits above patriotism can make the most of it.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the example stated by the Senator from Maryland of a conflict between Mexico and some Asiatic power. That would involve another question of foreign policy which has nothing to do with the question of neutrality. The situation stated would involve violation of the Monroe Doctrine by some outside power and would present a question which would have nothing to do with the general policy of neutrality of the United States whatsoever.

Mr. BONE. In the field of mathematics one can figure out an infinite number of formulas and prove every one of them. No man can rise on the floor of the Senate and plead for common humanity without finding some able Senators who can present problems which are not easily answered. I am interested in preventing the brutal slaughter of our boys in another war, and not in any business man's profits. I wish I could burn that thought into the soul of every Senator. The boys coming on are more important than any business. The Democratic Party will do a very healthy thing if it passes this resolution and emphasizes the fact that in the face of the supreme tragedy which threatens the world now the United States intends to maintain its neutrality. In such an action, the party would stamp itself as a real friend of humanity.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BONE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I merely desire to observe to the Senator from Washington, and he may take it as a literal expression from me, that while he has been from time to time interrupted by a disposition to show opposition to his views, the manner in which he has handled the matter has emblazoned his name in history for his speech and himself for fame with his constituents.

Mr. BONE. I am not in any wise entitled to the generous words uttered about me by my good friend from Illinois. I fear that because of the bond of friendship between us, he has been tempted to say kind things to which I am not really entitled.

I am so deeply devoted to this struggle for peace at a time when the whole world is aflame, that I can only hope that the fervor of my appeal to you may be received in the spirit of my utterances. I want to be very sure that we can go home and face the people with the knowledge that we have been drastic about the matter at this time. If any Senator will go into any State in the Union, I care not where it is, and talk about any subject under the sun, he will be given attention, but let him go to any audience and talk to them about keeping their boys safe at home, and he will get a reception from the audience which will make him know how vital the issue is.

Let me say to Senators on both sides of the aisle—Republicans and Democrats alike—if we walk away from this issue the people will not forgive us. If we should be tempted to do that, I know the people will rebuke us.

Our civilization is at stake. We went through the valley of the shadow of death 17 years ago. In God's name, let us not go through another. Let us be manly and bold enough to meet this problem before we go away from Washington. I do not care whether we go home at the end of this week or not. I am willing to stay here until January, or not go home at all, if it is necessary to settle the issue. I would rather stay here than to go home and feel that what was left undone might endanger the country.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. If I am any judge of the Senator from Washington in what he has presented to the Senate this afternoon and the necessity for the solution of this one paramount, national, and essential problem, I am led to say that above all things I think the Senator from Washington has demonstrated and has really forced upon the attention of the Senate that timely and immediate action is required. I for one feel that the Senate ought to resolve itself upon the matter at the earliest possible moment, and adopt the resolution.

I do not know whether the resolution has been reported back to the Senate or not. I submit the inquiry to the Chair. Has the resolution from the Foreign Relations Committee, which was ordered reported early this morning, been returned to us at this late hour in the afternoon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not reached the floor of the Senate yet.

Mr. LONG. I hope someone can tell us why the resolution has been all this time getting back to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is true the report was ordered this morning, and the Senate is proceeding in due course.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. BONE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to say to the Senator from Louisiana that there has been no undue delay in the matter. The Foreign Relations Committee had adjourned just before the Senate met today. The Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the eminent President pro tempore of the Senate, has been absent from the Senate all day engaged in the preparation of the report. It is a matter of supreme importance.

I think it is of utmost importance that the legislation be considered and disposed of at this session, but it is of importance second only to that that the report be properly prepared and the resolution put in proper form. Criticism does not lie that there has been any undue delay in the preparation of the report.

Mr. LONG. I did not cast any aspersion. On the contrary, the point I am trying to find out is this: From the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] I reached the conclusion, possibly erroneously, that it was a matter of moments before the resolution would be reported. I may have reckoned without my host. I may not have interpreted correctly the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas. Probably in my intense desire I was hastening along in my own mind in the thought that it would not require so much time.

However, as we now approach the hour of 5 o'clock, perhaps the committee may meet tonight or spend the balance of the evening in preparation of the report. I should like to hear the Senator from Washington conclude his remarks after the report shall have reached the floor of the Senate. I do not see our leader or the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee present at this time. I should assume that we will be recessing in a little while under ordinary circumstances. That would enable the Foreign Relations Committee, no doubt, to have the time required to prepare and file the report.

However, inasmuch as the Foreign Relations Committee is in accord with the Senator from Washington and other Senators should have expressed themselves here, it seems that the Senate is nearly unanimous, I might say, for immediate consideration of the resolution or some such legislation as the Senator from Washington is now urging. That being the case, if we are not going to get the report this afternoon, apparently we ought to allow the Foreign Relations Committee to have the time between now and tomorrow morning in which to file the report.

May I inquire whether or not there is any disposition to proceed this afternoon beyond our usual time?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In the absence of the chairman of that committee, I should like to make this observation regarding the status of the matter in the Foreign Relations Committee.

The committee agreed upon a report this morning, although there is a minority in the committee which is opposed to the report. In agreeing to the report the committee made numerous suggestions bearing upon the textual expression of the neutrality rules which we are proposing to recommend.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I want to say that we have had the constructive cooperation of the State Department and we have endeavored to proceed in harmony with the State Department so far as we could. I have no doubt that the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is undertaking to be perfectly sure, insofar as it is possible, that the report shall meet the views of the State Department. He may not succeed entirely in that aspect, but when the resolution finally comes to the floor of the Senate—and it is a situation in which haste might have made waste—I want to say to the Senator from Washington and to the Senator from Louisiana that while it will be no guaranty that our neutrality will be protected under all circumstances, while it will be no panacea guaranteeing us against exposure to war, yet in my very humble judgment, based upon my study of the matter both in the Foreign Relations Committee and in the Munitions Committee, I would say that it will draw 90 percent of the hazards out of the situation so far as the United States is concerned, and I am unable to understand why any man should not want to do that thing.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator from Louisiana in the form of information? Thanking the Senator from Washington, I add to what has been said by the able Senator from Michigan that it is necessary to make this observation:

The measure which is reported from the Foreign Relations Committee will call for placing together, in composite form, matter which at the outset appeared to be a bit inconsistent; and therefore that is being done, and is occupying a length of time which has made it a little impracticable to have the return at this hour.

In answer to the Senator from Louisiana and others interested, I think it is safe to say that it is understood that tomorrow the report will be here. There cannot be anything reported this evening; but tomorrow the document, to the extent that it is to be considered at all as necessary, will be brought in, and will embody very much what the able Senator from Michigan says it will contain. I desire to have it understood that I have opposed it, I opposed it in the committee, and I shall probably be found opposing it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make one suggestion in which I am sure the Senator from Illinois will concur? In the absence of the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I presume to ask unanimous consent that the committee be permitted to make a report during the recess, to be printed.

Mr. CLARK. That is what I was about to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked that the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee be permitted to make a report during the recess of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Michigan is most reassuring; and even if we could realize only the major part of that proportion of the element of safety which he suggests our country would breathe easier, and every mother in America would feel safer and happier when we go home. I want my brethren to realize what the subject we are now discussing means to the mothers of America. They are the ones for whom I speak as I stand on the floor of the Senate this afternoon—the mothers of America. Not business men, not world trade, but the mothers of America are the ones for whom I plead.

I shall go back now and finish reading this statement of Charles Warren, because all I am reading to you in this statement is just cold, routine stuff. It goes to the very heart and soul of this matter and reveals the sordid dollars-and-cents aspect of those things which were supposed to be high and holy causes in 1917.

It was from the vast extension of the term "contraband" by both the Allied and the Central Powers that most of our difficulties arose from 1914 to 1917; for it was because of that extension, combined with the expansion of the doctrine of continuous voyage, that the Allies claimed their enlarged rights to interfere with our trade with other neutral countries. * * * On the British list of contraband, compiled November 5, 1915, there were 299 articles of absolute contraband and 78 of conditional contraband. Later, conditional contraband disappeared out of the picture, and in the British list presented to Parliament April 13, 1916, there were 170 categories of absolute contraband, representing, however, far more articles than the 1915 list, owing to the fact that many separate articles were combined in each category. France and Germany paralleled the British actions and made equally extensive additions to the list of contraband.

* * * * * * *

The belligerents justified these extraordinary extensions of contraband on the ground that under modern conditions of warfare food, chemicals, clothing, and in fact anything except sporting goods and luxuries, supplied to the enemy population had the same effect as supplies to the enemy army, and were as important aids to winning the war as the primary form of contraband, viz, arms and munitions.

The conclusion which Mr. Warren and other authorities on international law have reached is that the only way in which we can defend our neutral rights in another war is to enter that war. If we want to keep out of the next war, Mr. Warren suggests, therefore, "that we remit our challenge to the right of interference with our neutral trade * * *."

Allowing the first cargo of munitions to be shipped (in default of any law forbidding such shipment) determines our foreign policy throughout the course of a whole war by creating a precedent.

When Germany suggested to the Department of State that the United States do something to stop the one-sided traffic in arms, this Government replied that anything it did to interfere with normal and legitimate trade during the progress of the war would constitute a change in policy that would very detrimentally affect one side and therefore would be unneutral. This was clearly indicated in the Department of State's answer to the German note of April 4, 1915, as follows:

In the third place, I note with sincere regret that, in discussing the sale and exportation of arms by citizens of the United States to the enemies of Germany, Your Excellency seems to be under the impression that it was within the choice of the Government of the United States, notwithstanding its professed neutrality and its diligent efforts to maintain it in other particulars, to inhibit this trade, and that its failure to do so manifested an unfair attitude toward Germany. This Government holds, as I believe Your Excellency is aware, and as it is constrained to hold in view of the present indisputable doctrines of accepted international law, that any change in its own laws of neutrality during the progress of a war which would affect unequally the relations of the United States with the nations at war would be an unjustifiable departure from the principle of strict neutrality by which it has consistently sought to direct its actions, and I respectfully submit that none of the circumstances urged in Your Excellency's memorandum alters the principle involved. The placing of an embargo on the trade in arms at the present time would constitute such a change and be a direct violation of the neutrality of the United States.

Officials in the Departments of State and Commerce in the fall of 1916 admitted that the most effective discretionary power conferred upon the President by Congress in September 1916, to retaliate against Britain's illegal interferences with our neutral trade—i. e., a virtual embargo in munitions—would have been too detrimental to our inflated munitions trade. It was easier to continue to bear with England's interferences with our neutral trade than to interrupt the munitions trade.

In discussing the best use that could be made of such discretionary powers as a means of retaliating against the British actions, the Secretary of Commerce remarked with reference to the placing of an embargo on war materials:

The embargo might prove in some cases more injurious to American manufacturers than to the countries at war, and might, in practice, effect the cancelation of a contract more highly regarded by the American concern than by the British Government.

This remark was made at the height of a two and one-fifth billion dollar increase in our war trade, and at a time when it was quite clear to us that England's intention was to continue her uninterrupted violation of our neutral rights. A complete subordination of our neutral rights of trade to our industrial interests was admitted by the Department of Commerce in these words:

We have suffered the effect of embargoes and orders in council for a long period—under protest but without retaliation. The restrictions are no more hurtful now than a year and a half ago.

Thus, it was clearly recognized that an embargo can be imposed only before the war traffic gets started. Once it has started, there is no stopping it.

Our own governmental officials recognized the important effect of which our insistence upon shipping munitions to the Allies (from which source of supply Germany was completely debarred), and our consequent failure to utilize the bargaining power which we possessed to force Britain to allow shipments of food to Germany, had on the German policy of submarine warfare.

When, on February 4, 1915, the German Admiralty proclaimed its intention of waging submarine warfare in the waters surrounding Great Britain and Ireland as a measure of retaliation against Great Britain's illegal interference with trade between neutrals and Germany, the United States Government became very concerned, and addressed a note to Germany expressing its concern. Referring to this note, Ambassador Gerard, in Germany, communicated as follows to the Secretary of State:

* * * handed note embodying yours to Secretary Foreign Affairs. He will send written answer, but am convinced from conversation with him German proclamation will be withdrawn if England will adopt Declaration of London or allow food to enter for German civil population. Suggest you can help this by suggesting that Congress will put embargo on export of arms unless England consents.

But the Department of State wired its regrets.

Embargoes are effective in keeping neutral nations from involvement in war. Only one of the European neutral countries which declared embargoes during the last war was drawn into that war. That was Italy, and Italy did not become involved as a result of the sinking of any of her ships.

SUMMARY OF OBSERVATIONS

A munitions traffic is almost inevitably one-sided. It violates the spirit of neutrality. It is practically impossible to preserve neutrality without declaring war on both sides. To attempt to do so becomes pretense. The development of such a traffic tends to commit the Nation to the side of its customer. The danger of becoming involved in the war-time disputes concerning shipments of contraband and munitions is greater today than ever before, because there has been no agreement about such matters and because the development of great fleets of bombing planes will in the next war begin where the submarines left off. Allowing the first shipment of munitions (in default of the passage of this resolution) will determine our foreign policy and bring the involvements of the last war. Our own governmental officials were aware of the fact that we did not use our discretionary powers to secure our rights from Great Britain because of the damage this might have inflicted on our munitions trade. Our own governmental officials recognized the important effect of our one-sided munitions traffic on driving Germany to renewed submarine warfare. Embargoes are effective in keeping neutral nations from involvement in war. During the last war Italy was the only neutral drawn in of all those which had embargoes.

COMMENT ON POSSIBLE OBJECTIONS

The objection may be made that we would lose a profitable munitions trade. In case of a prolonged war that would be true. In case of a short war we would only get all the difficulties and controversies without much profit.

As Admiral Sims stated it, our choice here is frankly and simply this: "If a war arises, we must choose between two courses: Between great profits, with grave risks of war on the one hand, or smaller profits and less risk on the other."

A sudden inflation in a few industries, with the constant threat of a sudden collapse of these inflated industries upon the close of a European war, is not a healthy industrial development, even regardless of the risk to the nation which is involved.

Our proposal on contraband trade differs from some introduced in the House recently forbidding the shipment of contraband. This permits that shipment to the extent the other countries and our own private exporters are willing to assume the risk for its transportation.

Senate Resolution 120 does not place an embargo on contraband. If other nations want and need cotton or wheat or machinery, they can purchase them and make their own arrangements about securing their safe shipment. If they do not need them, they will not buy them in any case. If they do need them, they will be willing to take the risks for them.

We have seen that thing pictured so tragically in this country, the great inflation of industry and farming in the United States and its collapse after the war.

The proposition is simply that the United States Government withholds protection to exporters of contraband on the ground that any attempt to enforce our "rights" means almost certain involvement in war, especially today when aerial bombing will be used to sink merchant vessels on a large scale. It is better to avoid this attempt to defend our private exporters, and to avoid the consequences of war than not to do so.

The modern situation is different from that prevailing before and justifies a change in policy. Now practically everything is contraband. Now practically every ship stands a good chance of being sunk. The price of attempting to insist against both sides that these ships should not be sunk is too high. That price is entry into a war.

The resolution does not leave it optional with the President to impose these controls, for the reason that the policy must be fixed before a war breaks out. A President who delays will find that a later decision will be considered an unneutral act. Once a large traffic in munitions has grown up, it is asking a great deal of a President to act in opposition to it. That duty should be undertaken by Congress before such a traffic grows up.

CONCLUSION

The resolution provides that this Nation shall not become involved in entangling foreign economic alliances at the one moment when they are most dangerous to our peace.

Mr. President, the joint resolutions are urgent. I trust the Committee on Foreign Relations will bring them out as speedily as possible, and that we may get immediate action on them. And I thank my colleagues for the close attention they have given to my remarks.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 392) making appropriations to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to defray certain expenses incident to conventions in the District of Columbia in August 1935, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7167) to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, authorize appropriations, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. KING, Mr. COPELAND, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE CHAMPLAIN NEAR WEST SWANTON, VT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2681) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt., and for other purposes, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain, at or near West Swanton, Vt., authorized to be built by the State Board of Public Works of the State of Vermont, by an act of Congress approved June 18, 1934, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Champlain at or near West Swanton, Vt."

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senate to consider at this time the conference report on the river and harbor bill, which is now on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the report of the committee conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was submitted by Mr. COPELAND on the 16th instant and printed at pages 13422, 13423 of the RECORD of that date.

Mr. COPELAND. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. There is an amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate amendment no. 71 to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71 to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and concurring therein with an amendment as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of controlling floods, improving navigation, regulating the flow of the streams of the United States, providing for storage and for the delivery of the stored waters thereof, for the reclamation of public lands and Indian reservations, and other beneficial uses, and for the generation of electric energy as a means of financially aiding and assisting such undertakings, the projects known as "Parker Dam" on the Colorado River and "Grand Coulee Dam", on the Columbia River, are hereby authorized and adopted, and all contracts and agreements which have been executed in connection therewith are hereby validated and ratified, and the President, acting through such agents as he may designate, is hereby authorizd to construct, operate, and maintain dams, structures, canals, and incidental works necessary to such projects, and in connection therewith to make and enter into any and all necessary contracts including contracts amendatory of or supplemental to those hereby validated and ratified. The construction by the Secretary of the Interior of a dam in and across the Colorado River at or near Head Gate Rock, Ariz., and structures, canals, and incidental works necessary in connection therewith is hereby authorized, and none of the waters conserved, used, or appropriated under the works hereby authorized shall be charged against the waters allocated to the upper basin by the Colorado River Compact, nor shall any priority be established against such upper basin by reason of such conservation, use, or appropriation; nor shall said dam, structures, canals, and works, or any of them, be used as the basis of making any such charge, or establishing any such priority or right, and all contracts between the United States and the users of said water from or by means of said instrumentalities shall provide against the making of any such charge or claim or the establishment of any priority right or claim to any part or share of the water of the Colorado River allocated to the Upper Basin by the Colorado River Compact, and all use of said instrumentalities shall be in compliance with the conditions and provisions of said Colorado River Compact and the Boulder Canyon Project Act.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is all that need be done to complete action on the bill.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 392) making appropriations to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to defray certain expenses incident to conventions in the District of Columbia in August 1935, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FARM-MORTGAGE RELIEF

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, before the present session shall adjourn, I hope that a vote may be taken in the Senate on the so-called "Frazier-Lemke bill", Senate bill 212, to refinance distressed farm-mortgage indebtedness. I desire to place in the RECORD, resolutions from two more Kansas county national farm-loan associations, endorsing the measure.

It is not necessary, nor is it my intention, to make an extended speech upon the measure to refinance farm-mortgage indebtedness. I believe the Senate and the country understand the purpose and provisions of the bill. The Frazier-Lemke bill proposes to refinance existing farm mortgage indebtedness at 1½-percent interest, and 1½-percent principal on the amortization plan. In the long run agriculture, the Federal Government, and the people of the United States will profit by the operations of this bill, after it becomes a law.

In case it has escaped the attention of Members of the Senate, and of the people of the country, I desire to call attention to the fact that probably no measure this Congress has considered comes before us with as nearly Nation-wide approval. And that Nation-wide approval is approval of official record.

Mr. President, 29 State legislatures have memorialized Congress to enact the Frazier-Lemke farm-mortgage refinancing bill into law. In five other States, one branch of the legislature has adopted a resolution to the same effect.

The resolution from the Legislature of the State of Kansas has been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by myself. Other State legislatures which have adopted similar resolutions or memorials to Congress include: North Dakota, Idaho, South Carolina, Montana, California, Colorado, Ohio, Nevada, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Michigan, Wisconsin, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Illinois, Indiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Minnesota, Arizona, Iowa, Wyoming, North Carolina, Arkansas, New Mexico, New Jersey, Washington. One branch of the legislature in each of the following States has adopted similar resolutions or memorials: New York, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Alabama, Missouri.

In other words, 34 of the 48 States in this Union have officially approved this legislation, through members of their legislatures directly representing the people of those States. And I would call your attention to the fact that not all of these States are agricultural States. You will find several of the largest industrial States in those lists.

Also, Mr. President, this is not a measure to encourage farmers to go into debt. It proposes to make it easier for indebted farmers to get out of debt. I believe this bill should be passed. I have been urging its passage, in committee, in the Senate, and in every way possible for several years past. I, for one, am ready for a vote right now.

I send the resolutions to the desk, and ask unanimous consent they be printed as a part of my remarks at this point.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the Franklin County National Farm Loan Association at its annual meeting held at Ottawa, Kans., on January 8, 1935

Whereas under present conditions the profits of the farming business are too low to enable the farmer to make a living and pay interest on the enormous volume of mortgage indebtedness which rests upon the farm homes of the country; and

Whereas this condition has arisen as a result of conditions over which the farmer has had no control and for which he is in no way responsible; and

Whereas the Government has loaned billions of dollars for the relief of banks, railroads, insurance companies, and other corporations at a rate of interest far below that allowed to farmers: Be it

Resolved, That we, the Franklin County National Farm Loan Association of Ottawa, Kans., hereby endorse the Frazier-Lemke farm-mortgage bill now pending in Congress, having for its purpose the reduction of interest on farm mortgages to 1½ percent.

As present deplorable conditions were brought about by a deliberate process of deflation which threw the losses growing out of the war on the producing classes, we are convinced that the only logical means of restoring conditions to a just and equitable basis is by a process of deflation; be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the Senators from the State of Kansas, our Representatives, and to other parties who may be interested in the questions involved.

THE SABETHA NATIONAL FARM LOAN ASSOCIATION,
Sabetha, Kans.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER:

We, the members of the Sabetha National Farm Loan Association, in order that we may aid and assist in the welfare of agriculture and the many people who depend thereon for livelihood and the sustenance of life, have hereby unanimously voted at a meeting held on January 8, 1935, that the following resolution be adopted:

Resolved, That the secretary of the Sabetha National Farm Loan Association at annual meeting held January 8, 1935, be instructed to request of the Honorable United States Senators ARTHUR CAPPER and GEORGE MCGILL that they give their undivided support to the Lemke bill which calls for a lower rate of interest on farm mortgages. Also we are in favor of the McNary-Hogan bill.

Whereas we the undersigned officers and board of directors of the Sabetha National Farm Loan Association have hereunto affixed our names.

STABILIZATION OF THE BITUMINOUS COAL MINING INDUSTRY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9100, to stabilize the bituminous coal mining industry, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] to proceed to the consideration of House bill 9100, to stabilize the bituminous coal mining industry, and so forth.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. NYE obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to state in advance, in explanation of the vote I shall cast on the bill, that I am going to vote against the Guffey bill, but I have no objection to the measure being presented to the Senate in order to have a straight out-and-out vote on it. Therefore, if I vote with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] to permit the bill to be brought before the Senate, it will be done with the mental reservation that I shall vote against the bill when it comes to a final vote.

MUNITIONS INDUSTRY—REPORT

Mr. NYE, from the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry, submitted a preliminary report on war-time taxation and price control, pursuant to Senate Resolution 206, Seventy-third Congress, to make certain investigations concerning the manufacture and sale of arms and other war munitions, which was ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 944, with illustrations.

In submitting this report, Mr. President, which is probably the last of a series of reports which the committee has presented during the present session of the Congress, I feel that a statement concerning the status of the investigation, the committee's reports and investigation, is in order. For the past several weeks the committee, in the interest of economy, with its limited funds, has refrained from holding public hearings, and has so conducted its inquiry that it will be enabled to resume hearings in December or January.

COMMERCE IN MUNITIONS, ETC., IN TIME OF WAR

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to submit a report from the Foreign Relations Committee with regard to Senate Resolutions 99, 100, and 120, and Senate bill 2998; and I should like to make a brief statement, if the Senator from North Dakota will yield for that purpose.

Mr. NYE. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the report be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Senate Report No. 1419

The Committee on Foreign Relations has had under consideration Senate Joint Resolutions 99, 100, and 120, and Senate bill 2998, and hereby reports, in lieu of said bill and joint resolutions, the following joint resolution, with the recommendation that such substitute joint resolution do pass:

Senate Joint Resolution 173

Joint resolution providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent states; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war; and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war.

Resolved, etc., That upon the outbreak or during the progress of war between, or among, two or more foreign states, the President shall proclaim such fact, and it shall thereafter be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any port of such belligerent states, or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for the use of, a belligerent country.

The President, by proclamation, shall definitely enumerate the arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the export of which is prohibited by this act.

The President may, from time to time, by proclamation, extend such embargo upon the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to other States as and when they may become involved in such war.

Whoever, in violation of any of the provisions of this section, shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States, or any of its possessions, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and the property, vessel, or vehicle containing the same shall be subject to the provisions of sections 1 to 8, inclusive, title 6, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 223–225; U. S. C., title 22, secs. 238–245).

In the case of the forfeiture of any arms, ammunition, or implements of war by reason of a violation of this act, no public or private sale shall be required; but such arms, ammunition, or implements of war shall be delivered to the Secretary of War for such use or disposal thereof as shall be approved by the President of the United States.

When in the judgment of the President the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist he shall revoke the same and the provisions hereof shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act—

(a) The term "Board" means the National Munitions Control Board which is hereby established to carry out the provisions of this act. The Board shall consist of the Secretary of State, who shall be chairman and executive officer of the Board; the Secretary of the Treasury; the Secretary of War; the Secretary of the Navy; the Secretary of Commerce; the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate; and the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, or some member of each committee whom the chairman of the respective committees may designate. Except as otherwise provided in this act, or by other law, the administration of this act is vested in the Department of State;

(b) The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense, includes the several States and Territories, the insular possessions of the United States (including the Philippine Islands), the Canal Zone, and the District of Columbia;

(c) The term "person" includes a partnership, company, association, or corporation, as well as a natural person.

Within 90 days after the effective date of this act, or upon first engaging in business, every person who engages in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing any of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war referred to in this act, whether as an exporter, importer, manufacturer, or dealer, shall register with the Secretary of State his name, or business name, principal place of business, and places of business in the United States, and a list of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he manufactures, imports, or exports.

Every person required to register under this section shall notify the Secretary of State of any change in the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he exports, imports, or manufactures; and upon such notification the Secretary of State shall issue to such person an amended certificate of registration, free of charge, which shall remain valid until the date of expiration of the original certificate. Every person required to register under the provisions of this section shall pay a registration fee of $500, and upon receipt of such fee the Secretary of State shall issue a registration certificate valid for 5 years, which shall be renewable for further periods of 5 years upon the payment of each renewal of a fee of $500.

It shall be unlawful for any person to export, or attempt to export, from the United States any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act to any other country or to import, or attempt to import, to the United States from any other country any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act without first having obtained a license therefor.

Licenses shall be issued to persons who have registered as provided for, except in cases of export or import licenses where exportation of arms, ammunition, or implements of war would be in violation of this act or any other law of the United States, or of a treaty to which the United States is a party, in which cases such licenses shall not be issued.

The board shall be called by the chairman and shall hold at least one meeting a year.

No purchase of arms, ammunition, and implements of war shall be made on behalf of the United States by any officer, executive department, or independent establishment of the Government from any person who shall have failed to register under the provisions of this act.

The Board shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such report shall contain such information and data collected by the Board as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the control of trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war. It shall include a list of all persons required to register under the provisions of this act, and full information concerning the licenses issued hereunder.

The Secretary of State shall promulgate such rules and regulations with regard to the enforcement of this section as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions.

SEC. 3. Whenever the President shall issue the proclamation provided for in section 1 of this act, thereafter it shall be unlawful for any American vessel to carry any arms, ammunition, or implements of war to any port of the belligerent countries named in such proclamation as being at war, or to any neutral port for transshipment to, or for the use of, a belligerent country.

Whoever, in violation of the provisions of this section, shall take, attempt to take, or shall authorize, hire, or solicit another to take any such vessel carrying such cargo out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both; and, in addition, such vessel, her tackle, apparel, furniture, equipment, and the arms, ammunition, and implements of war on board shall be forfeited to the United States.

When the President finds the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation, and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 4. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall have cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, whether requiring clearance or not, is about to carry out of a port of the United States, or its possessions, men or fuel, arms, ammunition, implements of war, or other supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a foreign belligerent nation, but the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel as provided for by section 1, title V, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. —; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 31), and if, in the President's judgment, such action will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign nations, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to require the owner, master, or person in command thereof, before departing from a port of the United States, or any of its possessions, for a foreign port, to give a bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as he shall deem proper, conditioned that the vessel will not deliver the men, or the cargo, or any part thereof, to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation; and, if the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall find that a vessel, domestic or foreign, in a port of the United States, or one of its possessions, has previously cleared from such port during such war and delivered its cargo or any part thereof to a warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent nation, he may prohibit the departure of such vessel during the duration of the war.

SEC. 5. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use of the ports and territorial waters of the United States, or of its possessions, by the submarines of a foreign nation will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign nations, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any such submarine to enter a port or the territorial waters of the United States or any of its possessions, or to depart therefrom, except under such conditions and subject to such limitations as the President may prescribe. When, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 6. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that the maintenance of peace between the United States and foreign nations, or the protection of the lives of citizens of the United States, or the protection of the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or the security of the United States requires that the American citizens should refrain from traveling as passengers on the vessels of any belligerent nation, he shall so proclaim, and thereafter no citizen of the United States shall travel on any vessel of any belligerent nation except at his own risk, unless in accordance with such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe: Provided however, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to a citizen traveling on the vessel of a belligerent whose voyage was begun in advance of the date of the President's proclamation, and who had no opportunity to discontinue his voyage after that date: And provided further, That they shall not apply under 90 days after the date of the President's proclamation to a citizen returning from a foreign country to the United States or to any of its possessions. When, in the President's judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

SEC. 7. In every case of the violation of any of the provisions of this act where a specific penalty is not herein provided, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 8. If any of the provisions of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 9. The sum of $20,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of State in administering this act.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the foregoing joint resolution (S. J. Res. 173) providing for the prohibition of the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to belligerent countries; the prohibition of the transportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war by vessels of the United States for the use of belligerent States; for the registration and licensing of persons engaged in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing arms, ammunition, or implements of war, and restricting travel by American citizens on belligerent ships during war, which was read twice by its title and ordered to be placed on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not expect a vote on this matter tonight. For that reason I have delayed the Senate to have the report read into the RECORD, so that the joint resolution may be read by all Senators and considered by them, subject to such amendments as they may desire to offer.

It is unnecessary for me to say that this is a very vital subject. While preparing this report and attempting to bring together the statements in the joint resolution as agreed to by the committee, I know there has been some random discussion of the question of neutrality. When a number of measures were referred to the Foreign Relations Committee, consisting of Senate Joint Resolutions 99, 100, and 120, and a bill by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the committee gave very careful consideration to the subject, and appointed a subcommittee to confer and consider these matters with the committee of the Department of State which had been considering them for probably a year.

I may say that I was somewhat surprised, as possibly some other members of the committee were surprised, to find that the question of neutrality is quite a complex problem. I wish to say, on behalf of the subcommittee and the full committee, that we had a number of meetings during a period of 5 weeks, in which the State Department very intimately and confidentially exposed to our committee all the questions involved.

The committee invited the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and the other Senators who had introduced joint resolutions on the subject, to be present at all the conferences. I may be pardoned for saying that there was a sincere endeavor on behalf of every one present to reach an understanding. It was quite a difficult matter. I have not time to go into the difficulties which arise in determining neutrality when all the governments of the world are interested in the question. I will say to you, sir, that it was one of the most interesting and frankest discussions that have ever taken place. I think those who introduced the joint resolutions will agree with me in that statement.

In the very nature of things, there is a fundamental difference of view. I think I may as well be frank as to that fundamental difference. It is as to whether everything should be mandatory, fixed, and inflexible, or whether we should vest in the Chief Executive a discretion. That is a fundamental question on which there are differences. We cannot harmonize those differences, and yet I think the Senators who will read this joint resolution will find that there has been a great degree of harmonization.

So far as concerns the export of arms and ammunition and instruments of war to belligerent states after the President shall by proclamation have declared that they are belligerent states, the joint resolution provides that there shall be no more exports of arms and ammunition to any of the belligerents. That is mandatory.

We next took up the proposition involved in the bill of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] as to registration and licensing of those engaged in the manufacture, export, or importation of arms and ammunition. That bill has for its sole purpose the furnishing of information. Its purpose is to disclose who manufacture arms and ammunition, where they export them, and from what places they import them, so that information on the subject may be available. It provides that everyone in the United States who is engaged in the manufacture, exportation, or importation of arms and ammunition shall register with the Secretary of State, stating that he is engaged in that business, stating the arms and munitions which he manufactures or which he generally exports or imports, so that we may know the facts That is all of that subject. It is provided absolutely that those who register shall be entitled to a license to manufacture, to export, or to import, except in violation of the law of this country, which includes any treaty we may have made.

That, in brief, is the export clause. That, in brief, is the registration clause.

There was quite a difference of opinion as to whether or not it should be mandatory that an American ship should not carry arms and ammunition and instruments of war during a period of war. There are many phases of that subject. There are many oceans. It might not be necessary to exert such authority with regard to the Pacific if the war were on the Atlantic. I am not arguing that question. On that subject we reported that it should be made unlawful for our ships to carry arms and ammunition to a belligerent country.

As to the passport provision in the bill and joint resolutions referred to us, there were many difficulties. Some had been issued years ago or months ago. Some had not expired. Some had been visaed by foreign countries. The holders of them were everywhere. So, with regard to that subject, it is declared in the substitute measure that any citizen of the United States traveling on a belligerent ship travels at his own risk, except that after the President shall have declared by proclamation that war exists between certain countries, our citizens in those countries shall have 90 days in which to leave them and come home on any ship they may find.

We already have on the statute books laws with regard to the use of our ports by belligerent ships. They are entitled to come into our ports for 24 hours for the purpose of obtaining food and going out again. We do not change the law in that respect, except there has been added to it a provision that if the Secretary of State shall have reason to believe that such a ship may be transporting arms, ammunition, or instruments of war to a belligerent government, or for transhipment to it, or for its use, he may prohibit the departure of the ship until it shall have given sufficient bond to satisfy our Government.

As to submarines, special provision is made. It is expressly provided that because of the peculiar character of submarines and the difficulty of knowing when they come into a port, how long they are there, and when they leave, the President may make special restrictions so as to insure that they shall not violate the laws of our ports.

I think, sir, that is the substance of the proposed legislation.

I wish to say frankly that there is one phase of the subject submitted to us on which we did not report, and that is legislation with regard to credit. We spent 5 weeks with the Secretary of State, the Under Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. R. Walton Moore, and others. It is an involved subject, particularly with regard to the collection and the refunding of debts due to us.

We felt that in the long run, taking into consideration the prohibitions imposed against exportations, the confiscation of ships which might violate the law, the punishment by a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment for 5 years, or both, and in view of the complicated nature of the question of refunding the debts under existing law, we were not prepared intelligently to deal with that subject but would have to wait until we knew more about it.

Mr. President, this is the report as submitted by the committee, practically unanimously, after a very sincere effort for 5 or 6 weeks, participated in by those who introduced the joint resolutions and the bill.

I wish to say, as suggested to me by our leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] desired to be registered as opposed to any legislation on this subject at this session of the Congress. I may say that there are other Senators who feel the same way; they do not desire to have any legislation enacted at this session on this subject, because they do not feel that they are prepared, by reason of the subject being so involved, to pass on it at this time.

The report does not commit any member of the Committee on Foreign Relations. The members have a right to express their own views in the matter. Speaking personally, however, as chairman of the committee, knowing that we have done the best we could in a very difficult situation, much more difficult than I realized when I started on it, and more difficult than some of the other Senators realized, I hope the recommendation of the committee will be accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY].

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I shall not stand in the way of a vote to consider the bill referred to in the motion of the Senator from West Virginia. However, I do desire to give notice of my expectation on the convening of the Senate tomorrow, if others should not do it, to move to temporarily lay aside the so-called "coal bill" and to take up the neutrality legislation.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I suggest that that statement is unnecessary, in view of my former statement.

In order (1) to facilitate the disposition of the surplus power of the Corporation according to the policies set forth in this Act; (2) to give effect to the priority herein accorded to States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations in the purchase of such power by enabling them to acquire facilities for the distribution of such power; (3) at the same time to preserve existing distribution facilities as going concerns and avoid duplication of such facilities, the Board is authorized to advise and cooperate with and assist, by extending credit for a period of not exceeding five years to, States, counties, municipalities, and nonprofit organizations situated within transmission distance from any dam where such power is generated by the Corporation in acquiring, improving, and operating (a) existing distribution facilities and incidental works, including generating plants; and (b) interconnecting transmission lines; or in acquiring any interest in such facilities, incidental works, and lines.'

"SEC. 8. That said Act be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding to section 14 of said Act the following:

Such data shall be reported to the Congress by the Board from time to time with appropriate analyses and recommendations, and, so far as practicable, shall be made available to the Federal Power Commission and other Federal and State agencies which may be concerned with the administration of legislation relating to the generation, transmission, or distribution of electric energy and chemicals useful to agriculture. It is hereby declared to be the policy of this Act that, in order, as soon as practicable, to make the power projects self-supporting and self-liquidating, the surplus power shall be sold at rates which, in the opinion of the Board, when applied to the normal capacity of the Authority's power facilities, will produce gross revenues in excess of the cost of production of said power and in addition to the statement of the cost of power at each power station as required by section 9 (a) of the "Tennessee Valley Act of 1933", the Board shall file with each annual report, a statement of the total cost of all power generated by it at all power stations during each year, the average cost of such power per kilowatt-hour, the rates at which sold, and to whom sold, and copies of all contracts for the sale of power.'

With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation is authorized to issue bonds not to exceed in the aggregate $50,000,000 outstanding at any one time, which bonds may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds to carry out the provisions of Sec. 7 of this amendatory Act. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods not more than fifty years from the date of their issue, may be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated therein, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 3½ per centum per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, shall be issued in such manner and amount, and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such bonds shall not be sold at such prices or on such terms as to afford an investment yield to the holders in excess of 3½ per centum per annum. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation should not pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such Act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall have power to purchase such bonds in the open market at any time and at any price. No bonds shall be issued hereunder to provide funds or bonds necessary for the performance of any proposed contract negotiated by the Corporation under the authority of section 7 of this amendatory Act until the proposed contract shall have been submitted to and approved by the Federal Power Commission. When any such proposed contract shall have been submitted to the said Commission, the matter shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and the Commission's determination of the matter shall be final. The authority of the Corporation to issue bonds hereunder shall expire at the end of 5 years from the date when this section as amended herein becomes law, except that such bonds may be issued at any time after the expiration of said period to provide bonds or funds necessary for the performance of any contract entered into by the Corporation, prior to the expiration of said period, under the authority of section 7 of this amendatory Act.'

"SEC. 10. That section 26 of said Act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'Sec. 26. Commencing July 1, 1936, the proceeds for each fiscal year derived by the Board from the sale of power or any other products manufactured by the Corporation, and from any other activities of the Corporation including the disposition of any real or personal property, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States at the end of each calendar year, save and except such part of such proceeds as in the opinion of the Board shall be necessary for the Corporation in the operation of dams and reservoirs, in conducting its business in generating, transmitting, and distributing electric energy and in manufacturing, selling, and distributing fertilizer and fertilizer ingredients. A continuing fund of $1,000,000.00 is also excepted from the requirements of this section and may be withheld by the Board to defray emergency expenses and to insure continuous operation. Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the use by the Board, after June 30, 1936, of proceeds accruing prior to July 1, 1936, for the payment of obligations lawfully incurred prior to such latter date.'

"SEC. 11. That said Act be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding after section 26 of said Act a new section, as follows:

"'SEC. 26a. The unified development and regulation of the Tennessee River system requires that no dam, appurtenant works, or other obstruction, affecting navigation, flood control, or public lands or reservations shall be constructed, and thereafter operated or maintained across, along, or in the said river or any of its tributaries until plans for such construction, operation, and maintenance shall have been submitted to and approved by the Board; and the construction, commencement of construction, operation, or maintenance of such structures without such approval is hereby prohibited. When such plans shall have been approved, deviation therefrom either before or after completion of such structures is prohibited unless the modification of such plans has previously been submitted to and approved by the Board.

"'In the event the Board shall, within sixty days after their formal submission to the Board, fail to approve any plans or modifications, as the case may be, for construction, operation, or maintenance of any such structures on the Little Tennessee River, the above requirements shall be deemed satisfied, if upon application to the Secretary of War, with due notice to the Corporation, and hearing thereon, such plans or modifications are approved by the said Secretary of War as reasonably adequate and effective for the unified development and regulation of the Tennessee River system.

"'Such construction, commencement of construction, operation, or maintenance of any structures or parts thereof in violation of the provisions of this section may be prevented, and the removal or discontinuation thereof required by the injunction or order of any district court exercising jurisdiction in any district in which such structures or parts thereof may be situated, and the Corporation is hereby authorized to bring appropriate proceedings to this end.

"'The requirements of this section shall not be construed to be a substitute for the requirements of any other law of the United States or of any State, now in effect or hereafter enacted, but shall be in addition thereto, so that any approval, license, permit, or other sanction now or hereafter required by the provisions of any such law for the construction, operation, or maintenance of any structures whatever, except such as may be constructed, operated, or maintained by the Corporation, shall be required, notwithstanding the provisions of this section.'

"SEC. 12. That said Act be, and the same is hereby, further amended by adding at the end of said Act a new section, as follows:

"'SEC. 31. This Act shall be liberally construed to carry out the purposes of Congress to provide for the disposition of and make needful rules and regulations respecting Government properties entrusted to the Authority, provide for the national defense, improve navigation, control destructive floods, and promote interstate commerce and the general welfare, but no real estate shall be held except what is necessary in the opinion of the Board to carry out plans and projects actually decided upon requiring the use of such land: Provided, That any land purchased by the Authority and not necessary to carry out plans and projects actually decided upon shall be sold by the Authority as agent of the United States, after due advertisement, at public auction to the highest bidder, or at private sale as provided in Section 3 of this amendatory Act.'

"SEC. 13. That section 4 of said Act of May 18, 1933 (48 Stat. 58), be amended by adding subsection (l) as follows:

"'(l) Shall have power to advise and cooperate in the readjustment of the population displaced by the construction of dams, the acquisition of reservoir areas, the protection of watersheds, the acquisition of rights-of-way, and other necessary acquisitions of land, in order to effectuate the purposes of the Act; and may cooperate with Federal, State, and local agencies to that end.'

"SEC. 14. That subsection (b) of section 9 of said act be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"'(b) All purchases and contracts for supplies or services, except for personal services, made by the Corporation, shall be made after advertising, in such manner and at such times sufficiently in advance of opening bids, as the Board shall determine to be adequate to insure notice and opportunity for competition: Provided, That advertisement shall not be required when, (1) an emergency requires immediate delivery of the supplies or performance of the services; or (2) repair parts, accessories, supplemental equipment, or services are required for supplies or services previously furnished or contracted for; or (3) the aggregate amount involved in any purchase of supplies or procurement of services does not exceed $500; in which cases such purchases of supplies or procurement of services may be made in the open market in the manner common among businessmen: Provided further, That in comparing bids and in making awards the Board may consider such factors as relative quality and adaptability of supplies or services, the bidder's financial responsibility, skill, experience, record of integrity in dealing, ability to furnish repairs and maintenance services, the time of delivery or performance offered, and whether the bidder has complied with the specifications.

"'The Comptroller General of the United States shall audit the transactions of the Corporation at such times as he shall determine, but not less frequently than once each governmental fiscal year, with personnel of his selection. In such connection he and his representatives shall have free and open access to all papers, books, records files, accounts, plants, warehouses, offices, and all other things, property, and places belonging to or under the control of or used or employed by the Corporation, and shall be afforded full facilities for counting all cash and verifying transactions with and balances in depositaries. He shall make report of each such audit in quadruplicate, one copy for the President of the United States, one for the chairman of the Board, one for public inspection at the principal office of the Corporation, and the other to be retained by him for the uses of the Congress: Provided, That such report shall not be made until the Corporation shall have had reasonable opportunity to examine the exceptions and criticisms of the Comptroller General or the General Accounting Office, to point out errors therein, explain or answer the same, and to file a statement which shall be submitted by the Comptroller General with his report. The expenses for each such audit shall be paid from any appropriation or appropriations for the General Accounting Office, and such part of such expenses as may be allocated to the cost of generating, transmitting, and distributing electric energy shall be reimbursed promptly by the Corporation as billed by the Comptroller General. The Comptroller General shall make special report to the President of the United States and to the Congress of any transaction or condition found by him to be in conflict with the powers or duties entrusted to the Corporation by law.'

"SEC. 15. That the sections of this Act are hereby declared to be separable, and in the event any one or more sections of this Act, or parts thereof, be held to be unconstitutional, such holding shall not affect the validity of other sections or parts of this Act."

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 7927.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the calendar number?

Mr. CONNALLY. It has just been reported today. It has no calendar number. It is a bill relating to the United States and Mexico Boundary Commission, and it affects only some lands along the boundary that interfere with the irrigation ditches. It simply authorizes the secretary to restore them after the determination of the boundary.

Mr. KING. Does it call for any appropriation?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think so.

Mr. KING. If it is to restore the land, I should like to be advised whether that means inundated lands, and whether they are to be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. The letter of the Secretary of State says the expense would not exceed $20,000. There is no appropriation carried in the bill, however.

Mr. KING. Does the Secretary recommend its passage?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Secretary of State recommends it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7927) to authorize the Secretary of State to lease to citizens of the United States any land heretofore or hereafter acquired under any act, Executive order or treaty in connection with projects, in whole or in part constructed or administered by the Secretary of State through the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, American section, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God of the ages, we pray that we may fortify our souls by waiting on Thee and be filled with Thy goodness. We trust that we may tarry this moment with no plaintive word; bring us now to the realization that in Thee we may have the vision of duty and the grace of divine guidance.

Evil can be driven out only as we bring to bear upon it the light of truth, the charm of purity, the majesty of right, and the magic of love. Father of mercy arm us with these virtues. We praise Thee for Thy Holy Word:

Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

O bless us with the mercy of grateful hearts. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. 2202. An act to add certain lands to the Cache National Forest;

S. 3002. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; and

S. 3194. An act to amend section 10A of the Federal Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3019) entitled "An act to amend sections 1, 3, and 15 of an act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes, approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269)."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 265) entitled "Joint resolution pertaining to an appropriate celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the expedition of Hernando de Soto", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. NORBECK to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

MIDDLE RIO GRANDE CONSERVANCY DISTRICT

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1832) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to provide by agreement with Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, a subdivision of the State of New Mexico, for maintenance and operation on newly reclaimed Pueblo Indian lands in the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., reclaimed under previous act of Congress, and authorizing an annual appropriation to pay the cost thereof for a period of not to exceed 5 years.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman explain the bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District is a district completed by the white settlers. There are certain Indian lands adjacent to it and the Indians have been using some of the water for irrigation purposes. This measure will permit the Secretary of the Interior, to the extent the Indians use the water on their own lands, to pay the same amount per acre as do the whites; in other words, the whites will not have to carry the entire burden. Unless we do this the whites who own this conservancy district will shut off the water to the Indians and they will simply become a charge on the Government. This will permit them to raise sufficient crops to feed themselves.

Mr. RICH. Has this bill been considered by the Public Lands Committee?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It has been considered by the Indian Affairs Committee of the House and reported favorably, and, of course, it has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. RICH. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter into an agreement with Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, a political subdivision of the State of New Mexico, to provide for operation and maintenance on newly reclaimed Pueblo Indian lands, not exceeding 12,600 acres thereof now owned by said Indians, in the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., provided said lands have been benefited by improvements constructed under the act of Congress dated March 13, 1928 (45 Stat. L., 312–313) and as therein provided, and as provided for by the provisions of the contract executed by and with the Secretary of the Interior and the said district; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually for a period of not to exceed 5 years, such amount as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the cost to Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District of such operation and maintenance on said newly reclaimed Pueblo Indian lands as may be irrigable during any particular year, provided the per acre cost assessable against the acreage of newly reclaimed Indian lands shall not exceed the per acre cost of operating and maintaining the district works for the irrigation of the total irrigable area within the district, including the now irrigated and newly reclaimed Indian lands: Provided, That any sums appropriated pursuant hereto shall be reimbursable to the United States: Provided further, That the district shall be required by the agreement herein authorized to be executed, to deliver water without discrimination on that part of the newly reclaimed Pueblo lands on which the per acre charge or assessment has been paid: And provided further, That the provisions of the contract heretofore executed pursuant to the act of March 13, 1928, requiring the district to recognize the prior and paramount water rights for the approximately 8,346 acres of now irrigated Indian lands and of their exemption from payment of any operation and maintenance or betterment cost, shall be carried into and made a part of the agreement to be executed pursuant hereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for immediate consideration the bill (S. 3336) to repeal titles I and II of the National Prohibition Act, to reenact certain provisions of title II thereof, to amend or repeal various liquor laws, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 8771, which is similar to bill S. 3336, just requested to be taken from the Speaker's table, was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] at the request of the Treasury Department. It was referred to the House Judiciary Committee and reported out unanimously from that committee with seven amendments. S. 3336 came up in the Senate on August 16, all the amendments suggested by the House Judiciary Committee were written into the Senate bill, and it passed unanimously.

The purpose of the bill is this:

When the twenty-first amendment was adopted, certain provisions of the old Prohibition Act were killed and fell with the eighteenth amendment. Other provisions were kept alive, for instance, everything that relates to industrial alcohol or the issuance of industrial-alcohol permits. The bill eliminates those provisions of the statute that were killed by the amendment and reenact into legislation the provisions with reference to industrial alcohol and the issuance of permits.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, this bill has been described as a bill to repeal the Volstead Act?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thought that it had been repealed sometime ago.

Mr. RICH. Is the enactment of this measure going to create better enforcement of the liquor laws so as to eliminate the bootlegger?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. It has nothing to do with the enforcement of the beverage liquor laws.

Mr. RICH. Is it going to provide better conditions now that we have done away with the Volstead Act? Are we going to have temperance rather than more liquor? After we passed the Volstead Act it was said that conditions were so bad that the repeal of prohibition would improve them. It looks now as if they are getting worse instead of better.

Mr. DUFFY of New York. This bill will promote temperance because it will control the industrial-alcohol industry.

Mr. RICH. And the gentleman thinks he can guarantee we are going to have better conditions than we had before?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. I think we will.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, under a reservation of objection, I want to inquire whether this bill in any way comes in contact with, or is contrary to, the Alcohol Control Act that has been before the Ways and Means Committee but not decided upon by the Congress?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. It does not touch that act.

Mr. TREADWAY. It does not?

Mr. DUFFY of New York. No.

That part of the old law which forbids Federal officers searching premises without a warrant, and which affords relief against the assessment of taxes in the event that taxable liquor is accidentally destroyed are reenacted and made a part of this bill. I desire to call your attention to two provisions of the bill which are new—

First. That which permits the courts to remit or mitigate judicial forfeitures of automobiles seized for violations of the liquor tax laws instead of leaving this relief, as is true now, to administrative action; and second, that which permits the Government to make use of abandoned or forfeited property. This provision is highly desirable particularly with reference to forfeited cars. If a car is forfeited, and innocent interests are not allowed, the Government should be permitted to use it in its law-enforcement work rather than be compelled to sell it at the very low price which is bid, and at the risk that the car will immediately get back into the hands of the law violators. The bill is approved by the industrial-alcohol industry. The bill is not controversial, Mr. Speaker, and should be passed.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Liquor Law Repeal and Enforcement Act."

TITLE I

SECTION 1. Titles I and II of the National Prohibition Act, approved October 28, 1919 (41 Stat. 305), and all laws amendatory of, or supplementary to, the National Prohibition Act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. When used in this title or in title III of the National Prohibition Act—

(1) The word "person" shall mean and include natural persons, firms, partnerships, corporations, and associations;

(2) The word "Commissioner" shall mean Commissioner of Internal Revenue;

(3) The term "application" shall mean a formal written request supported by a verified statement of facts showing that the Commissioner may grant the request;

(4) The term "permit" shall mean a formal written authorization by the Commissioner setting forth specifically therein the things that are authorized;

(5) The term "bond" shall mean an obligation authorized or required by or under this title or title III of the National Prohibition Act, or any regulation thereunder, executed in such form and for such penal sum as may be required by the Commissioner or prescribed by regulation;

(6) The term "regulation" shall mean any regulation prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury for carrying out the provisions of this title or of title III of the National Prohibition Act, and the Commissioner is authorized to make such regulations.

(7) The term "articles" shall mean any substance or preparation in the manufacture of which denatured alcohol or denatured rum is used.

Any act authorized by this title or by title III of the National Prohibition Act to be done by the Commissioner may be performed by any assistant or agent designated by him for that purpose. Records, reports, or returns required to be filed with the Commissioner may be filed with an assistant commissioner or other person designated by the Commissioner to receive such records, reports, or returns.

SEC. 3. The Commissioner, his assistants, agents, and inspectors, shall investigate and report violations of this title and of title III of the National Prohibition Act to the United States attorney for the district in which committed, who is hereby charged with the duty of prosecuting the offenders, subject to the direction of the Attorney General, as in the case of other offenses against the laws of the United States; and the Commissioner, his assistants, agents, and inspectors, may swear out warrants before United States commissioners or other officers or courts authorized to issue the same for the apprehension of such offenders, and may, subject to the control of the said United States attorney, conduct the prosecution at the committing trial for the purpose of having the offenders held for the action of a grand jury. Section 1014 of the Revised Statutes is hereby made applicable in the enforcement of this title and of title III of the National Prohibition Act. Officers mentioned in said section 1014 are authorized to issue search warrants under the limitations provided in title XI of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 228; 18 U. S. C., secs. 611–633).

SEC. 4. Any person who shall produce, withdraw, sell, transport, or use denatured alcohol, denatured rum, or articles in violation of laws or regulations now or hereafter in force pertaining thereto, and all such denatured alcohol, denatured rum, or articles shall be subject to all provisions of law pertaining to alcohol that is not denatured, including those requiring the payment of tax thereon; and the person so producing, withdrawing, selling, transporting, or using the denatured alcohol, denatured rum, or articles shall be required to pay such tax.

SEC. 5. Whenever the Commissioner has reason to believe that denatured alcohol, denatured rum, or articles do not correspond with the descriptions and limitations as to such alcohol, rum, or articles provided by law and regulations, he shall cause an analysis of said alcohol, rum, or articles to be made, and if upon such analysis the Commissioner shall find that said alcohol, rum, or articles do not so correspond, he shall give not less than 15 days' notice in writing to the person who is the manufacturer thereof to show cause why said alcohol, rum, or articles should not be dealt with as other distilled spirits, such notice to be served personally or by registered mail, as the Commissioner may determine, and shall specify the time when, the place where, and the name of the agent or official before whom such person is required to appear.

If the manufacturer of said alcohol, rum, or articles fails to show to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the alcohol, rum, or articles manufactured by him correspond to the descriptions and limitations as to such alcohol, rum, or articles provided by law and regulations, his permit to manufacture and sell the same shall be revoked. The manufacturer may by appropriate proceeding in a court of equity have the action of the Commissioner reviewed, and the court may affirm, modify, or reverse the finding of the Commissioner as the facts and law of the case may warrant, and during the pendency of such proceedings may restrain the manufacture, sale, or other disposition of such alcohol, rum, or articles.

SEC. 6. No one shall manufacture alcohol, procure it tax free, denature it, deal in or use specially denatured alcohol, recover completely or specially denatured alcohol, or transport specially denatured or tax-free alcohol, without first obtaining a permit from the Commissioner so to do. All such permits may be issued for 1 year, and shall expire on the 31st day of December next succeeding the issuance thereof: Provided, That the Commissioner may without formal application or new bond extend any permit granted under this title or title III of the National Prohibition Act after August 31 in any year to December 31 of the succeeding year.

Permits to purchase or procure specially denatured alcohol and tax-free alcohol shall be issued in such terms and under such conditions as the Commissioner shall by regulation prescribe.

No permit shall be issued to any person who, within 1 year prior to the application therefor or issuance thereof, shall not in good faith have conformed to the provisions of this title or title III of the National Prohibition Act, or shall have violated the terms of any permit issued under this title or title III of the National Prohibition Act, or made any false statement in the application therefor, or willfully failed to disclose any information required by regulation to be furnished, or violated any law of the United States relating to intoxicating liquor, or willfully violated any law of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States or of the District of Columbia relating to intoxicating liquor.

Every permit shall be in writing, dated when issued, and signed by the Commissioner or his authorized agent. It shall give the name and address of the person to whom it is issued and shall designate and limit the acts that are permitted and the time when and place where such acts may be performed. No permit shall be issued until a verified, written application shall have been made therefor, setting forth the qualification of the applicant and the purpose for which the alcohol or denatured alcohol is to be used.

The Commissioner may prescribe the form of all permits and applications and the facts to be set forth therein. Before any permit is granted, the Commissioner may require a bond in such form and amount as he may prescribe to insure compliance with the terms of the permit and the provisions of this title and of title III of the National Prohibition Act. In the event of the refusal by the Commissioner of any application for a permit, the applicant may have a review of his decision before a court of equity in the manner provided in section 5 of this title.

SEC. 7. If at any time there shall be filed with the Commissioner a complaint under oath setting forth facts showing, or if the Commissioner has reason to believe, that any person who has a permit is not in good faith conforming to the provisions of this title, or of title III of the National Prohibition Act, or has violated the terms of such permit, or has made any false statement in the application therefor, or has willfully failed to disclose any information required by regulation to be furnished, or has violated any law of the United States or of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States or of the District of Columbia relating to intoxicating liquor, the Commissioner or his agent shall immediately issue an order citing such person to appear before him on a day named not more than 30 and not less than 15 days from the date of service upon such permittee of a copy of the citation, which citation shall be accompanied by a copy of such complaint, or in the event that the proceedings be initiated by the Commissioner, with a statement of the facts constituting the violation charged, at which time a hearing shall be had unless continued for cause. Such hearings shall be held within the judicial district and within 50 miles of the place where the offense is alleged to have occurred, unless the parties agree on another place. If it be found that such person is not in good faith conforming to the provisions of this title, or of title III of the National Prohibition Act, or has violated the terms of his permit, or made any false statement in the application therefor, or willfully failed to disclose any information required by regulation to be furnished, or violated any law of the United States relating to intoxicating liquor, or willfully violated any law of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States or of the District of Columbia relating to intoxicating liquor, such permit shall be revoked, and no permit shall be granted to such person within 1 year thereafter. Should the permit be revoked by the Commissioner, the permittee may have a review of his decision before a court of equity in the manner provided in section 5 of this title. During the pendency of such action such permit shall be temporarily revoked.

SEC. 8. It shall be unlawful to have or possess any liquor or property intended for use in violating the provisions of this title, or of title III of the National Prohibition Act, or the internal-revenue laws, or regulations prescribed under such title or laws, or which has been so used, and no property rights shall exist in any such liquor or property. A search warrant may issue as provided in title XI of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 228; 18 U. S. C., secs. 611–633), for the seizure of such liquor or property. Nothing in this section shall in any manner limit or affect any criminal or forfeiture provision of the internal-revenue laws, or of any other law. The seizure and forfeiture of any liquor or property under the provisions of this title, or under the provisions of title III of the National Prohibition Act, and the disposition of such liquor or property subsequent to seizure and forfeiture, or the disposition of the proceeds from the sale of such liquor or property, shall be in accordance with existing laws or those hereafter in existence relating to seizures, forfeitures, and disposition of property or proceeds, for violation of the internal-revenue laws.

SEC. 9. The Commissioner, his assistants, agents, and inspectors, and all other officers, employees, or agents of the United States, whose duty it is to enforce criminal laws, shall have all the rights, privileges, powers, and protection in the enforcement of the provisions of this title and of title III of the National Prohibition Act, which are conferred by law for the enforcement of any laws in respect of the taxation, importation, exportation, transportation, manufacture, possession, or use of, or traffic in, intoxicating liquors.

SEC. 10. Any person violating the provisions of this title or of any regulations issued thereunder, for which offense a special penalty is not prescribed, shall be liable to the penalty or penalties prescribed in section 15 of title III of the National Prohibition Act. It shall be the duty of the prosecuting officer to ascertain, in the case of every violation of this title or the regulations made thereunder, for which offense a special penalty is not prescribed, or of title III of the National Prohibition Act, or the regulations made thereunder, whether the defendant has been previously convicted and to plead the prior conviction in the affidavit, information, or indictment.

SEC. 11. No person shall be excused, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture, from attending and testifying, or producing books, papers, documents, and other evidence in obedience to a subpena of any court in any suit or proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this title or of title III of the National Prohibition Act; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpena and under oath, he may so testify or produce evidence, but no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

SEC. 12. In case of a sale of liquor or denatured alcohol or denatured rum where the delivery thereof was made by a common or other carrier the sale and delivery for purposes of prosecution or revocation of any permit shall be deemed to be made in the county or district wherein the delivery was made by such carrier to the consignee, his agent or employee, or in the county or district wherein the sale was made, or from which the shipment was made, and prosecution for such sale or delivery may be had in any such county or district.

SEC. 13. In any affidavit, information, or indictment for the violation of this title or of title III of the National Prohibition Act, or of both, separate offenses may be united in separate counts and the defendant may be tried on all at one trial and the penalty for all offenses may be imposed. It shall not be necessary in any affidavit, information, or indictment to give the name of the purchaser or to include any defensive negative averments, but it shall be sufficient to state that the act complained of was then and there prohibited and unlawful, but this provision shall not be construed to preclude the trial court from directing the furnishing the defendant a bill of particulars when it deems it proper to do so.

SEC. 14. All records and reports kept or filed under the provisions of this title or of title III of the National Prohibition Act, and all liquor or property to which such records or reports relate, shall be subject to inspection at any reasonable hour by the Commissioner or any of his agents or by any public prosecutor or by any person designated by him, or by any peace officer in the State where the records or reports are kept, and copies of such records and reports duly certified by the person with whom kept or filed may be introduced in evidence with like effect as the originals thereof, and verified copies of such records shall be furnished to the Commissioner when called for.

SEC. 15. If any act or offense is a violation of this title or of title III of the National Prohibition Act, and also of any other law in regard to the manufacture or taxation of, or traffic in, intoxicating liquor, a conviction for such act or offense under the one shall be a bar to prosecution therefor under the other.

SEC. 16. If distilled spirits upon which the internal-revenue tax has not been paid are lost by theft, accidental fire, or other casualty while in possession of a common carrier subject to the Transportation Act of 1920 or the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, or if lost by theft from a distillery or other bonded warehouse, and it shall be made to appear to the Commissioner that such losses did not occur as the result of negligence, connivance, collusion, or fraud on the part of the owner or person legally accountable for such distilled spirits, no tax shall be assessed or collected upon the distilled spirits so lost, nor shall any tax penalty be imposed or collected by reason of such loss, but the exemption from the tax and penalty shall only be allowed to the extent that the claimant is not indemnified against or recompensed for such loss. This provision shall apply to any claim for taxes or tax penalties that may have accrued since the passage of the National Prohibition Act or that may accrue hereafter. Nothing in this section shall be construed as in any manner limiting or restricting the provisions of title III of the National Prohibition Act.

SEC. 17. Section 3 of title III of the National Prohibition Act (41 Stat. 319; 27 U. S. C., sec. 73) is amended to read as follows:

"Warehouses for the storage and distribution of alcohol may be established upon filing of application and bond, and issuance of permit at such places, either in connection with the manufacturing plant or elsewhere, as the Commissioner may determine; and the entry and storage of alcohol therein, and the withdrawals of alcohol therefrom shall be made in such containers and by such means as the Commissioner by regulation may prescribe."

SEC. 18. Section 11 of title III of the National Prohibition Act (41 Stat. 321; 27 U. S. C., sec. 81) is amended to read as follows:

"Alcohol produced at any industrial alcohol plant or stored in any bonded warehouse may, under regulations, be withdrawn tax free as provided by existing law from such plant or warehouse for transfer to any denaturing plant for denaturation, or may, under regulations, before or after denaturation, be removed from any such plant or warehouse for any lawful tax-free purpose.

"Spirits of less proof than 160 degrees may, under regulations, be deemed to be alcohol for the purpose of denaturation, under the provisions of this title.

"Alcohol may be withdrawn, under regulations, from any industrial plant or bonded warehouse tax free by the United States or any governmental agency thereof, or by the several States and Territories or any municipal subdivision thereof or by the District of Columbia, or for the use of any scientific university or college of learning, any laboratory for use exclusively in scientific research, or for use in any hospital or sanitarium.

"But any person permitted to obtain alcohol tax free, except the United States and the several States and Territories and subdivisions thereof, and the District of Columbia, shall first apply for and secure a permit to purchase the same and give the bonds prescribed under section 6 of the Liquor Law Repeal and Enforcement Act, but alcohol withdrawn for nonbeverage purposes for use of the United States and the several States, Territories and subdivisions thereof, and the District of Columbia may be purchased and withdrawn subject only to such regulations as may be prescribed."

TITLE II

SECTION 201. Any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the enforcement of any law of the United States who shall search any private dwelling used and occupied as such dwelling without a warrant directing such search; or who, while engaged in such enforcement, shall without a search warrant maliciously and without reasonable cause search any other building or property, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined for a first offense not more than $1,000, and for a subsequent offense not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to any officer, agent, or employee of the United States serving a warrant of arrest, or arresting or attempting to arrest any person committing or attempting to commit an offense in the presence of such officer, agent, or employee, or who has committed, or who is suspected on reasonable grounds of having committed, a felony.

Whoever not being an officer, agent, or employee of the United States shall falsely represent himself to be such officer, agent, or employee, and in such assumed character shall arrest or detain any person or shall in any manner search the person, buildings, or other property of any person, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 202. (a) The act of March 22, 1933 (48 Stat. 16), entitled "An act to provide revenue by the taxation of certain nonintoxicating liquors, and for other purposes", is hereby repealed.

(b) The shipment or transportation, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 203. Section 12 of the Act of May 18, 1917 (40 Stat. 76), entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States", as amended, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 204. (a) Whenever, in any proceeding in court for the forfeiture, under the internal-revenue laws, of any vehicle or aircraft seized for a violation of the internal-revenue laws relating to liquors, such forfeiture is decreed, the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to remit or mitigate the forfeiture.

(b) In any such proceeding the court shall not allow the claim of any claimant for remission or mitigation unless and until he proves (1) that he has an interest in such vehicle or aircraft, as owner or otherwise, which he acquired in good faith, (2) that he had at no time any knowledge or reason to believe that it was being or would be used in the violation of laws of the United States or of any State relating to liquor, and (3) if it appears that the interest asserted by the claimant arises out of or is in any way subject to any contract or agreement under which any person having a record or reputation for violating laws of the United States or of any State relating to liquor has a right with respect to such vehicle or aircraft, that, before such claimant acquired his interest, or such other person acquired his right under such contract or agreement, whichever occurred later, the claimant, his officer or agent, was informed in answer to his inquiry, at the headquarters of the sheriff, chief of police, principal Federal internal-revenue officer engaged in the enforcement of the liquor laws, or other principal local or Federal law-enforcement officer of the locality in which such other person acquired his right under such contract or agreement, of the locality in which such other person then resided, and of each locality in which the claimant has made any other inquiry as to the character or financial standing of such other person, that such other person had no such record or reputation.

(c) Upon the request of any claimant whose claim for remission or mitigation is allowed and whose interest is first in the order of priority among such claims allowed in such proceeding and is of an amount in excess of, or equal to, the appraised value of such vehicle or aircraft, the court shall order its return to him; and, upon the joint request of any two or more claimants whose claims are allowed and whose interests are not subject to any prior or intervening interests claimed and allowed in such proceedings, and are of a total amount in excess of, or equal to, the appraised value of such vehicle or aircraft, the court shall order its return to such of the joint requesting claimants as is designated in such request. Such return shall be made only upon payment of all expenses incident to the seizure and forfeiture incurred by the United States. In all other cases the court shall order disposition of such vehicle or aircraft as provided in title 3 of this act; and if such disposition be by public sale, payment from the proceeds thereof, after satisfaction of all such expenses, of any such claim in its order of priority among the claims allowed in such proceedings.

(d) In any proceeding in court for the forfeiture under the internal-revenue laws of any vehicle or aircraft seized for a violation of the internal-revenue laws relating to liquor, the court shall order delivery thereof to any claimant who shall establish his right to the immediate possession thereof, and shall execute, with one or more sureties approved by the court, and deliver to the court, a bond to the United States for the payment of a sum equal to the appraised value of such vehicle or aircraft. Such bond shall be conditioned to return such vehicle or aircraft at the time of the trial and to pay the difference between the appraised value of such vehicle or aircraft as of the time it shall have been so released on bond and the appraised value thereof as of the time of trial; and conditioned further that, if the vehicle or aircraft be not returned at the time of trial, the bond shall stand in lieu of, and be forfeited in the same manner as, such vehicle or aircraft. Notwithstanding the provisions of this subsection or any other provisions of law relating to the delivery of possession on bond of vehicles or aircraft sought to be forfeited under the internal-revenue laws, the court may, in its discretion and upon good cause shown by the United States, refuse to order such delivery of possession.

TITLE III

SECTION 301. As used in this title—

(1) "Property" means all personal property, including but not limited to vessels, vehicles, and aircraft;

(2) "Agency" includes any executive department, independent establishment, board, commission, bureau, service, or division of the United States, and any corporation in which the United States owns all or a majority of the stock.

(3) "Director" means the Director of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department of the United States.

SEC. 302. In the event that any property is or has been voluntarily abandoned to any agency in such manner as to vest title thereto in the United States, it may be retained by such agency and devoted to official use only. If such agency shall not desire so to retain such property, the head thereof shall forthwith notify the Director to that effect, and the Director shall, within a reasonable time—

(a) order such agency to deliver the property to any other agency which requests and in his judgment should be given the property, or

(b) order disposal of the property as otherwise provided by law.

SEC. 303. In the event that any property seized by any agency is or has been forfeited to the United States otherwise than by court decree, it may, in the event that the property is not ordered by competent authority to be returned to any claimant, and in lieu of being disposed of as otherwise provided by law (including advertisement for sale and sale), be retained by such agency and devoted to official use only. If such agency shall not desire so to retain such property, the head thereof shall forthwith notify the Director to that effect, and such property shall—

(a) in the event that it is not ordered by competent authority to be returned to any claimant, and in lieu of being disposed of as otherwise provided by law (including advertisement for sale and sale), be delivered by such agency, upon order of the Director given within a reasonable time, to any other agency which requests and in the judgment of the Director should be given the property, or

(b) upon order of the Director given within a reasonable time, be disposed of as otherwise provided by law.

SEC. 304. In the event that proceedings are or have been commenced for the forfeiture of any property by court decree, the agency which seized such property shall forthwith notify the Director and may at the same time file with him a request for such property for its official use. The Director shall, before entry of a decree, apply to the court to order delivery of such property—

(a) to the agency filing such request; or

(b) if no such request has been filed, to any other agency which requests and in the judgment of the Director should be given such property; or

(c) if the agency which seized such property has not requested it, and no other agency has requested and in the judgment of the Director should be given such property, and if in the judgment of the Director the property may later become necessary to any agency for official use, to the seizing agency to be retained in its custody. Thereafter the Director shall, within a reasonable time, order such agency to deliver the property to any other agency which requests and in his judgment should be given such property, or to dispose of it as otherwise provided by law, and if forfeiture thereof is decreed, the court shall, in the event that the property is not ordered by competent authority to be returned to any claimant, order delivery accordingly. All the property for which no such application is made shall be disposed of by the court in accordance with law.

SEC. 305. The appropriation available to any agency for the purchase, hire, operation, maintenance, and repair of property of any kind shall be available for the payment of expenses of operation, maintenance, and repair of property of the same kind received by it under any provision of this title for official use; for the payment of any lien recognized and allowed pursuant to law, and for the payment of all moneys found to be due any person upon the duly authorized remission or mitigation of any forfeiture; and for reimbursement of other agencies as hereafter provided. The costs of hauling, transporting, towing, and storage of such property shall be paid by the agency which has seized such property or to which it has been abandoned; and, if such property is later delivered to another agency for official use under sections 302, 303, or 304 of this title, the latter shall make reimbursement for all such costs incurred prior to the date of delivery to it of such property.

SEC. 306. Retention or delivery of forfeited or abandoned property under this title shall be regarded as the sale thereof for the purpose of laws providing for informer's fees or remission or mitigation of any forfeiture. Any property so acquired when no longer needed for official use shall be disposed of in the same manner as other surplus property.

SEC. 307. The Director is authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, (1) to require any agency, from time to time, to make a report of all property abandoned to it or seized and the disposal thereof, and (2) to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

SEC. 308. (a) The act entitled "An act relating to the use or disposal of vessels or vehicles forfeited to the United States for violation of the customs laws or the National Prohibition Act, and for other purposes" (43 Stat. 1116), approved March 3, 1925, as amended, is hereby repealed.

(b) Nothing contained in this title shall be construed as repealing any other laws relating to the disposition of forfeited or abandoned property, except such provisions of such laws as are directly in conflict with any provisions of this title.

(c) The following classes of property shall not be subject to allocation under sections 302, 303, or 304 of this title, but shall be disposed of in the manner otherwise provided by law:

(1) Arms or munitions of war included in section 4 of title VI of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes" (40 Stat. 223), approved June 15, 1917, as amended;

(2) Narcotic drugs, as defined in the Narcotic Drug Import and Export Act;

(3) Firearms, as defined in the National Firearms Act; and

GRADUATION DAY ADDRESS

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address that I delivered to the graduates of Virginia Intermont College, Bristol, Va.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address I delivered to the graduates of Virginia Intermont College, Bristol, Va.:

I esteem it a high privilege to be permitted to participate in the exercises here this morning. It is not only a privilege but a privilege coupled with a responsibility to talk to young girls about to embark upon the voyage of womanhood; and if at times I shall forget myself and talk about the personal and sacred things of life, even as a father would talk to his daughter, I know that you will forgive me when I remind you of the fact that an auburn-haired, brown-eyed girl, full of life, happiness, and joy, calls me daddy, and because she does I am a better man and interested in the daughters of other daddies.

Time was, as we are now wont to view things, when the world of woman was considered circumscribed. She devoted little thought to business, not because she did not have the capacity but because business under the old order fell to the lot of men. Denied the right to vote, the only interest she manifested in politics was the partisanship she loyally displayed for the causes championed by her men. But in the realms of the home and the church and the school she reigned supreme.

We of the old order know that it was mother who dressed us in the morning, prepared our meals, kept our clothes in order, found our lost articles, made our baseballs and rag dolls, settled our quarrels and disputes, entertained us when lonesome, smiled away our troubles, kissed away our tears, gave us our Saturday night's bath, and even tucked us in bed at night with a hug and a kiss that brought sound sleep and pleasant dreams.

We of the old order know that it was mother who read us the Bible, heard our prayers, taught us our Sunday school lesson, caused us to memorize the catechism and passages of promise, hope, and comfort from the Bible, made us observe the Sabbath, instilled in us spiritual values, and then ran things in such an orderly way on Sunday morning that we were never late for Sunday school and church.

We of the old order know that it was mother who taught us our lessons at night, found our books in the morning, acted as contact man when we were in trouble with the teacher, whose faith in us dissipated our discouragements, whose pride gave us a real thrill when we outstripped the others at school, and who created in us the ambition to forge ahead.

Yes, we of the old order know that the finer, nobler things in us were planted there in childhood by mother.

And we who have given thought to the matter realize that while we speak of woman's sphere being circumscribed under the old order that such was not the case because in reality she was the most dynamic force the old order produced. She was the old order! What her children stood for was what she had taught in the home, in the church, and in the school.

Will any one question that a mother kindled the flame of liberty that consumed the very soul of Henry? Will any one question that Washington's dogged determination was but the spirit of a determined, persevering mother? Will any one question that Marshall's great decisions that knit the Union together with hoops of steel were but the expressions of a mother who wanted to hold fast to the gains we had made? Will any one question that Lincoln's abhorence for slavery was but the child of freedom a mother had planted in his breast? Will any one question that Westinghouse's great safety and labor-saving invention of the air brake was but the realized craving of a mother to relieve the hazards, hardships, and toils of the sons of men? Will any one question that Long's medical discovery of the use of anesthetics in surgical operations was but the realized longing of a mother to alleviate pain and suffering? Will any one question that a mother directed the great crusade led by Booth to reclaim lost manhood and womanhood? Will any one question that Moody's passion to save souls was but the fruition of a mother's prayers for the reign of the Prince of Peace?

Yes; my young friends, under the old order our great men, our great women, were but expressions of great mothers. Behind every great leader of progress and advancement in the past you will find that the dynamo that generated his vision, his genius, his strength was the old-fashioned mother of his childhood.

But things have changed. Woman's sphere can no longer be termed "circumscribed." We are living today under what we call, for lack of a better name, the "new order." And under the new order women are now participating, not by proxy through their children as in the days that have passed, but directly in all the activities that arrest the attention of men. And in her new role, as was to be expected, she has forged ahead; and her influence in her new fields, be it said to her credit, has been wholesome.

We find her now occupying positions of responsibility in the business world, standing in the fore ranks in many of the professions, and showing an aptitude for politics that has, in a few short years, placed her in our State legislatures upon our highest State courts, upon the Federal bench, as our representative to foreign governments, in both branches of the United States Congress, and in the President's Cabinet. The Presidency itself is now within her reach.

I am not questioning woman's right to do these things. I am not questioning her ability. I plead guilty to being among those who gave her the right because I thought she had the ability. I am only wondering where it will lead. I am only wondering, young ladies, where you will go from here.

Facts are cruel things. They have no sympathy, no emotions, no sentiment, and yet sooner or later we have to face facts. So do not think that I am cruel if, on this your gala day, I should mention something that gives me real concern. It is this: If our most intelligent, our most talented, our most refined, our most consecrated women go into business, or into one of the professions, or into politics, what is going to become of the home? And if the home degenerates, what will become of the church, of the school, of the State?

It takes mothers, you know, to run homes. And, remember, you cannot run a business and at the same time run a home. Somehow, business and the home won't mix. You cannot follow a profession and at the same time run a home. Somehow, the professions and the home won't mix. You cannot direct the affairs of state and at the same time run a home. Somehow, affairs of state and the home won't mix. And in spite of our boasted progress, we have been unable so far to find a substitute for the mother in the home. And mothers, in spite of the wizardry with which they can handle things, are unable to run homes on the 30-hour 6-days-per-week basis. It takes a full-time mother to run a genuine, old-fashioned, full-time American home.

I know that woman has brought skill and sympathy and understanding to the professions. And yet I wonder if the professions are not paying an awful price in taking them away from the home.

I know that the women have brought the golden rule to business and placed it upon a higher plane. And yet I wonder if business is not paying an awful price in taking them away from the home.

I know that women have purified politics and elevated the affairs of state. And yet I wonder if the state is not paying an awful price in taking them away from the home.

I am just wondering if America can afford to pay the price.

Do not think that I am against the progress of woman, that I am against her development, that I would hinder her mental and spiritual growth in any way. Such is not the case. I am just wondering if she cannot reach her highest development right in the home. I know from actual experience—from my mother's home and from the home of the one whom God gave me as a helpmeet—what an old-fashioned home means; and I am only concerned in vouchsafing to our Nation God's greatest gift to the children of men—the old-fashioned, full-time Christian home.

My young friends, I know that the allurements of busines, the professions, and politics are enticing, and that the very thought of the responsibilities and the grind of presiding over the old-fashioned home is disconsolating to many of you. I know that the home is a jealous mistress. It demands industry and toil. It demands sacrifices and privations. It demands heartaches and grief. It demands smiles and sunshine. It demands sympathy and understanding. It demands faith and hope and charity. I am not unmindful of these demands. But, my young friends, remember that while it is a jealous mistress, it is also a generous mistress. It gives freely in return for its untold exactings. No institution on earth pays dividends so great. The good that radiates from an old-fashioned home blesses the whole community, ofttimes the whole State, the whole Nation. Yes; the good generated in the humble, old-fashioned home in more than one case has been felt around the world. Dividends! Why, the dividend of a sparkling-eyed baby, with its coos and smiles, is sufficient recompense for most mothers, but when that dividend grows and develops into a real man or a real woman, as the case may be, there is a possibility that that dividend will enrich not only the community, the State, the Nation, but the world, and thus make all mankind again indebted to motherhood.

I know that I am not preaching an easy doctrine. Oh, I know that the mother back of every great man, every great woman, has paid dearly for her contribution to society. But somehow I am just wondering if there is any other path that leads forward save the path of sacrifice. And if this is so, then American women, in order for us to complete the building of the greatest Commonwealth among the federation of the world, will have to continue to make sacrifices by presiding over the old-fashioned, full-time American home.

The old-fashioned home! May God ever bless it and keep it in all its purity and strength! Oh, what recollection the very name brings to mind! In an humble, old-fashioned home, at the knees of an old-fashioned mother, I learned lessons that mean more to me than all I ever learned in school or college. There I learned of the higher and nobler things of life—of truth, of honesty, of temperance, of charity. There I learned of my duties to my fellow man and of my duties to my Government. Yes; there I learned from a sainted mother, who taught me to pray, the story of a Savior who died that I might live.

I am not an alarmist, I am not a pessimist, but somehow I am afraid of the drift away from the old-fashioned mother who presided over the old-fashioned home that I have observed in the last few years. Our attitude toward the real value and real worth of the old-fashioned mother who presided over the old-fashioned home seems to be changing. Why, we are already referring to the mothers of today who are following the footsteps of the mothers of yesterday more or less in a sense of derision as old-fashioned mothers. It is with regret I say there is no need of the descriptive adjective to distinguish them. Ofttimes just a look is sufficient! One reflects the image of skepticism, the other the image of faith. One reflects the image of despair, the other the image of hope. One reflects the image of aversion, the other the image of love. One reflects the image of stress, the other the image of peace. Yes, one reflects the image of the world, the other the image of God himself.

Not long ago I was invited to an art exhibit in our Capital City. There I saw some of the master paintings of the ages—famous women, queens, even madonnas. I walked around as if in a place of enchantment. I stood before a portrait of one of the madonnas and envied the artist the vision he had caught. That night I was in the great Union Station waiting for a train that was late, and I became impatient, restless, and commenced to walk around. I saw an old woman—one of our old-fashioned mothers—sitting on one of the benches. I passed her several times, and finally took a seat beside her. There was something about her that drew me to her. She was old, the cares of the years were in the lines of her face, her hands showed that she was not unacquainted with honest toil, her raiment showed that she was not of the "400", and yet there was something, as if it were a magnet, that drew me to her. I soon discovered that she was waiting for her son whom her honest toil had sent through one of the great universities, who was coming back on a mission for one of our great corporations. I saw them meet—he was a clean-cut, manly youngster—and I knew that her dream had come true—that she had brought forth one of God's noblemen.

That night sitting in my room all alone the faces in the art gallery commenced to pass by in kaleidoscopic parade, but they no longer looked as they did that evening. There was something lacking—something that the artist had been unable to put on canvas. That something was what I had seen in the face of the old-fashioned mother at the station. What was it? The divine expression of motherhood that the Master Artist had painted there by dipping his brush in the colors produced by the trials and cares, joys and pleasures, aches and pains, smiles and laughter she had suffered and enjoyed in acting the part of mother. What was it? Oh, it was just the difference between a man-made and a God-made portrait. That's all.

My young friends, the masterpiece in the art gallery of heaven will be a portrait of an old-fashioned mother.

I hope you appreciate and cherish the responsibilities that are yours. I am not overstating the case when I say that you and the other girls in this land hold in your hands all we have fought for and secured in the past, all we hold sacred and dear, our religious freedom, our political freedom, our freedom of the press, our right to peaceably assemble, our right to petition setting forth our grievances, because the men and women of tomorrow depend upon the mothers of today.

I know that you will not shun so great a responsibility. I know that you will not prove false to the hopes and prayers of your fathers. Oh, let me tell you something about your fathers. Very little has ever been said about a father's hopes, about his ambitions, about his sacrifices, and perhaps you are too young to realize that we nurture hopes, cherish ambitions, make sacrifices, and pray. Perhaps it is altogether our fault. Perhaps—and I say it with shame—we are too busy with the cares of the day to manifest our true feelings. But I know, because I am a father, just an ordinary father, no better, no worse, I hope, than the common run of fathers, and I know, whether my daughter realizes it or not, that to me she is the sweetest, purest, cleanest girl on earth, and I cherish the hope and nightly pray that some day, even as my mother did, even as her mother did, that she will preside over one of the humble homes of this land, training boys to be men and girls to be women; and let me remind you that your fathers feel the same way.

We may appear indifferent, we may not outwardly manifest the interest we should, we may be awkward in expressing the tender feeling that ever fills our hearts, but my young friends ever remember that to a true father disgraces crowning disgrace is to prove false to those whom God has committed to his keeping.

Here you have been trained in one of our great religious schools, dedicated to the high purpose of equipping the girls of this land for lives of service and usefulness. Having been here you are now better equipped to face life's problems and conquer them. The question now arises: Where will you go from here? I am not here to give advice, because I am satisfied that the training you have received here is far better than any advice I can offer. I am only here to have a friendly talk and express the hope that your journey from here will lead to some Christian home, however humble it may be, and that the years of usefulness that God has in store for you will be dedicated to training God-fearing liberty-loving boys and girls in such a way that they will become better actors on the stage of life than we, their forebears, have been.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, in order to expedite the business of the House, I ask unanimous consent that every Member may have permission as often as he sees fit until the end of the session to print in the RECORD an extension of his own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SNELL. It is understood that that is not to include extraneous matter?

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced a resolution providing for the promotion of a technical sergeant of the Signal Corps of the United States Army to the rank of master sergeant of the Signal Corps of the Army. The sergeant whom my resolution would promote recovered the bodies of Wiley Post and Will Rogers following the airplane accident near Point Barrow, and he stood valiantly at the radio key to flash the news to the world and to receive instructions in connection with the return of the bodies. The resolution provides for an increase in one grade only.

This morning the Military Affairs Committee of the House considered this bill, and I have just been advised that they reported it unfavorably, notwithstanding the outstandingly meritorious work of Technical Sgt. Stanley R. Morgan in connection with the unfortunate accident which befell two of our leading citizens.

I wish the American people to know the attitude of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives toward enlisted men, especially when they perform some outstanding feat such as the one I have just described.

On July 30 we passed a bill to promote approximately 5,000 officers of the Army, which will entail a potential cost in active and retired pay of from $9,000,000 to $12,000,000 per annum. This bill was unanimously favored by the Military Affairs Committee of the House, and it is this same committee which rejects the resolution to which I have referred, providing one increase in grade for a sergeant who performed relief work in an outstandingly commendable manner. In my opinion, the House Military Affairs Committee is justly subject to criticism because of its inconsistency in failing to recognize one enlisted man for promotion, while it actively sponsored the promotion of approximately 5,000 officers.

Today's press quotes Admiral Sims, retired, as stating that the morale and efficiency of the Navy suffers because of the unfair system of promotion which operates in the Navy. My attention has been called to the fact that the same inefficiency exists in the Army, similarly lowering the morale of the service, due to the fact that officers have been promoted to high rank in such numbers that they have no commensurate command for them. I received a letter this morning advising me that one regiment at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., has 11 majors. Soon we will have more majors in the Army than we have second lieutenants, and the pathetic point is that we have no adequate command for these majors, while lieutenants will be overworked. In addition, the present promotion system which forces able-bodied graduates of Annapolis and West Point on the retired list, with high pay for the balance of their lives, is, in my opinion, an absolutely unjustifiable burden upon the taxpayers at this time.

Just a few days ago we passed a bill to provide retired pay at $262 monthly for the balance of his life for an individual who had never served a day in the Regular Army as an officer. The Military Affairs Committee, which reported this bill favorably, is thus, in my opinion, indicted by its own action in the cases I have mentioned for favoritism to the officers of the service and a deplorable lack of consideration to the enlisted men.

This attitude on the part of the Military Affairs Committee of the House is naturally a basis for its favorable consideration and report of the pending peace-time sedition bill directed against the enlisted men of the service in an effort, it would appear, to insure loyalty through coercion, and in my opinion it may be construed as an indirect confession of apprehension as to the possible reaction among thinking people to the discriminations and injustices which are so flagrantly operative against the enlisted men. Of course, it will be necessary to enact restrictive laws directed against enlisted men if the Congress of the United States continues to legislate so munificently for the officers and, at the same time, disregard the claims of simple justice in behalf of the enlisted men.

In order to bring my resolution before the House I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be read and immediately considered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 390

To authorize and direct the promotion of Technical Sgt. Stanley R. Morgan, Signal Corps, United States Army, to the rank of master sergeant, Signal Corps, United States Army

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to promote Technical Sgt. Stanley R. Morgan, Signal Corps, United States Army, to the rank of master sergeant, Signal Corps, United States Army.

SEC. 2. The master sergeant hereby authorized shall be in addition to the authorized quota of master sergeant in the Signal Corps under existing law and regulations of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, the resolution has not been considered by the committee. Therefore, I object.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am surprised that the gentleman from Pennsylvania should object. He was one of the ardent advocates of the officers' promotion bill, to which I referred, which saddles an unnecessary burden on the taxpayers in this time of depression. He voted for that raid on the Treasury, notwithstanding that his party, the Republican Party, has criticized the Democrats for failure to balance the Budget. How can the Republicans criticize the Democratic administration for not balancing the Budget while their Republican leaders vote increasingly for unnecessary, unmerited, and uncalled-for appropriations?

Furthermore, the gentleman who claims the resolution was not considered by the Military Affairs Committee is in error, according to my information. I was twice present at the committee rooms this morning, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania was absent. I conferred with the chairman of the committee before introducing this resolution, and I am inclined to believe that he favors the passage of this resolution. Furthermore, for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I wish to state that the clerk of the committee informed me that the resolution was considered by the committee in executive session and was unfavorably reported.

OLD-AGE PENSION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6623) to amend the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia in relation to providing assistance against old-age wants, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 6623, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the same. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

Page 7, line 14, strike out "14" and insert "16."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us what this is about?

Mr. PALMISANO. This is the old-age pension bill for the District of Columbia. It is similar to the Federal social-security bill which we passed sometime ago.

Mr. TABER. What do the Senate amendments do to it? What do they accomplish?

Mr. PALMISANO. The bill as originally passed by the House was a little more liberal than the Federal social-security bill and the Senate added provisions to make it conform to that bill.

Mr. TABER. Does it provide that the District will out of its own funds take care of the same things that the gentleman's State and my State will be called upon to take care of?

Mr. PALMISANO. Yes. It is in conformance with the Federal bill.

Mr. TABER. It does not impose any charge on the Federal Treasury other than the original social-security bill provides?

Mr. PALMISANO. No. The Federal Government would provide the same as it does to a State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in and a motion to reconsider the vote by which they were concurred in was laid on the table.

APPEALS FROM RULINGS OF UTILITY COMMISSION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3462, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913", and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3462, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the same.

The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 6, line 7, strike out ", if supported by substantial evidence,"
Page 6, line 9, after "are", insert "unreasonable."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain what this bill is?

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to provide for appeals from the action of the Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. The only amendments that were made to the House bill appear in paragraph 66 of the House print, commencing in line 7. The House bill, as originally passed, read as follows:

And the findings of fact by the Commission, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive unless it shall appear that such findings of the Commission are arbitrary or capricious.

The Senate amended the bill to read as follows:

And the findings of fact by the Commission shall be conclusive, unless it shall appear that such findings of the Commission are unreasonable, arbitrary, or capricious.

The result of the amendments is to strike out the words "if supported by substantial evidence" and to add the word "unreasonable" before the word "arbitrary." While that wording was somewhat opposed by Mr. Roberts, people's counsel, and Mr. Prettyman, for the District, in the view of the chairman of the subcommittee of the House having this bill in charge, these amendments remove any question of the unconstitutionality of this section. I think it is advisable to agree to them. When it came up in the Senate these amendments were opposed by Senator LA FOLLETTE. He won on his opposition to the amendments, and then, because there was objection to the consideration of the bill by Senator KING without the amendments, he withdrew his objection to these amendments to enable this bill to be enacted at this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ALCOHOL BEVERAGE CONTROL ACT

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6510) to amend the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "(c)" and insert "(q)."
Page 1, line 6, strike out all after "1934", down to and including "act", in line 7.

Page 18, strike out lines 1 to 17, inclusive, and insert:

"SEC. 18. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized in their discretion to require by regulation that no licensee holding a retailer's license, class A, B, C, D, or E, as provided in the said act, shall transport, or cause to be transported, in any manner whatsoever into the District of Columbia any alcoholic beverage (except the regular stock on hand in a licensed railroad club or dining car or passenger-carrying marine vessel); and said Commissioners are also authorized to permit such importation under a special permit or permits, to be issued by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, upon application by a licensee and upon such terms and conditions and in such manner as may be prescribed by the said Commissioners. Any such regulation, permit, or system of permits may be suspended, amended, revoked, or abolished at any time by the said Commissioners."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, I just wish to call attention to the fact that this bill has never been passed by the House.

Mr. PALMISANO. Oh, yes; it has.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The calendar does not show it.

Mr. PALMISANO. It has passed the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is so informed.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES-ALASKA HIGHWAY

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1374) authorizing the survey, location, and construction of a highway to connect the northwestern part of continental United States with British Columbia, Yukon Territory, and the Territory of Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The bill merely authorizes the President to appoint a commission to conduct negotiations with the Canadian authorities for the location and survey of the so-called "Alaska highway." The bill carries no appropriation. The Committee on Roads struck out the appropriation of $100,000 and $2,000,000. It is merely an authorization to start negotiations. It carries no appropriation whatsoever.

Mr. RICH. Has any committee reported this to the House?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes; the Committee on Roads reported it unanimously.

Mr. RICH. On what calendar is the bill now?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. It is on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. RICH. Why do we not take it up in the regular order?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. For the reason that the minority leader took up bridge bills the other day—some of them cannot be taken up because of their location on the calendar.

Mr. RICH. Should we give preference to one bill over others that are on the calendar?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I contend it should not be done as a regular thing, but there is no assurance that the Consent Calendar will be called again.

Mr. RICH. I think the gentleman himself has charge of that calendar.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is correct.

Mr. RICH. It seems to me we should take them right down the line.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This is not my bill. It is a bill introduced by the Delegate from Alaska, and it is so far down on the calendar that it could not be taken up in the regular way.

Mr. RICH. I think we ought to take them in their regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

REFUND OF INCOME AND PROFITS TAXES

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2044) for the refund of income and profits taxes erroneously collected.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

NAVAJO INDIAN RESERVATION IN NEW MEXICO

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6542) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, let us find out what this bill is before we let it go through by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman is Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. And the gentleman expects tomorrow to have the call on Calendar Wednesday and take up Indian affairs bills?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I hope that is true.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If that is so, why take up bills now, if we expect to have the calendar tomorrow?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. The Speaker and the Chairman of the Rules Committee advised me yesterday that we might not get the call, and suggest that I try a few unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not know, of course, that we will take up Calendar Wednesday business on tomorow.

Mr. SNELL. Unless we can find out something from someone on the majority side who knows something about these bills, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is Calendar Wednesday and the gentleman's committee will have the first call. I cannot see why they should call up bills by unanimous consent at this time. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it the intent of the gentleman, if the bills which he now has in his hand are considered under unanimous consent today, to press for Calendar Wednesday business tomorrow?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. No. I will say it is not, because there are several others.

Mr. TABER. I shall object, Mr. Speaker.

LOAD LINES FOR AMERICAN VESSELS IN COASTWISE TRADE

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2002) to provide for the establishment of load lines for American vessels in the coastwise trade, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us how this will affect lake shipping?

Mr. BLAND. The bill as reported from the House Committee excluded the Great Lakes. The bill as it passed the Senate includes the Great Lakes and makes applicable the terms of an international treaty.

It is my purpose to offer an amendment with regard to the Great Lakes situation to read as follows:

Provided further, That in applying the load lines to vessels on the Great Lakes the Secretary of Commerce is vested with discretion to vary the load-line marks from those established by said treaty when in his opinion the changes made by him will not be above the actual line of safety.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us just how that will affect these lake ships?

Mr. BLAND. It will require the lake ships to have load-line marks on them, but we will give discretion to the Secretary to determine where those load-line marks shall be. In the House bill the Great Lakes were excluded because we found the situation was such that the Great Lakes might well be excluded, but the Great Lakes have been included in the Senate bill. It is very important to get the bill through applicable to coastwise ships. For that reason we added this clause so that the terms of that treaty would not be binding on the Great Lakes but would require load-line marks determining the line of safety on Great Lakes vessels.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether the lake shippers were heard with reference to this provision?

Mr. BLAND. The lake shippers desired to be excluded, and they were excluded in the House bill. After the Senate bill came over with the Great Lakes included there was a meeting of the committee and it was finally decided to let the Great Lakes go in, with this amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that the result of this provision would be to permit the Canadian ships to carry all the traffic on the Great Lakes? I understand from some of the lake people that that is the situation.

Mr. BLAND. To do what?

Mr. TABER. It would not apply to the Canadian ships and it would let the Canadian ships carry all the traffic on the Lakes, wipe out the operation of American ships on the Great Lakes?

Mr. BLAND. I have no information to that effect.

Mr. TABER. That is what I understand.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, until I get some further information I think I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. DRIVER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (Rept. No. 1841) to accompany House Resolution 349, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 349

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 8455, a bill authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Flood Control, the bill in its entirety shall be read for amendment, following which amendments shall be in order to any paragraph of the bill, and such amendments shall be considered under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

ADJUSTMENT OF COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES IN THE CUSTOMS SERVICE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1763) to amend the act entitled "An act to adjust the compensation of certain employees in the Customs Service", approved May 29, 1928, as amended by the act of December 12, 1930.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Massachusetts should make a short explanation of this bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this Senate bill is identical with the bill (H. R. 4464) which was unanimously reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The situation, briefly, is that the customs inspectors have salary ranges from $2,100 to $3,300. From 90 to 95 percent of the inspectors are receiving the base pay of $2,100 after many years of service. The immigration inspectors have a salary range from $2,100 to $2,900. In the case of the immigration inspectors there are five grades and in the case of the customs inspectors there are six grades. The immigration inspectors have two automatic increases, from $2,100 to $2,300, and then to $2,500.

This bill originally provided for an automatic increase of three grades, but the committee eliminated the third grade and made the automatic promotions or increases identically the same in the case of customs inspectors as they are in the case of the immigration inspectors, from $2,100 to $2,300 and from $2,300 to $2,500. Above $2,500 it is discretionary with the head of the department.

Mr. SNELL. It puts them on exactly the same basis as the immigration inspectors.

Mr. McCORMACK. Absolutely the same.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether or not the Senate bill is identical with the House bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is identical.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How did that happen, in view of the fact we placed many amendments on the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. They were aware of the amendments we were going to put on, and I suppose it was one of those cases where there was a certain degree of teamwork.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. RICH. Can the gentleman tell us what this is going to cost?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. With the three-grade increase it will cost the first year about $71,000; thereafter a little over $500,000, but striking out the third grade increase there will be a reduction of about $75,000 to $100,000 a year.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman tell us where he is going to get the money to pay the bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself will collaborate in that respect in the future.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to say that if this bill has the same effect on the customs force as the immigration bill had on the immigration force, it will pay for itself many times over.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. McFARLANE. What change in the present law does this bill provide?

Mr. McCORMACK. It makes no change in the salary range, but does provide for an automatic promotion or increase in two grades, namely, from grade 1 to grade 2, and from grade 2 to grade 3, making it consistent with the situation existing with reference to the immigration inspectors.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will this bring about any additional appropriation or require an additional appropriation by the Government to pay for the increases set up in this bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say that these men are doing unusual work. Ninety-five percent of them are getting the base pay of only $2,100 a year after years of service. This bill has the unanimous report of the Ways and Means Committee, and I can assure the gentleman there is no more meritorious piece of legislation I know of along this line.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Does this include the border-patrol men?

Mr. McCORMACK. It includes the border-patrol men. It takes care of all those who come within the purview of customs inspectors.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is a fact that the customs inspectors and immigration inspectors are as a rule long-time, steady employees?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no branch of the service, so far as I know, where there are more faithful men employed than in these two branches of the Government.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. It seems absurd that during all of these years since the immigration law went into effect there should be this difference in pay for men who are engaged practically in the same identical work. They work side by side as the ship comes in as immigration inspectors and as customs inspectors, and it is no more than fair that they be treated alike.

Mr. McCORMACK. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. THOMASON. Many of these men are engaged in a most hazardous undertaking. A great many of them have been murdered along the Mexican border. I think this is a very deserving bill.

Mr. PIERCE. May I say that the poorest paid men in Portland, Oreg., are the men provided for in this bill.

Mr. PLUMLEY. The action contemplated on this bill has been too long delayed.

Mr. BACHARACH. This is a very deserving bill; it extends justice to this fine group of Federal employees and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank my good friends for their contributions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 (e) and (f) and section 4 of the act entitled "An act to adjust the compensation of certain employees in the Customs Service", approved May 29, 1928, as amended by the act of December 12, 1930, be, and they are hereby, further amended to read as follows:

"(e) Inspectors shall be divided into six grades, as follows:

"Grade 1, salary $2,100; grade 2, salary $2,300; grade 3, salary $2,500; grade 4, salary $2,700; grade 5, salary $3,000; grade 6, salary $3,300; and hereafter inspectors shall be promoted successively to grades 2 and 3, at the beginning of the next quarter following 1 year's satisfactory service (determined by a standard of efficiency which is to be defined by the Commissioner of Customs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury) in the next lower grade; not to exceed 50 percent of the force to grades 4, 5, and 6, for meritorious service after no less than 1 year's service in grades 3, 4, and 5, respectively: Provided, That promotion above grade 3 shall be at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Customs.

"(f) Station inspectors shall be divided into four grades, as follows:

"Grade 1, salary $3,000; grade 2, salary $3,200; grade 3, salary $3,400; grade 4, salary $3,600; and hereafter station inspectors shall be promoted successively to grades 2 and 3, at the beginning of the next quarter following 1 year's satisfactory service (determined by a standard of efficiency which is to be defined by the Commissioner of Customs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury) in the next lower grade; not to exceed 50 percent of the force to grade 4 for meritorious service after no less than 1 year's service in grade 3: Provided, That promotion above grade 3 shall be at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Customs."

SEC. 2. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay the rates of compensation established by this act or amendments thereto.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 4464) was laid on the table.

HIGHWAY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request made by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1374) authorizing the survey, location, and construction of a highway to connect the northwestern part of continental United States with British Columbia, Yukon Territory, and the Territory of Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?
